What is the effect of this provision? Is it not clear, unambiguous, specific, to the effect, among other things, that no person holding any office under the State of Delaware shall exercise the office of governor; or, in other words, no senator (because a senator holds an office under the State) shall be governor or shall exercise the office of governor?

A senator under the constitution of Delaware may be and is by specific provision eligible to the office of governor, but once the office of governor is accepted, its duties entered upon by such senator, he unquestionably, in virtue of section 12 of Article II of the Delaware constitution, ceases to be a senator, either absolutely or by suspension.

He ceases to be a senator for two reasons:

(1) Because section 12, Article II, of the constitution declares that no person holding office under that State (and the governor holds office under the State) shall be a senator; and

(2) Because the moment he becomes governor he necessarily—the two offices being incompatible—ceases to be senator. Otherwise, moreover, under section 5 of Article III of the constitution, he can not, if he is a senator, exercise the office of governor.

There is no conflict or repugnance between these two clauses of the constitution of the State of Delaware, unless an unreasonable construction should be given to them. Should they be construed as to make one, a declaration that the senator who happens to be speaker of the senate when the governor dies shall thereupon become governor, and the other a declaration that no senator shall ever become governor, then there would be a repugnance and a gross incongruity. Such a construction therefore should not be given if they are susceptible of another construction more reasonable and which would harmonize the two provisions.

In the judgment of your committee the two clauses taken together mean simply this:

In the event of a vacancy in the office of governor, the speaker of the senate is eligible to become governor. He is not empowered to exercise the office of governor ex officio, but he is eligible to fill the office of governor. If he takes the oath and enters upon the duties of the office of governor, then he ceases to be senator, if not absolutely, by suspension for such time as he shall exercise the office of governor, because the constitution declares, in substance and effect, that inasmuch as he then holds the office of governor, that being an office under the State, he can no longer, at least not so long as he continues to exercise the office of governor, be a senator.

The constitution of Delaware, taken as a whole, maintains with great distinctness the lines of separation between the three great branches of government—legislative, executive, and judicial—and this upon the well-recognized principle in America that legislative, executive, and judicial offices are incompatible with each other, and are not to be exercised simultaneously by the same person. While in a few instances there is slight encroachment in one sphere of these branches upon another, there is no instance in which the constitution authorizes the same individual to exercise the power of governor and that of either judge or legislator simultaneously.

This general rule and requirement of the constitution of that State as keeping distinct and separate the three branches of government are but emphasized and strengthened by the exceptions provided for in the constitution, as, for instance, it is provided that in case of a tie vote in the election of a governor by the people the two houses of the legislature are by joint ballot to choose one of the candidates to be governor.

Again, contested elections of governor are to be determined by a joint committee of one-third of all the members of each branch of the legislature.

Again, each house of the legislature is made the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

And still further, all impeachments are to be tried by the senate.

But still further, section 14 of Article III of the Delaware constitution provides, as we have seen, that—

"Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, etc., * * * the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified."

There is nothing in this clause or any other clause of the constitution which declares affirmatively or by fair inference that the person thus exercising the office of governor shall continue to exercise the office of speaker or of senator.

SOME ADDITIONAL CITATIONS FROM THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION SHOWING THE INCOMPATIBILITY OF THE OFFICES OF GOVERNOR AND STATE SENATOR.

For instance, Article VI, section 14, provides that—

"The governor may, for any reasonable cause, in his discretion, remove any of them (judges) on the address of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the general assembly."

If the governor can be governor and senator at the same time, exercising both offices simultaneously, then he may be one of the senators making up the two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the general assembly to address the governor, in virtue of which address alone he as governor acquires jurisdiction to remove a judge.

Again, Article III, section 11, provides that the governor—

"Shall, from time to time, give to the general assembly information of affairs concerning the State, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge expedient."

It would be rather an anomaly in our American system of government to permit a governor to vote in favor of measures in the senate which he as governor deemed expedient and had recommended to the senate.

But still further, Article III, section 12, provides that the governor may—

"In case of disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper, not exceeding three months."

Hence it is, if the governor can also be senator at the same time, and exercise both offices simultaneously, he is clothed with power to create a disagreement between the two houses by his vote in the senate, which fact alone would give him jurisdiction as governor to adjourn the general assembly to such time as he should think proper.

Article III, section 1, provides as follows:

"The supreme executive powers of the State shall be vested in a governor."

While, therefore, the constitution designates the speaker of the senate as an eligible person to fill the office of governor, and as the person to fill it in the event of a vacancy, it is clear he can not and does not fill the office as senator, or because of the fact that he is speaker of the senate, for the reason that the supreme executive powers of the State are by the constitution vested in a governor and not in the speaker of the senate.

Again, it is provided in Article V, section 1, that—

"All impeachments shall be tried by the senate; and when sitting for that purpose the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation to do justice according to the evidence. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of all the senators."

The governor, moreover, is, in virtue of this same article, subject to impeachment by the house of representatives. If Watson was governor on May 9, 1895, and is yet, and this is conceded, then he was and is liable to impeachment, and under the theory that he is still senator, and eligible as such to exercise the functions of senator, he would sit in judgment on himself, and by his vote might defeat a two-thirds vote in the senate and thus render a verdict of not guilty as impeached. Can such incompatibility in office receive the sanction of the Senate?

Article II, section 7, provides:

"Each house may * * * with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member."

While Article III, section 14, provides that—

"The governor shall not be removed from his office for inability, but with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the legislature."

Here again, if permitted to exercise the office of senator while exercising the office of governor, he may by his vote in the senate defeat a two-thirds vote necessary to remove him as governor for disability.

It is also provided, in Article II, section 16, of the Delaware constitution, that—

"In case of vacancy in the office of State treasurer in the recess of the general assembly, either through omission of the general assembly to appoint, or by the death, removal out of the State, resignation, or inability of the State treasurer, * * * the governor shall fill the vacancy by appointment to continue until the next meeting of the general assembly."

It is obviously obnoxious to all sense of governmental propriety to permit a governor in such case to act as a legislator, and thus by his vote, and, what is infinitely more potent, by his executive influence in the senate, defeat the election of the head of the exchequer in the State, and thus enable him to appoint a man of his sole choice to the office.

Again, Article VII, section 1, provides that—

"Certain officers * * * may be removed * * * on the address of both houses of the legislature;"

While Article VI, section 14, provides that—

"The governor may for any reasonable cause in his discretion remove any of the judges on the address of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the general assembly."

Here again the gross impropriety is made clearly apparent in recognizing a construction that will enable the governor of the State to exercise his vote and his influence as governor of the State in the State senate in making up the two-thirds vote that will enable him as governor to remove or appoint judges and a number of other officers of the State.

WHAT HAS BEEN THE USAGE, AND WHAT ARE THE PRECEDENTS.

While in the judgment of your committee there is no such uncertainty or ambiguity in the different provisions of the constitution as to require resort to usage or precedents in giving construction, it is well to consider just what the precedents and usage have been.

Since 1792 nine speakers of the senate and one speaker of the house of representatives have succeeded to the office of governor, pursuant to the provisions of section 14 of Article III of the Delaware constitutions of 1792 and 1831. Four of these were under the constitution of 1792 and six under the constitution of 1831—the present constitution.

In not one of these ten cases cited has any person who has succeeded to the governorship in the last one hundred and four years in virtue of this section 14, which, so far as this question is concerned, is substantially similar in the constitutions of 1792 and 1831, whether speaker of the senate or speaker of the house of representatives, taken any part whatever during his continuance in the governor's office in the proceedings of the senate or of the house of representatives, with the single exception of the present governor of Delaware, Mr. Watson, and whose act in thus breaking over the precedents of one hundred years' standing, has involved the people and the legislature of the State of Delaware, and the Senate of the United States in this controversy. During all this time the ten persons, including Governor Watson, thus exercising the office of governor have, during such time, drawn the governor's salary and have not drawn the salary of senator or member.

THE FACT THAT THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION PROVIDES FOR THE ELECTION OF A SPEAKER pro tempore OF THE SENATE WHEN THE SPEAKER SUCCEEDS TO THE GOVERNORSHIP DOES NOT IMPLY THAT THE LATTER CONTINUES TO BE SPEAKER OF THE SENATE.

Counsel in opposition to the claim of Mr. Du Pont contend that the use of the words, "speaker pro tempore," in the clause of the Delaware constitution which provides "That either house whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor may choose a speaker pro tempore," carries with it the implication of the contemporaneous official existence of another speaker; and it is also contended that the use of the words, "may choose," in the latter part of such clause implies simply a discretion in, and not a duty upon, the part of the senate to elect a speaker pro tempore in such a case.

Your committee can not concede either of these propositions as the result of a proper legal construction of such provision, even if the provision stood alone, and still much more difficult would it be to consent to such a construction when considered, as the clause must be, in connection with other clauses of the constitution. And as bearing upon the latter proposition it may be properly said that inasmuch as the public interests are involved, it being unquestionably for the public interest that the senate should at all times have a presiding officer, and as it is plain to all that the governor of a State, if he would properly discharge the duties of executive, could not possibly, in the very nature of things, for any part of the time, much less at all times, be present and preside over the senate, it follows, under the well-settled rule of law, that the word "may," as used in that clause, should be construed as "shall."

"The rule is," said the court in Rex v. Inhabitants of Derby (Skinner, 370), and in Rex et Regina v. Barlow (2 Salkeld, 609), "where a constitution or a statute directs the doing of a thing for the sake of justice or the public good the word 'may' is the same as the word 'shall.'"

This rule has been followed both in England and the United States without any respectable dissent.

A statute of Illinois reads as follows: "The board of supervisors may, if deemed advisable, levy a special tax," etc., and the Supreme Court of the United States, in construing this statute in the case of Supervisors v. The United States (4 Wall., 435), opinion by Mr. Justice Swayne, said:

"The conclusion to be deduced from the authorities is that where power is given to public officers in the language of the act before us, or in equivalent language, where the public interest or individual rights call for its exercise, the language though permissive in form is in fact peremptory."

In Steines v. Franklin Co. (48 Mo., 167), the court held that when a statute provides that the county court "may" submit the question to the voters, before incurring certain expenses, it must do so. In Mitchell v. Duncan (7 Flor., 13), it is held that "may" is to be construed "shall" where a statute directs the doing of a thing necessary to the ends of justice.

In People v. Brooklyn (22 Barb., 404), it is held that "may" will be construed "shall" where the good sense of the entire enactment requires it. In Mayor v. New York (3 Hill, 612), the Supreme Court said:

"Where a public body or officer has been clothed by statute with power to do an act which concerns the public interest, or the rights of third persons, the execution of the power may be insisted on as a duty, though the phraseology of the statute be permissive merely."

The theory that provision in a statute or constitution for the election of a speaker pro tempore implies the existence at the same time of another speaker is wholly dissipated by the precedents of the innumerable American instances of the election of a speaker pro tempore when there is no regular speaker. A speaker pro tempore is simply a speaker for the occasion—for the time being. There may or may not be another speaker in existence at the same time. A speaker pro tempore may be, and frequently is, chosen, and so designated and called when there is no other speaker. There is, therefore, no argument in opposition to the theory of this report to be drawn from the use in the provision quoted either of the words "may choose" or pro tempore.

To hold the same person could exercise and discharge the duties and functions of governor and State senator and speaker of the senate simultaneously would be to strike down ruthlessly the line that separates the executive and legislative branches of the government and to declare an union of these two branches in the same person. This could not be so under the well-recognized American rule, even in the absence of express prohibitory clauses; but in this case such prohibitory clauses exist, as we have shown.

The constitutional provision is not that no person holding any office under the State of Delaware shall be elected governor by the people, but that no person holding such office shall "exercise the office of governor."

It is quite immaterial how he comes to be governor, whether by election by the people or by virtue of the constitutional provision making the speaker of the senate eligible in a certain contingency; in either case it is conceded he is the governor of the State, in every conceivable sense of the term, and hence it is clear he can not, while exercising such office of governor, hold any other office under the State of Delaware. He therefore can not be a senator; he can not exercise senatorial functions while exercising executive functions.

THE DELAWARE COURT OF APPEALS.

The court of errors and appeals of the State of Delaware in the case of Rice v. Foster (4 Harrington, 485–487), drew with clearness and distinctness the line of separation between the three branches of the government established by the constitution of the State of Delaware, and among other things said:

"If we consider the peculiar situation of the United States, and go to the sources of that diversity of sentiment which pervades its inhabitants, we shall find great danger to fear that the same causes shall terminate here in the same fatal effects which they produced in those republics. To guard against these dangers and the evil tendencies of a democracy, our republican Government was instituted by the consent of the people. The characteristic which distinguishes it from the miscalled republics of ancient and modern times is that none of the powers of sovereignty are exercised by the people, but all of them by separate, coordinate branches of government in whom those powers are vested by the Constitution. These coordinate branches are intended to operate as balances, checks, and restraints, not only upon each other, but upon the people themselves; to guard them against their own rash-ness, precipitancy, and misguided zeal, and to protect the minority against the injustice of the majority. * * *

"The legislative, executive, and judicial powers compose the sovereign power of a State. The people of the State of Delaware have vested the legislative power in a general assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives; the supreme executive powers of the State in a governor; and the judicial power in the several courts mentioned in the sixth article. The sovereign power, therefore, of this State resides with the legislative, executive, and judicial departments. Having thus transferred the sovereign power, the people can not resume or exercise any portion of it. To do so would be an infraction of the constitution, and a dissolution of the government. Nor can they interfere with the exercise of any part of the sovereign power, except by petition, remonstrance, or address. They have the power to change or alter the constitution; but this can be done only in the mode prescribed by the instrument itself. The attempt to do so in any other mode is revolutionary. And although the people have the power, in conformity with its provisions, to alter the constitution, under no circumstances can they, so long as the Constitution of the United States remains the paramount law of the land, establish a democracy, or any other than a republican form of government. It is equally clear that neither the legislative, executive, nor judicial department, separately, nor all combined, can devolve on the people the exercise of any part of the sovereign power with which each is invested. The assumption of a power to do so would be usurpation. The department arrogating it would elevate itself above the constitution, overturn the foundation on which its own foundation rests, demolish the whole frame and texture of our republican form of government, and prostrate everything to the worst species of tyranny and despotism, the ever-varying will of an irresponsible multitude."

IT IS CONCEDED WATSON WAS GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF DELAWARE MAY 9, 1895, AND HAD BEEN SINCE APRIL 9, 1895, IN THE FULL SENSE OF THAT TERM.

It is not denied but conceded by counsel, in opposition to the claim of Mr. Du Pont, that William T. Watson was, on the 9th day of May, 1895, and had been since April 9, 1895, governor of the State. In their able and elaborate brief filed in the case (p. 30), in a reference to certain statements in the brief of counsel for Mr. Du Pont, we find the following:

"Thus counsel devote thirty pages of their brief (pp. 34–63) to a demonstration of the fact that the speaker of the senate, in case of a vacancy in the office of governor, becomes governor of the State. The matter counsel present on this head attests their industry and may interest the curious, but it supports a proposition which we do not contest."

It is conceded, therefore, by those opposing the claim of Mr. Du Pont, that Mr. Watson, on his inauguration as governor, became the governor of the State. He was not merely to exercise the office of governor ex officio. Not merely to act as governor in the manner the President pro tempore of the United States Senate would have acted in the case of vacancies in the offices of President and Vice-President under the act of 1792. The distinction is this: If an office be appendant, as the expression is in 1 Leon, 321, to another office, the determination of the first office will determine the second. This is where a person holding any office is ex officio entitled to perform the functions of some other office, as was the case perhaps of President pro tempore of the United States Senate under the act of 1792. In such case the right to exercise the functions of the second office ceases upon the determination of the office held in virtue of which he exercises such ex officio functions of the second office.

If however, the nomination or appointment to an office, as it is in the case under consideration by descriptio personam, of one who holds another office by the title of which he is described, and who, on a contingency, is to enter and fill another office, he answering the description at the time the contingency arises, designates him as the person who is to fill the office, and when, as thus designated, he enters into the office, he holds it in his natural and not in his official capacity. And hence in this case of Watson, even in the absence of any affirmative constitutional declaration, he would continue to hold the office of governor—if the term continued—after his term of senator had expired, his office of governor not being appendant to that of senator. But in this case the Delaware constitution, recognizing this principle, declares, in section 14, Article III, not that he shall exercise the office of governor so long as his term of senator shall continue, but "until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified." (Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Oregon, 394.)

GOVERNOR WATSON DID NOT RESUME THE CHAIR OF SPEAKER OF THE SENATE ABOUT 12 M., MAY 9, 1895, AFTER A CONTINUED ABSENCE OF A MONTH FROM DATE OF HIS INAUGURATION AS GOVERNOR, ON APRIL 9, 1895, AS THE RESULT OF A sense of public duty OR believing he had any right to do so, BUT AS AN AFTERTHOUGHT AND AS the result of pressure from political associates and of a partisan conspiracy, AND FOR THE sole PURPOSE OF DEFEATING THE ELECTION OF A REPUBLICAN UNITED STATES SENATOR.

Senator John M. C. Moore, in his affidavit of January 14, 1896 (see appendix), states that Governor Watson said to him in the senate chamber on May 9, 1895, shortly before he resumed the speaker's chair:

"Mr. Moore, I want to talk with you. I believe you will tell me just as it is. Is Mr. Massey out of this thing?" (Mr. Massey was one of the Republican candidates being voted for for United States Senator.) Senator Moore states he said to him in reply: "Governor, we are not going to cast another ballot for Mr. Massey nor no other who has been balloted for except Henry A. Du Pont. He will be elected on first ballot in the joint session," to which the governor replied to me: 'If that be the case, I shall take my seat.' Against this I remonstrated, and said to him: 'Governor, I hope you will not do it; I think too much of you as a man for you to do it.' That was the last of our conversation. He made no reply to my remonstrance. He arose and went over to the desk of George Fisher Pierce, a senator and one of my colleagues from Sussex County, where I saw him take a seat near Senator Pierce."

Senator George Fisher Pierce in his affidavit filed herein, of date January 13, 1896 (see appendix), says:

"About ten minutes before the hour of noon, May 9, 1895, William T. Watson, governor of the State of Delaware, being in the chamber (the senate being presided over by William T. Records, its speaker), came and took a seat alongside of this deponent and said to him: "I am going into the joint assembly and vote for a Senator." This deponent said: "You are going to do what?" He answered: "I am going to preside over the joint assembly to-day and vote for a United States Senator." This deponent then said: "Do you think that is right?" Governor Watson answered: "No, I do not, but my party has overruled me." This deponent answered: "Then, I suppose, there is nothing I can say now that would change your mind;" to which Watson replied, "No, my mind is fully made up."

J. S. Prettyman, jr., in his affidavit filed herein, dated January 14, 1896 (see appendix), after reciting that he met and walked with Governor Watson from the railroad station at Milford, Del., into the center of the town, a distance of about one-quarter of a mile, about 6.45 o'clock p. m., May 9, 1895, the day the Delaware legislature adjourned, says: "During this walk Governor Watson said to me that when he went to Dover on the morning of that day he did not expect to preside as speaker of the senate, believing that he did not have a legal right to act as governor and senator. After reaching Dover, in response to the influence of party leaders, he reversed this decision and consented to enter the senate and claim his rights as speaker. In doing this he said he put aside his own judgment, and acted upon the judgment of those whom he regarded as well qualified to advise." This witness further states in this affidavit that on the Friday following the above conversation he had another conversation with Governor Watson, when the latter, becoming somewhat excited, drew from his pocket a paper, and handed it to witness, saying, "Read this!" Deponent says: "I took the paper and read the writing through. It was an agreement between Robert J. Hanby, Newall Ball, Charles Moore, and John Robbins, members of the Delaware legislature, signed with their names, and to the effect that they would vote for J. Edward Addicks for United States Senator, and that they would not vote for anyone else, even though no Senator should be elected. As I passed the paper back to the governor, he said: 'Wouldn't you have acted as I did, under such circumstances?' I evaded his question by saying, 'Are the signatures genuine?' and he replied, 'Of course they are; look again;' and he passed the paper to me for the second time. I read it through again, and examined the signatures, remarking that I was not familiar with the autographs of these men, but that the names were in different handwritings. He said he was not familiar with the autographs of the men, but that he was sure the names were genuine. The governor also said that this agreement was brought to him to induce him to take part in the last joint assembly of the legislature, and, influenced by it, through the advice of others, he consented to preside as speaker of that body, and did so preside on the day mentioned."

He further said that "the Republicans had every opportunity to elect a Senator, and had failed to do so, and of course he preferred that the Democratic party should have a representative in the United States Senate from Delaware, rather than the Republican party."

Frank Reedy, in his affidavit of date January 23, 1896, filed herein (see appendix), states that he had a similar conversation with Governor Watson on May 10, 1895, in which he showed him the same or a similar paper.

From the foregoing uncontradicted testimony it is clearly evident Governor Watson did not reenter the speaker's chair and the joint assembly May 9, 1895, from any sense of public duty, or in the belief that he had any legal right to do so, but rather in pursuance of a partisan conspiracy and for the sole purpose of defeating the election of a Republican to the United States Senate."

IT IS CONCEDED A CERTIFICATE OF DUPONT'S ELECTION FROM THE GOVERNOR OF DELAWARE IS NOT AN ESSENTIAL REQUISITE.

Mr. Du Pont's election is not certified by William T. Watson, then holding the office of governor of the State of Delaware, but is certified to by Henry H. McMullen, speaker of the house of representatives, and attested by Edgar T. Hastings, clerk of the house of representatives. (See Senate Ex. Doc. No. 9, first session Fifty-fourth Congress.)

It is conceded, however, and, in fact, in view of the precedents, could not well be contested by those opposing the claim of Mr. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate, that his title to such seat is not impaired by the fact that he fails to present a certificate of election from Mr. Watson, the then governor of the State, as evidence of his election, provided he received a majority of the legal votes cast in the joint assembly. (See argument in opposition to Mr. Du Pont's claim, p. 5.)

THE UNION OF EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE FUNCTIONS IS absolutism OR despotism ON THE ONE HAND AND slavery ON THE OTHER, WHETHER UNITED IN ONE MAN OR THE MANY.

Dr. Lieber, in his work on Civil Liberty and Self-Government, says:

"A principle and guaranty of liberty, so acknowledged and common with the Anglican people that few think of its magnitude, yet of really organic and fundamental importance, is the division of government into three distinct functions, or rather the keeping of these functions clearly apart.

"It is, as has been mentioned, one of the greatest political blessings of England that from a very early period her courts of justice were not occupied with 'administrative business,' for instance, the collection of taxes, and that her Parliament became the exclusive legislature, while the Parliaments of France united a judicial, legislative, and administrative character. The union of these functions is absolutism or despotism on the one hand and slavery on the other, no matter in whom they are united, whether in one despot or in many, or in the multitude, as in Athens after the time of Cleon the tanner. The English political philosophers have pointed out long ago the necessity of keeping the three powers separate in a 'constitutional' government. Those, however, who have no other definition of liberty than that it is equality, discard this division, except, indeed, so far as the mere convenience of transacting business would require." (Pages 154, 155.)

MR. WEBSTER'S VIEWS ON MAINTAINING CONSTITUTIONAL RESTRAINTS AND JUST DIVISIONS OF POLITICAL POWER.

Counsel for Mr. Du Pont, in their brief, quote the following statement from a speech of Mr. Webster in the Senate of the United States, May 7, 1834, on the "Presidential protest," which your committee deem worthy of consideration in connection with the questions involved in this case:

"The first object of a free people is the preservation of their liberty; and liberty is only to be preserved by maintaining constitutional restraints and just divisions of political power. Nothing is more deceptive or more dangerous than the pretense of a desire to simplify government. The simplest governments are despotisms; the next simplest, limited monarchies; but all republics, all governments of law, must impose numerous limitations and qualifications of authority and give many positive and many qualified rights. In other words, they must be subject to rule and regulation. This is the very essence of free political institutions.

"The spirit of liberty is, indeed, a bold and fearless spirit; but it is also a sharp-sighted spirit; it is a cautious, sagacious, discriminating, far-seeing intelligence; it is jealous of encroachment, jealous of power, jealous of man. It demands checks; it seeks for guards; it insists on securities; it entrenches itself behind strong defenses, and fortifies itself with all possible care against the assaults of ambition and passion. It does not trust the amiable weaknesses of human nature, and therefore it will not permit power to overstep its prescribed limits, though benevolence, good intent, and patriotic purpose come along with it. Neither does it satisfy itself with flashy and temporary resistance to illegal authority. Far otherwise. It seeks for duration and permanence. It looks before and after; and, building on the experience of ages that are past, it labors diligently for the benefit of ages to come. This is the nature of constitutional liberty; and this is our liberty, if we will rightly understand and preserve it. Every free government is necessarily complicated, because all governments establish restraints, as well on the power of government itself as on that of individuals. If we will abolish the distinction of branches and have but one branch; if we will abolish jury trials and leave all to the judge; if we will then ordain that the legislator himself shall be that judge, and if we will place the executive power in the same hands, we may readily simplify government. We may easily bring it to the simplest of all forms—a pure despotism. But a separation of departments, so far as practicable, and the preservation of clear lines of division between them, is the fundamental idea in the creation of all our constitutions; and doubtless the continuance of regulated liberty depends on maintaining these boundaries." (Works of Daniel Webster, Vol. IV, p. 122.)

And still further:

"Mr. President, the contest for ages has been to rescue liberty from the grasp of executive power. Whoever has engaged in her sacred cause, from the days of the downfall of those great aristocracies which had stood between the king and the people to the time of our own independence, has struggled for the accomplishment of that single object. On the long list of the champions of human freedom there is not one name dimmed by the reproach of advocating the extension of executive authority; on the contrary, the uniform and steady purpose of all such champions has been to limit and restrain it. To this end the spirit of liberty, growing more and more enlightened and more and more vigorous from age to age, has been battering for centuries against the solid butments of the feudal system. To this end all that could be gained from the imprudence, snatched from the weakness, or wrung from the necessities of crowned heads has been carefully gathered up, secured, and hoarded, as the rich treasures, the very jewels of liberty.

"To this end popular and representative right has kept up its warfare against prerogative with various success; sometimes writing the history of a whole age in blood, sometimes witnessing the martyrdom of Sidneys and Russells, often baffled and repulsed, but still gaining on the whole, and holding what it gained with a grasp which nothing but the complete extinction of its own being could compel it to relinquish. At length the great conquest over executive power in the leading western states of Europe has been accomplished. The feudal system, like other stupendous fabrics of past ages, is known only by the rubbish which it has left behind it. Crowned heads have been compelled to submit to the restraints of law, and the people, with that intelligence and that spirit which make their voices resistless, have been able to say to prerogative, "Thus far shalt thou come, and no farther." I need hardly say, sir, that into the full enjoyment of all which Europe has reached only through such slow and painful steps we sprang at once by the Declaration of Independence and by the establishment of free representative governments; governments borrowing more or less from the models of other free states, but strengthened, secured, improved in their symmetry and deepened in their foundation by those great men of our own country whose names will be as familiar to future times as if they were written on the arch of the sky.

"Through all this history of the contest for liberty executive power has been regarded as a lion which must be caged. So far from being the object of enlightened popular trust, so far from being considered the natural protector of popular right, it has been dreaded, uniformly always dreaded, as the great source of its danger.

"And now, sir, who is he, so ignorant of the history of liberty, at home and abroad; who is he, yet dwelling in his contemplations among the principles and dogmas of the Middle Ages; who is he, from whose bosom all original infusion of American spirit has become so entirely evaporated and exhaled that he shall put into the mouth of the President of the United States the doctrine that the defence of liberty naturally results to executive power and is its peculiar duty? Who is he that, generous and confiding toward power where it is most dangerous, and jealous only of those who can restrain it; who is he that, reversing the order of the state and upheaving the base, would poise the pyramid of the political system upon its apex? Who is he that, overlooking with contempt the guardianship of the representatives of the people, and with equal contempt the higher guardianship of the people themselves; who is he that declares to us, through the President's lips, that the security for freedom rests in executive authority? Who is he that belies the blood and libels the fame of his own ancestors by declaring that they, with solemnity of form and force of manner, have invoked the executive power to come to the protection of liberty? Who is he that thus charges them with the insanity or the recklessness of putting the amb beneath the lion's paw? No, sir. No, sir. Our security is in our watchfulness of executive power. It was the constitution of this department which was infinitely the most difficult part in the great work of creating our present Government. To give to the executive department such power as should make it useful and yet not such as should render it dangerous; to make it efficient, independent, and strong, and yet to prevent it from sweeping away everything by its union of military and civil authority; by the influence of patronage, and office, and favor; this, indeed, was difficult. They who had the work to do saw the difficulty, and we see it; and if we would maintain our system we shall act wisely to that end by preserving every restraint and every guard which the Constitution has provided. And when we and those who come after us have done all that we can do, and all that they can do, it will be well for us and for them if some popular executive, by the power of patronage and party, and the power, too, of that very popularity, shall not hereafter prove an overmatch for all other branches of the Government." (Works of Daniel Webster, Vol. IV, pp. 133, 134, 135.)

Montesquieu in his "Spirit of Laws," volume 1, page 152, says:

"When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person, or in the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty; because apprehensions may arise lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws, to execute them in a tyrannical manner.

"Again, there is no liberty if the judiciary power be not separated from the legislative and executive. Were it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control, for the judge would be then the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with violence and oppression.

"There would be an end of everything were the same man or the same body, whether of the nobles or of the people, to exercise those three powers—that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals."

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

(1) It is a well-settled rule of the common law that the same person shall not exercise simultaneously two incompatible offices; and further, the acceptance of one is ipso facto a resignation of the other.

(2) Under the American system executive and legislative offices are incompatible, and the same person can not exercise both simultaneously in the absence of either express or clearly implied statutory or constitutional authority; and the acceptance of the second is ipso facto a resignation of the first.

(3) There is no express or implied authority in the constitution of the State of Delaware for the simultaneous exercise by the same person of the offices of governor and senator; on the contrary, such constitution expressly interdicts such exercise of those two offices.

(4) Whether or not the offices of State senator and speaker of the senate became absolutely vacant when Speaker Watson took the oath of office, was inaugurated governor of the State, and entered upon the exercise of that office, there can be no doubt, on a fair construction of the several constitutional provisions of the State of Delaware, that his right to exercise the office of senator or speaker of the senate, or any of the functions connected therewith while he continued to hold and exercise the office of governor, was held in abeyance and absolutely suspended.

(5) The theory that Mr. Watson can exercise the office of governor of the State and State senator simultaneously, involves innumerable constitutional repugnancies, perplexing difficulties, and endless absurdities; while the opposite theory reconciles and harmonizes all the provisions of the Delaware constitution relating to the subject under consideration.

(6) That Governor Watson's exercise of the office of senator in the joint assembly on the 9th day of May, 1895, and of the office of president of such joint assembly was illegal, and his vote therein for United States Senator a nullity.

In determining the above propositions, your committee reach the further following conclusions:

(7) In determining the question as to whether the Delaware senate on May 9, 1895, acted upon or judged, either actually or constructively, the qualifications of Governor Watson to a seat in the senate, the journal entries of the proceedings of the Delaware senate of that date are conclusive as to the number and names of senators present, the motions submitted, the votes cast, and of all the proceedings had, and can not be contradicted by ex parte affidavits.

(8) The right which undoubtedly belongs exclusively to the Delaware senate to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of members, does not vest in such senate any such exclusive right as would conclude the Senate of the United States to determine by construction whether the constitution of the State of Delaware does or does not recognize a certain seat in the senate as subject to occupation; nor does it include the power to admit members to seats not recognized by the constitution of the State as subject to occupation, or, if subject to occupation, to fill them in a manner or by a person which the State constitution forbids.

(9) Your committee, applying these rules, find as a matter of fact the Delaware

State senate never judged of the qualifications of Governor Watson to a seat in the senate, either on the 9th day of May, 1895, or at any other time subsequent to the date of his inauguration as governor.

(10) That on May 9, 1895, the date on which Mr. Du Pont claims to have been elected, the legislature of the State of Delaware consisted of but 29 members; there were in the joint assembly on that date but 29 members of such legislature entitled to seats in such joint assembly and entitled to be counted and vote therein. As Mr. Du Pont received 15 votes, being a majority of the whole number entitled to be cast in such joint assembly, and a majority of all the legal votes cast therein, he was legally elected Senator from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895, and is entitled to be seated.

(11) The fact that such election is not certified by the governor of the State in pursuance of the statute on that subject, does not invalidate such election in any respect.

Your committee, therefore, report to the Senate the following resolution and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. Turpie, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following views of the minority in the case of Henry A. Du Pont:

The legislature of the State of Delaware is composed of 30 members—9 senators and 21 representatives. The senators are elected for four years, the representatives for two years.

A regular biennial session of the general assembly of said State began, in pursuance of law, on the first Tuesday in January, 1895, upon which devolved the election of the United States Senator to fill a vacancy made by the expiry of the term of Hon. Anthony Higgins, upon which day aforesaid all the members of each house appeared, and both houses were duly organized for the transaction of business.

Among the members of the senate so appearing was the Hon. William T. Watson, who had been duly elected, at the general election held in November, 1892, a senator from the county of Kent, in said State, for the term of four years, who was duly sworn and admitted to a seat in the senate on the last day aforesaid, and was subsequently, on the same day, chosen speaker of the senate.

Afterwards, upon April 9, 1895, the legislature having been officially informed of the death of the Hon. Joshua H. Marvil, governor of Delaware, the speaker of the senate, upon whom devolved, under the constitution, the duty "to exercise the office of governor" until a governor should be elected by the people, was in open senate, and in the public session thereof, sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, of the State of Delaware, and to perform "the duties of the office of governor with fidelity."

On the same day, immediately thereafter, the senate elected the Hon. William T. Records, a senator from the county of Sussex, as speaker of the senate pro tempore, in accordance with the provision of the constitution of the State, "Each house whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor may choose a speaker pro tempore." The speaker pro tempore thus chosen presided while and whenever the speaker of the senate was absent during the remainder of the session.

The members of the two houses so organized met in joint convention on the second Tuesday after their organization, pursuant to the law of Congress July 25, 1866, to elect a Senator of the United States. Two ballots were taken on that day, and at the close of each the announcement was made by the speaker of the senate, who acted as president of the joint convention, and who continued so to act whenever he was present at the sessions of the same, "that no person having received a majority of all the votes cast for United States Senator, there was no election."

On each succeeding day of the session, except Sundays, the members of the two houses met in joint convention, voted for United States Senator, up to and including the 9th day of May, 1895, which was the last day of the session.

On this last day of the session 28 ballots were taken for United States Senator, and at the close of each ballot the same result of no election, for the same reason, was declared in the same words as those above quoted.

The last ballot cast for United States Senator, on the last day of the session aforesaid, is recorded as follows:

	Votes.
For J. Edward Addicks	4
For E. W. Tunnell	1
For H. A. Du Pont	15
For Ed. Ridgley	10

It shows that there were 30 votes cast, and of these votes Mr. Du Pont received 15, an equal number of votes were cast for other persons—for Mr. Addicks 4, for Mr. Tunnell 1, and for Mr. Ridgley 10.

Thereupon the speaker of the senate declared no person having received a majority of all the votes cast for United States Senator, there was no election, and the two houses adjourned sine die.

In this opinion, action, and decision of the joint convention, that there was no election, we concur. It is not conceived how 15 can be a majority of 30.

That a majority of all the members of the legislature is necessary to a choice when all are present and voting we think is clear, not only from the act of July 25, 1866, but from the language of the Constitution itself upon this subject, prescribing that "two Senators from each State shall be chosen by the legislature." Such a choice is made by preference and is only indicated by a number of votes greater than that cast for all or any others voted for.

OBJECTIONS TO THE VALIDITY OF THE ACTION AND VOTE OF THE SPEAKER OF THE SENATE.

The record shows that Hon. Mr. Watson, the speaker of the senate, appeared, qualified, and took his seat in the senate on the first day of the session, without protest or objection, and continued to act as a senator and as speaker of the senate; whenever he was present, up to the time of the final adjournment.

The action of the senate in allowing him to be qualified and seated as a senator from the county of Kent was in effect an adjudication of the most public and solemn character that he was a senator, a member of the senate, and entitled to act as such. Such adjudication remains unchanged. There are only three ways in which he could lose or be deprived of his right to vote or act as a senator, and, by consequence, of his right to vote and act as a member of the joint convention. One of these is the act of God—death; the second is by his own act—resignation; the third is by the action of the senate adjudging the vacation of his seat, either by ouster or expulsion, for such causes as the senate of the State of Delaware might adjudge sufficient to disqualify him as a senator. There has been neither death, resignation, nor adverse adjudication in his case, and he remains in all respects a senator, as fully qualified and as lawfully entitled to act as such as upon the day when he first appeared and was sworn as a senator.

It is claimed that when the exercise of the office of governor devolved upon him as speaker of the senate, that, ipso facto, he lost the office and rights of such senator. That these dual functions are incompatible.

We think it clear, from the language of the constitution of the State of Delaware, that these dual functions are expressly made compatible and competent by the terms of that instrument. We do not think incompatibility, in legal terms or effect, such as to oust a man from one office and to confer upon him another, is to be derived from general considerations resting in nubibus; but that such incompatibility must be plainly inferred from the text of the constitution or statutes of the State or Government to be affected thereby.

Besides this, nothing is more familiar to us in American legislation than the enactment of statutes in contravention of the common law. Statutes in aid of the common law are quite frequent, but we think that statutes in contravention thereof are more numerous.

It was formerly held at common law that one could not be a witness in any case where he had a pecuniary interest. The common law held that there was a sharp and neutral incompatibility, founded upon grounds of the highest public policy, between the two positions of a witness in a cause and an interested party therein. In direct contradiction to this principle, and in complete neutralization of its effects, statutes now provide that parties in suits, and all others, notwithstanding their interest therein, may testify as witnesses. So that the question is not what may be incompatible at common law, but what is the statute in any given case. The statute takes the place of the common law and abrogates it.

The constitution of the State of Delaware is a statute of the highest character, enacted by the people themselves.

It was entirely competent for the makers of that instrument, and for the people in its adoption, to abrogate any common law of incompatibility, if such existed, and to make it competent that the speaker of the senate should, notwithstanding any natural or common-law incompatibility, take upon himself for the time "the exercise of the office of governor," still retaining his office of senator and speaker. In any conceivable case the common law must yield to the statute—much more must it give way to a constitutional enactment.

The constitution of Delaware does not provide that the speaker of the senate, on the death of the governor, shall either be or become governor, but only that such speaker "shall exercise the office of governor." It does not provide that he shall, in such an event, cease to be speaker, or cease to be senator, or that a vacancy exists in either position; and we do not think that we can amend the constitution of a State by the process of an argument in a contested seat here.

Not only is no vacancy created in such instance by the devolution of "the exercise of the office of governor" upon the speaker of the senate, but the constitution of the State expressly provides that "each house, whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor, may choose a speaker pro tempore"—that is, a temporary speaker to preside in the room of the permanent speaker when he may be absent, thus plainly implying that there is no vacancy in the office of speaker, and that there is no vacancy in the office of senator or representative (as no one could be speaker except a member of one of the houses) by this devolution of the exercise of the office of governor.

In section 14 of the constitution, where it is provided that the speaker of the house "shall exercise the office of governor" if there be no speaker of the senate, the distinction between the speaker of either house exercising the office of governor, and the governor as such, is very clearly implied in the phrase, "until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified." And in the same section, afterwards, the person elected governor is distinguished from the temporary occupant exercising the office of governor by the recurrence three times of the phrase, "the person who exercises the office of governor." And when the contingency arises of a vacancy in the office of governor, and there be no other person who can exercise the office of governor within the provisions of the constitution, the general assembly shall proceed to elect "a person to exercise the office of governor until a governor elected by the people shall be qualified."

This person so chosen is not called governor, but a "person to exercise the office of governor."

And when, in the case of a contested election, someone is to be designated to perform gubernatorial duties, it is provided "that the speaker of the senate or the speaker of the house who may then be in the exercise of executive authority" shall continue therein until a determination of the contest. It is manifestly expressed that the person exercising the executive authority is not the governor, but that he is, and remains, and must continue to be speaker of the senate, or speaker of the house, notwithstanding the fact that the "exercise of the office of governor" may for the time being devolve upon him.

If this interpretation of the constitution of the State were at all doubtful, it is abundantly sustained by practical, contemporaneous, and continuous construction in the actual administration of the government of Delaware. Three persons, upon each of whom at different times devolved, under this clause, the exercise of the office of governor (John Sykes, Jacob Stout, and Caleb Rodney), speakers of the senate, who temporarily exercised the executive authority as such speakers, after they had exercised the office of governor ad interim, returned to the senate and served out the terms for which they had been elected as senators in the senate. No suggestion was made that they had vacated their office as senators or had become governors of the State of Delaware by reason of the temporary exercise of executive duties imposed upon them by section 14, article 3, of the constitution.

As to the provisions of section 2, article 12, of the constitution, and section 5 of article 3, we think there is no real conflict between them and the other provisions cited, as to the succession of the executive authority.

One of the main provisions in the constitution of Delaware, declared and provided for by three fundamental clauses in the instrument, is that in certain contingencies the speaker of the senate "shall exercise the office of governor" for the time being therein designated. To say that a provision that no senator shall be governor, or that no governor shall be senator at the same time is not in any conflict with the provisions for the temporary exercise of the executive authority by the speakers of either house.

Section 12 of article 2 and section 5 of article 3 evidently relate to the regular elective term of the offices therein named, and provide that such official terms of these positions shall not be held by the same person at the same time. They do not at all relate to casual vacancies in the executive office or to the constitutional means of supplying them. As these two sections contain no allusion to temporary vacancies, so they are not and can not be in conflict with the provisions of the instrument elsewhere appearing intended to provide for such contingencies.

Besides, we understand it to be well-settled law that the different clauses of a written instrument, even those of an ordinary contract, must be always construed so as to be consistent with each other. With such a grave public State paper as the constitution of Delaware the rule is yet more imperative. We submit, therefore, that a proposed construction of this constitution which makes a direct and unavoidable conflict and contradiction between the clauses and sections of the same must be false and unfounded.

It is not to be presumed, and indeed it is in our view preposterous, that the people of that State should have placed in their organic law contradictory provisions on any subject.

WHO ARE LAWFUL JUDGES OF QUALIFICATIONS AND INCOMPATIBILITY.

The senate of the State of Delaware is made by law the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. In the case presented by Mr. Du Pont against the legality of the vote of Mr. Speaker Watson as a member of the joint convention, no question is made as to the election and return of Mr. Watson as a senator. The whole case rests upon the question of his qualifications. And even upon the subject of qualification, it is not denied that at the time he took his seat in the senate, he was fully and legally qualified to act and vote therein; but it is earnestly insisted that after he had taken his seat, he did and performed certain acts and duties which deprived him of his legal qualifications, and had rendered him unqualified, disqualified, and incompetent to vote or act as a member of the senate or of the joint convention.

This position of the claimant, Mr. Du Pont, raises the most serious question in this case, which is, as to who can lawfully decide and determine as to whether or not the acts of Mr. Speaker Watson referred to destroyed or suspended his qualifications as a senator, and by consequence as a member of the joint convention.

We think that the senate of the State of Delaware, whereof he was a member, is the sole tribunal which could either hear or determine lawfully these objections to the qualifications of Senator Watson.

It is charged that he was absent from the senate from the 9th day of April, 1895, until the day of the joint convention. If he were absent in discharge of any duties, executive or official by the law of Delaware, incompatible with the office of senator, or if his absence was contumacious and perverse, this might have constituted a cause for the judgment of the State senate for his ouster from the senate, his supension as a senator, or the vacation of his seat. If, whether present or absent, during his term, he had committed any act in violation of the laws and constitution of his State, or of the United States, this might have constituted a cause for the judgment of the State senate against him for his suspension or for his expulsion; the vacation of his seat and office, and for the issuing of a writ of election for the choice of his successor as senator from the county of Kent.

Causes for judgment of suspension, ouster, vacation, or expulsion against a sitting member or senator are not, however well founded, judgments. They have legally none of the force or effect of judgments or adjudications. There is no judgment or adjudication shown in the record or journal of the senate of Delaware on any of these objections to the qualifications of Mr. Watson as a member of that body.

If these charges or objections to his qualifications had been presented and heard in the State senate and judgment of suspension, ouster, and vacation had been rendered against him the case of Mr. Du Pont might have been fully made out. This Senate and court of the United States would have been bound thereby. If such a hearing had terminated in his favor the same result would have followed. The judgment of the State senate is a finality.

As there was no hearing or judgment in respect to such charges in the State senate the seat and office of Senator Watson remains undisturbed and unaffected thereby.

Because the State senate did not pass upon these charges or objections to the qualifications of their fellow-member we in this body are not by law in any way authorized to take jurisdiction. We have no authority to originate, hear, or determine any objections to the qualifications of those who acted and voted as members of the senate of the State, or to revise or review their action or nonaction in the premises.

These considerations rest upon the great doctrine of the due distribution of powers, and of the distinctive provinces of independent powers, to which the claimant in this case has so strongly appealed, and which we now justly invoke as showing the error of his position.

The constitution of Delaware, like that of the other States, and of the United States, declares that "each house shall judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

Each House of Congress is a court in such cases for the judgment of its own members, but neither is a court or can be in any form a tribunal to judge of the qualifications of any member of the State legislature.

It would be just as reasonable and lawful that the State senate of Delaware should adjudge and decide a contested seat in this body from that State as that we should decide here a contested seat in the senate there.

Especially is this the law when it is sought by a kind of ex post facto sentence to unseat by a judgment of the United States Senate a member of the State senate of Delaware after he has acted and voted there.

The Senate of the United States has often considered and decided the question as to which of two bodies claiming to be the legislature of a State is a lawful legislature entitled to hold a joint convention for the election of a United States Senator. The members of this body, sitting as a court, as we are now sitting, has frequently decided as to two contesting branches of a legislature which was the lawful senate or house of the general assembly, but the Senate has always declined to take jurisdiction or to adjudicate the title of any individual member of the State legislature who acted and voted as such in the joint convention.

"In the opinion of your committee it is not competent for the Senate to inquire as to the right of individual members to sit in a legislature which is conceded to have a quorum in both houses of legally elected members. But, undoubtedly, the Senate must always inquire whether the body which pretended to elect the Senator was the legislature of the State or not, because a Senator can only be elected by the legislature of a State."

And the minority opinion in the same case, upon the same point, is as follows:

"Each house of the general assembly of Alabama is the exclusive judge of the election returns and qualifications of its members, and any inquiry into such question by the Senate of the United States would be as unwarranted by precedent as it would prove dangerous in practice.

"In a contest like the one now under consideration between two persons elected to the Senate by different bodies, each claiming to be the legislature of the State, the Senate may look into the constitution and laws of the State to ascertain which of the two bodies, if either, has been organized in conformity with their provisions, but it can not rightfully inquire into the election returns and qualifications of the members of either body.

"If the Senate could enter upon such inquiry, where would be the limitation upon its prerogatives? Could it not as legitimately inquire into the manner in which any election officer has performed the duties of his office, and even into the qualification of the electors who had voted for members of the State legislature?

"The undersigned would not restrict the Senate in its constitutional right to judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members, but would regret its assumption of powers belonging exclusively to the two houses of the State legislature." (Sykes v. Spencer, p. 618.)

The case of Sykes against Spencer was heard and determined in 1873 and the principle thus decided has been constantly adhered to since that time. In that case no action or adjudication had taken place upon the contested cases of individual members subsequent to their admission, and the decision of the minority and majority upon this point rests upon the action and recognition of persons voting in the joint convention as members of either the senate or house, and consequently of the legislature.

In the case of David Turpie, decided in May, 1888, the same point is decided where there had been an adjudication by the Indiana State senate unseating one of its members and seating a contestant. This Senate decided that it would not revise such adjudication—that it would not inquire into the motives or purposes of the adjudication.

"The committee are of the opinion that the facts offered, if proved, will not warrant the Senate in declaring the sitting member not entitled to his seat. There can be no doubt that the body in question was the constitutional senate of Indiana.

"The journals of both houses of the legislature of the State have been submitted to us. It appears that the body was recognized as the senate by the governor and by the house of representatives. Statutes to which its constitutional assent was necessary were enacted and have become part of the law of the State.

"We also think that the judgment of the senate of Indiana as to the title of Messrs. Branahan and McDonald, the two members in question, to their seats is binding upon the Senate of the United States. This body is made by the Constitution the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members. The senate of Indiana is likewise the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members. We must determine all questions arising out of the proceedings of the electors. But who sustain the characters of electors is to be determined by the legislative body of the State.

"We can not inquire into the motives which control its judgment. In rendering that judgment, whether it shall give a hearing to parties, permit debate, examine witnesses, act upon evidence or without evidence, are matters within its own discretion. If that discretion were exercised in the manner charged by the remonstrance, a majority think that a public crime was committed, for which the offenders are responsible to the people of Indiana. But we can not try the question." (Case of David Turpie, p. 719.)

It is thus made very plain that the common law of the United States Senate is well settled. When the title of an individual member of the legislature who has once been seated has been determined by a subsequent adjudication of the house to which he belongs, such judgment will not be here disturbed or inquired into. And if there has been no such subsequent adjudication by the State senate or house, the title of the senator or representative rests upon the record of his original credentials and qualifications as a member, and will not here be questioned.

When a person claiming to be a member of the legislative body presents his credentials of election, and the record shows that he was thereupon admitted to a seat and sworn in as a member of the same, his title to the seat is absolute, unquestioned, and so continues until the house of which he is a member has adjudicated that he is not entitled to his seat, or that some other person is entitled thereto; such is the decision of the Senate in the following case:

"The majority of persons having a right to seats in the house of representatives have a right to organize that house and to transact all its lawful business, including the enactment of laws and the election of Senators. Persons who have the certificates of election have such right to seats. Every act of the assembly in which they take part, and to which their consent is necessary, has as absolute validity as if their title had been affirmed by an adjudication of the house itself. Their title is not, as is sometimes carelessly said, a prima facie title. It is an absolute title, continuing until the house itself has adjudicated that some other person be admitted to their place. This adjudication is only operative for the future, and has no retroactive effect whatever. When the house makes the inquiry on the merits, it may treat the credentials as prima facie evidence upon that question. But until the house tries the case the credential is conclusive to all the world." (Case of Clark and Maginnis v. Sanders and Power, p. 727.)

These decisions and judgment of the Senate are founded upon the principle that the States, by constitutional ordinances, have made each house of the State legislatures the judges of the elections and qualifications of their own members; it is ultra vires of our powers to revise, review, consider, or pass upon any questions of this character.

If the senate of Delaware had made any adjudication upon the objections alleged against the qualifications of Mr. Speaker Watson, we would have been bound by such adjudication, whether adverse or favorable to his title. If they made none, this does not give the United States Senate any authority to adjudge the case. The jurisdiction of the two houses of the State legislatures, by their own authority, is original and exclusive.

These constitutional enactments have such effect as not only to make the members of each house the judges in each case, but also to forbid that the members of any other tribunal shall be judges therein.

The evidence in this case shows that William T. Watson, on the first Tuesday in January, 1893, held credentials signed and certified by the sheriff of the county of Kent, in the State of Delaware, and by the inspectors of the elections in said county, showing that he had been duly elected senator from said county at the general election held in November, 1892, in said county, for the term of four years—that is, until November, 1896.

The record of the journal of the senate of the State of Delaware shows that on the first Tuesday of January, 1893, aforesaid, the day fixed by law for the meeting for the general assembly, William T. Watson, aforesaid, appeared and presented this certificate of election as the credentials of his seat and title as a senator.

The journal shows that these credentials were read and spread at large upon the record of that day, and that thereupon he, the said Watson, was sworn and admitted as a senator. Mr. Watson yet holds these credentials; the record thereof and the proceedings thereupon are yet remaining; and these credentials so remaining of record are, as is said in the case of Clark and Maginnis v. Sanders and Power, an absolute title, and they continue to be a full, complete, and absolute title until the senate of Delaware has for some cause pronounced and adjudged them to be no longer valid.

As the senate of the State of Delaware were lawfully, in the first instance, the exclusive judges of the validity of these credentials, so they continue to be the exclusive judges of their invalidity, if from any cause whatever disqualifications have occurred which might vitiate or destroy their legality. Any adjudication by the Senate of the United States upon such a subject is beyond our province. Such action upon our part would be an intrusion, an interference, an unwarrantable usurpation of power vested in another body, ruinous to the autonomy of the States and disastrous to the character of this body whose members purport not to be chosen by their own action, but by that of the legislatures of the States.

There is not and has not been up to this day any adjudication by the senate of the State of Delaware adverse to the title of Mr. Watson as a member of that body. A careful search and inspection of the record and journal of the State senate shows no such adjudication. It could only be shown by the record.

The journal does show, as above recited, that he was admitted, sworn, and seated upon his aforesaid credentials. It shows that he was afterwards chosen speaker of the senate; that he continued to act as senator and as speaker whenever he was present, up to and including the last day of the session, when both houses adjourned sine die; that during the entire session, whenever he was present, he voted and acted as a senator in the joint convention of the two houses, and acted as presiding officer of such convention.

If the senate of the State of Delaware were to-day convened, and had adjudged in this case in hearing before them that Mr. Watson's seat was, for any or all of the causes alleged in the claim of Mr. Du Pont, vacant, and that he was no longer a a senator, such a judgment at this time could not affect in any manner his action or vote in the senate or joint convention while he acted as a senator.

No one would contend for a moment that such a judgment is retroactive. The acts of the senator de facto are as valid as if de jure. How much less could any adjudication in this body at this time legally invalidate his former vote, seat, or title as a senator.

We therefore conclude in this case—

First. That if there be any questions as to the lawful qualifications of William T. Watson to act and vote as a senator, and, by consequence, as a member of the joint convention, this is not the place, the time, or the tribunal to either hear or determine such questions.

Second. The senate of the State of Delaware had paramount and exclusive jurisdiction to adjudge such questions, and, whether they exercised such jurisdiction or not, the Senate of the United States has no jurisdiction in the premises.

Third. That Mr. Watson having acted and voted as a senator and as a member of the joint convention at the time when the vote was taken under which Mr. Du Pont claims his election to a seat in this body, he is to be counted as a member of the legislature of Delaware in joint convention assembled; that the whole number of members voting, being the whole number of members of both houses, was 30; that Mr. Du Pont did not receive a majority of this whole number; that we can not make his vote of 15 a majority of such whole number by subtracting therefrom the vote of one whose right and title to vote is not shown by the record to have been adjudged against by the body of which he acted as a member.

"Mr. President:

"The legislature of the State of Delaware consists, when each seat is filled, of thirty members. The senate consists of nine members, the house of representatives of twenty-one members. There are in the State of Delaware but three counties in all, namely, Newcastle, Kent, and Sussex. Under the Delaware constitution each of these counties elects three senators and seven representatives to the general assembly of the State, thus constituting a membership in the senate of nine and in the house of twenty-one. The senators are elected for four years and the representatives for two years. A person to be a senator must have attained to the age of 27 years, while to be a representative to 24 years.

"The legislature of the State of Delaware is, by the constitution of that State, designated as a 'general assembly,' consisting of a senate and a house of representatives, and all legislative powers of the State are by such constitution vested in such general assembly.

"A regular biennial session of this general assembly, each of the thirty members of which had been previously duly elected, each having the necessary qualifications, convened at Dover, the capital of the State, on the first Tuesday in January, 1895. The duty of electing a United States Senator to succeed Senator Higgins, then a Senator from the State of Delaware, and whose term was to expire March 4, 1895, devolved upon this general assembly. This general assembly was duly organized on the day it met—that is, the second Tuesday of January, 1895—by the election of William T. Watson, a senator from the county of Kent, as speaker of the senate, and the election of Henry T. McMullen, a member from the county of Newcastle, as speaker of the house of representatives.

"On the second Tuesday after the organization, in accordance with the act of Congress of July 25, 1866, providing the manner of electing United States Senators, the members of the two houses met in joint assembly at 12 o'clock meridian for the purpose of electing a Senator of the United States. Two ballots were taken on that day without anyone having been chosen. On each succeeding day, except Sunday, the members of the two houses met in joint assembly and voted for United States Senator up to and including May 9, 1895, that being the last day of the session of that joint assembly. On the last day of the session, May 9, 1895, 28 separate ballots were taken in the joint assembly. On the last ballot there were 30 votes cast, there being in such joint assembly thirty persons, each claiming to be a member of either the senate or house of the Delaware general assembly, and each claiming the right to a seat in such joint assembly and the right to be included and counted and to vote therein for a United States Senator. On the last ballot four persons were voted for for United States Senator—that is to say, Henry A. Du Pont, Ed. Ridgley, J. Edward Addicks, and Ebe W. Tunnell—each of the persons present claiming to be members voting as follows, and each of the candidates receiving the following votes:

"The vote as above ascertained having been announced as follows:

	Votes.
H. A. Du Pont	15
Ed. Ridgley	10
J. Edward Addicks	4
Ebe W. Tunnell	1

"It will be observed there were in this joint assembly and voting on this last ballot 30 persons, each claiming a right to be there and vote as a member of the general assembly of the State of Delaware. It is a fact, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Palmer], that the vote was the same on each of the other 27 ballots taken that day.

"It is furthermore a fact that the claimant, Henry A. Du Pont, received but 15 votes. Consequently, if it is true that each of said 30 persons so present and voting had a right to be present and vote for a United States Senator, then the claimant, Mr. Du Pont, did not receive a majority of those present and voting, and in such event he could not be elected, as it is conceded it requires the votes of a majority of the members of the legislature, provided all who are members and who have a right to vote for Senator are present and voting. If, however, the fact is as it is contended by the committee, and by all those who favor the seating of Mr. Du Pont, that 1 of the 30 persons so present and voting was either not a member of the Delaware senate, or had no right to exercise the office, or any of the functions of senator, and consequently had no right to be in such joint assembly or to vote for Senator therein, then it follows there were but 29 legal votes cast on said last ballot, and not 30, and consequently, as it is conceded the claimant, Mr. Du Pont, received 15 votes, no one of which was the vote of a person so alleged to be unlawfully present and to have voted illegally, it follows he had a majority of all the legal votes cast, and was therefore duly elected.

"It is contended by the claimant, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections believe such contention to be well founded, that William T. Watson, one of the persons present in such joint assembly and voting for Senator, and at no time voting for Mr. Du Pont, but having on each ballot voted for Ed. Ridgley, and claiming the right to be there as a senator from the county of Kent and as speaker of the Delaware senate, was on said date the governor of the State of Delaware, and therefore, for that reason, he had not on that date, May 9, 1895, any right whatever, under the constitution of the State of Delaware and the law of the land, to exercise the office of State senator, or any of the functions pertaining thereto, and had not, therefore, any right to be present in such joint assembly, no right to vote or be counted therein, and that his presence and voting were illegal, wholly ultra vires, and his vote absolutely void.

"The constitution of the State of Delaware, section 14, Article III, provides, among other things, as follows:

"'SEC. 14. Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If the person elected governor shall die, or become disqualified before the commencement of his term of office, or shall refuse to take the same, the person holding the office shall continue to exercise it until a governor shall be elected and duly qualified.'

"This section furthermore states:

"'The governor shall not be removed from his office for inability but with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the legislature.'

"Before proceeding to discuss the foregoing and the several other provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware, it is well to inquire precisely what facts are conceded by all parties to this controversy. The following facts I believe are admitted, substantially at least, by those opposing the admission of Mr. Du Pont, including the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"First. That William T. Watson, a duly elected and qualified senator from the county of Kent, was, on the first Tuesday of January, 1895, duly chosen speaker of the Delaware senate, entered on his duties as such speaker on that date, and continued to serve as such until April 9, 1895.

"Second. That on April 8, 1895, Joshua H. Marvil, then governor of the State of Delaware, died, thus creating a vacancy in the office of governor by death, which vacancy William T. Watson, speaker of the Delaware senate, became eligible to fill under the constitutional provisions I have quoted.

"Third. That on the day following the death of Governor Marvil, namely, on April 9, 1895, said William T. Watson, then speaker of the Delaware senate, was duly inaugurated governor of the State of Delaware, and the following oaths of office, required by the constitution to be administered to the governor of the State on his taking office, were administered to him. I quote as to the record of this ceremony from the journal entries of the Delaware senate of the proceedings therein April 9, 1895:

"'The Hon. James L. Wolcott then administered, in the presence of the members of the senate, to Hon. William Tharp Watson, speaker of the senate, the following oaths of office as governor, to wit:

"'"I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear on the holy evangels of Almighty God that I will support the Constitution of the United States of America. So help me God."

"'"I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear on the holy evangels of Almighty God that I will support the constitution of the State of Delaware. So help me God."

"'"I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear on the holy evangels of Almighty God that I will perform the duties of the office of governor of the State of Delaware with fidelity. So help me God."'

"That immediately upon such oaths being administered, he, William T. Watson, entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, and has ever since continued in such office, and was on May 9, 1895, and still is, governor of the State of Delaware.

"Fourth. That from the date of his inauguration as governor and entering upon the exercise of such office, April 9, 1895, until about noon on May 9, 1895, a period of one month, said William T. Watson, governor of the State of Delaware, did not at any time resume or attempt to resume his seat in the Delaware senate or his seat as speaker of such senate.

"Fifth. That from April 9, 1895, when Speaker William T. Watson was inaugurated governor and entered upon the exercise of such office, his name was dropped from the roll call of the Delaware senate and was never once called thereafter, either as senator or speaker of the senate, on any roll call had on any call of the senate, or on any bill, resolution, or motion during the remainder of such session of the general assembly of the State of Delaware.

"Sixth. That on May 9, 1895, about the hour of 12 meridian, and but a few moments before the members of the general assembly of the State of Delaware were to meet, and did meet, in joint assembly to elect a Senator, William T. Watson, then governor of the State of Delaware, and then exercising such office and all its functions, entered the senate chamber, took the chair of the speaker of the senate, the speaker pro tempore having left the chair to enable him to do so, and proceeded with the members of the senate to the hall of the house of representatives, and there assumed to act, and did act, as chairman of the joint assembly, and assumed to vote, and did vote, therein for United States Senator on the several ballots cast on that day, casting his vote on each ballot for Edward Ridgley for United States Senator.

"Seventh. That immediately after the last ballot was taken for Senator in said joint assembly on May 9, 1895, and before said joint assembly dissolved, a protest against the right of Governor Watson to be in and to vote in such joint assembly was presented by Senator Samuel Alrichs, a member of such joint assembly, on behalf of himself and fourteen other members of such joint assembly, all of whom had voted for the claimant, Henry A. Du Pont.

"This challenge, protest, and demand, as it was at the time designated, is given as follows in the affidavit of Senator Samuel Alrichs, of date November 25, 1895.

"The declaration was then made by the speaker of the house that Henry A. Du Pont had been elected United States Senator from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895, and the joint assembly then dissolved sine die.

"Eighth. That the election of the claimant, Henry A. Du Pont, as Senator from the State of Delaware, on May 9, 1895, for the full term commencing March 4, 1895, was certified to by Hon. Henry H. McMullen, speaker of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware, and attested by Edgar T. Hastings, clerk of such house of representatives, by a certificate, of which the following is a copy, which I ask may be inserted as a part of my remarks:

"Tenth. That since 1792 nine speakers of the senate and one speaker of the house of representatives of the general assembly of the State of Delaware have succeeded to the office of governor, pursuant to the provisions of section 14 of Article III of the Delaware constitutions of 1792 and 1831. Four of these were under the constitution of 1792, and six under the present constitution of the State of Delaware, that of 1831, and in not one of these ten cases has any person, speaker of the senate or speaker of the house, who has in the last one hundred and four years succeeded to the governorship in virtue of section 14 of Article III, which is the same in number, and in so far as this question is concerned substantially the same in the two constitutions of 1792 and 1831, taken any part whatever during his continuance in the office of governor in the proceedings of the senate or the house of representatives, nor attempted to do so, with the single exception of the attempt on the part of the present governor of Delaware, and during this time such persons have drawn the salary of governor and have not drawn the salary of senator or member.

* * * * * * *

"While the precise question involved in this case must, I concede, be determined by a construction of the several provisions of the Delaware constitution as throwing light on the subject, I propose to establish by authority these two propositions:

"First. That it is a well-settled rule of the common law that the same person shall not exercise simultaneously incompatible offices, and that under the common law the acceptance of an office incompatible with the one already held is ipso facto a resignation of the other; and

"Second. The office of governor and legislator are, under the American system, incompatible, and the dual functions of the two can not be, and are not, as a general rule, exercised either in whole or in part simultaneously by the same person, and are never so exercised in the absence of either express or clearly implied constitutional or statutory authority, and the cases in which authority exists constitute the exception and not the rule.

* * * * * * *

"If, therefore, it can be shown by the opposition that there is in the constitution of the State of Delaware either an express or necessarily implied right guaranteed to the citizens of that State to hold and exercise simultaneously, or to exercise simultaneously, the two offices of governor and legislator, then, while I should hold such guaranty to be in conflict with the general letter and spirit of the rule on that subject under our American system, I would not be disposed to deny the simultaneous exercise of such right to the citizens of that State. I, however, not only most emphatically deny that any such right exists, either expressly or inferentially, under the constitution of the State of Delaware, but I confidently lay down the broad propositions, first, that the simultaneous exercise of the two offices—those of governor and State senator—is directly, positively, and absolutely prohibited in the State of Delaware by certain express specific provisions of the Delaware constitution.

* * * * * * *

"Section 12, Article II, of the Delaware constitution provides, among other things, as follows:

"'No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State or the United States, except the attorney-general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice, respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia, holding no disqualifying office, shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a senator or representative.'

"While section 5 of Article III is as follows:

"'SEC. 5. No member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.'

"What, then, is the fair, reasonable, and, in fact, only justifiable construction of this first clause? Reading only the words, but yet all the words, which relate to the question under consideration, it would read as follows:

"'No person holding any office under this State shall, during his continuance in office, be a senator.'

"This language, and it is the precise language of the constitution applicable, is express, plain, direct, certain, and entirely free from any ambiguity. It declares in direct and unambiguous phrase that no person holding any office under the State of Delaware shall be a senator. That is to say, no person exercising any office under the State of Delaware shall simultaneously exercise the office of State senator.

"There is no limitation on the language used. There is nothing in, about it, or connected with it that would indicate for one moment that it was only intended to apply to such governors as might be elected by the people, and that it should not apply to such who became governors to fill a vacancy in virtue of the constitutional provision I have quoted. The office of governor is an office under the State of Delaware within the meaning of this constitutional phrase. No one, it would seem, would deny that proposition. Nor will it be denied—on the contrary, it must be conceded—that it is directly admitted by counsel in opposition to the claims of Mr. Du Pont in their printed briefs, whether conceded or not by the minority of the committee, that Watson was, on the 9th day of May, 1895, governor of the State of Delaware, the governor in every sense of the term, exercising all the functions of the office, performing its every duty, exercising its every prerogative, entitled to its name and all its emoluments, neither cramped, nor limited, nor circumscribed by any condition, qualification, or limitation whatever—the governor just as much and for every purpose as though he had been elected by the people, instead of having succeeded to the office in virtue of the constitutional provision as speaker of the senate.

"If, therefore, he was and is governor, then, the governorship being an office under the State of Delaware, he was, on May 9, 1895, and still is holding an office under the State, and so holding such office, he can not, in the face of the first constitutional provision quoted, be a senator or exercise any of the functions of a senator during his continuance in the office of governor."

[Extracts from remarks of Mr. Turpie in opposition to the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections that Mr. Du Pont was entitled to a seat from the State of Delaware. Found in the proceedings of March 9, 1896, in the Congressional Record, vol. 28, pp. 2595, 2596, and 2597.]

"Mr. President, the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections have taken the position, and will maintain it, that the claimant in this case, Henry A. Du Pont, was not chosen a member of this body, and is not entitled to a seat therein. The majority of the committee have the affirmative of the issue. They have the burden of proof. The record in the case contained in the journal both of the senate and the house of the State of Delaware shows that on the day and date when it is claimed the petitioner was elected a United States Senator there were 30 members of the legislature of Delaware present in joint convention who took part therein; that there were 30 votes cast for United States Senator; that the claimant received 15 votes; that an equal number, 15 votes, were given to other gentlemen named at that time as candidates, and that there was no election. Such is the record.

"It is set up as a reason for maintaining the position of the majority that Mr William T. Watson, a senator of the State of Delaware from the county of Kent, and speaker of the senate, voted and acted in joint convention; and it is alleged against his right to do so that some time before—about a month before that time—the governor of the State of Delaware had died and that the exercise of the duties of the office had devolved upon said William T. Watson, speaker of the senate and a senator from the county of Kent. It is claimed by the majority that by reason of the devolution of the exercise of the office, by the death of the governor, upon this member of the State senate and speaker of the State senate, he ceased at that time either to be a senator or speaker of the senate, and was not therefore entitled to act and vote as a member of the joint assembly.

"The temporary provision for the exercise of executive authority is found in section 14, page 29, of the edition I have of the constitution of the State of Delaware. It reads as follows:

"'Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.'

"Now, sir, I think if any man of ordinary understanding or intelligence (and the constitutions of our States were made by such men and for such men) were asked upon whom devolved the exercise of the executive office of the State upon the death of the governor, he would answer upon the speaker of the senate. If he were asked how long the devolution lasts, he would say until a governor was elected by the people and qualified. If he were asked on the first day of this temporary period, the day the governor died, who is to exercise the executive office, he would answer, the speaker of the senate. If he were asked in the middle of such temporary interim who is to exercise or does exercise the office, he would answer, the speaker of the senate. And if at the very close, on the day before the new governor was inaugurated, such person were asked who was exercising the office of governor now, or who is entitled to exercise it, he would answer, the speaker of the senate.

"The future expression in this phrase 'shall exercise' demands special attention. The phrase is not only imperative, but it is a future imperative, looking beyond the present, and especially when you use the next word in the collocation, 'shall exercise until,' it will be seen that the whole scope of the temporary power—of the exercise of the power—of him who is speaker of the senate is in the future.

"Necessarily, then, the speaker must be and continue for that future period the officer as he is first designated. The speaker must remain speaker; he does remain speaker. It is because he is speaker and remains speaker that he exercises the executive authority, for if, as is contended for by the other side, at the very beginning of the exercise of the executive authority he ceases to be speaker, or is suspended from the office of speaker or the office of senator, how can the speaker be said to exercise the office for the future? How can it be said of him in any way he 'shall exercise;' the speaker must exercise eo nomine for that future period the office of governor. If he ceases to be speaker, if he is suspended from his functions as speaker, he would then be no longer the officer designated by the constitution ipsissimis verbis, he would no longer be the official designated in the words and letter of the constitution to make the temporary supply in the exercise of the executive office.

"Now, Mr. President, I ask again with reference to this construction. The constitution in its text in this section 14 does not provide that the speaker of the senate or the speaker of the house in either instance shall be or become governor of the State. Neither officer is anywhere called in this section the governor of the State. Let us look now at the different clauses:

"'Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.'

"He is there called the speaker of the senate who exercises the office; he is not called governor. He is distinguished in the most emphatic manner from governor, as I shall show in the future.

"The next clause refers to the speaker of the house, and in that case the officer designated is called speaker of the house of representatives exercising the office of governor.

"The next clause provides that—

"'If upon a vacancy happening in the office of governor there be no other person who can exercise said office within the provisions of the constitution the secretary of state shall exercise the same until the next meeting of the general assembly.'

"There is a solid sentence; no comma, no semicolon, no stop at all. The secretary of state shall exercise the office until the meeting of the general assembly. There is a plain limitation on the time he shall exercise the office. It is shorter than the other time—until the meeting of the general assembly. There is no limitation on how long he shall be secretary of state.

"But I ask, with reference to this single sentence in three lines, where the temporary power is conferred on the secretary of state, how could the secretary of state exercise it unless he was secretary of state, and where is there the slightest intimation, the most intangible hint, that he does not continue to be secretary of state while he is in the temporary exercise of the executive authority? But he is not called the governor—he is called the secretary of state who exercises the executive authority.

"Again, there is another contingency:

"'If upon a vacancy happening in the office of governor there be no other person who can exercise said office within the provisions of the constitution, the secretary of state shall exercise the same until the next meeting of the general assembly, who shall immediately proceed to elect, by joint ballot of both houses, a person to exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.'

"Here is another person designated to exercise the office by a very high method in a very high manner, selected in the same manner as the members of this body, by a joint ballot of the general assembly. Is he governor? Is he called and designated governor? No, sir; he is called a person to exercise the office. That is all he is called. He is not even named by inference the governor. How easy it would have been to have said, 'Who shall proceed to elect, by joint ballot of both houses, a person to exercise the office until his successor shall be elected by the people.' That is interpolation. Until a governor shall be elected by the people is the language of the constitution. Is not this person who exercises the office a governor? No; he is not. He is not called such. He is not in the gubernatorial succesion. He is not in the rank, order, and dignity of a governor. He is a person who exercises the office of governor by virtue of the choice of the joint assembly of the State of Delaware. Who, then, may be governor? The constitution is perfectly plain upon that subject:

"'The supreme executive powers of the State shall be vested in a governor. The governor shall be chosen by the citizens of the State.'

"Is it possible, then, that a governor of Delaware should be any other person than one chosen by the citizens of the State? Certainly not; he can not be. No person can be governor of Delaware unless he be chosen by the citizens of the State. Can not the senate choose a governor? No, sir. Can the house of representatives choose a governor? No, sir. Can both houses choose the governor? No, sir. Both houses put together can only elect 'a person to exercise the office of governor.'

"I was very much surprised then by the statement of the learned Senator from Oregon with reference to what he claims to be a well-known maxim of common law, that the acceptance of one office, an incompatible office, vacates an office formerly held by the same man. I am not now questioning that law, though I might question some construction put upon it by the honorable Senator; I will not do that in passing, but the question I ask is, when did he accept the second office of governor? How could he accept it? A man may accept a thing that is offered to him. He may even accept or decline a thing that is offered to him. A man is elected by the citizens of Delaware governor of the State. That person can accept, that person can decline. Was Mr. Watson ever elected by the citizens of the State to the office of governor? No. The maxim of common law has nothing to do with the question in the case. There was indeed no second office, and no acceptance of any second office.

"There has been a good deal of discussion about two general propositions in the constitution—one, section 12 of Article II, and another, section 5 of Article III. One provides that no person holding an office under the State shall be a senator. No person holding any office under the State shall be a senator. I admit that the governor is an officer of the State, but I say that Watson never was governor and never could be governor. He may be sometime, but when he becomes governor it will be after he is chosen by the citizens of the State to that office, in the language of the constitution. He will never become governor before that time. He can not be governor before that time. No other power can choose him. No other constituency can elect him. The governor of Delaware is chosen by the people. Watson was holding no other office under the State then—none whatever. He is a senator, and continues to be a senator.

"I admit that the governor is an officer, but for sufficient reasons, already given, it is plain that Watson never was governor, and could not be governor. The right devolved upon him only to exercise the office. That is the extent of his authority: but this right was not an office, it was simply a right; it was not an office, it was simply the exercise of an office; it was a right appurtenant, not to Watson, nor to any person; it was a right appurtenant to the speakership, to the senatorship. It was a right inherent in no person, appertaining not to Mr. Watson; but it was a right inhering in and pertaining to the speakership of the senate of Delaware, and to a member of the senate of Delaware, by consequence."

"Mr. President:

"Before entering upon a discussion of this case I beg leave to say that I have read and carefully considered the very able arguments presented by both sides, and that I have arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Du Pont did, on the 9th day of May, as aforesaid, receive a majority of the votes cast by those who legally constituted the joint assembly of the State of Delaware at that time. In forming this opinion I have been guided by what I conceive to be a proper construction of the constitution of the State of Delaware. I find on an examination of the constitution of that State that the second article of the constitution contains the following section:

"'SEC. 12. No person concerned in any Army or Navy contract, no member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State or of the United States, except the attorney-general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice, respectively, attorneys at law, and officers of the militia holding no disqualifying office, shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a senator or representative.'

"Here we have a positive declaration that no person, during his continuance in the office of governor of Delaware, shall be a senator. If this section means anything, it is that the person holding or exercising the office of governor of that State is absolutely disqualified from exercising the functions of senator. I take it that it will hardly be contended by those who claim that Mr. Du Pont was not legally elected, that had Governor Watson been elected to the position of governor and senator both at the same time, that in the face of this provision in the constitution he would have been permitted to hold the office of governor and at the same time be a senator or representative. I presume no one will contend that he could have qualified and exercised the functions of both offices at the same time. That being so, we should remember the well-settled principle of law that no one can be permitted to indirectly do that which he can not directly do. Those who take the position that Governor Watson on that occasion had the authority to vote as senator and exercise the functions of the office of senator are asking us to decide that the governor by indirection could do that which he could not directly do. This is such a flagrant and utter disregard of all the rules of construction with which I am acquainted that I am fully persuaded that such an argument will not influence members of this body in deciding a grave question like the one under consideration.

"According to the well-settled rules of the common law, the valid acceptance of one office by the person already holding another and an incompatible office vacates the former as effectually as an actual surrender of it. In fact, it has always been regarded as an abdication, and therefore as a quasi resignation. I find among the decisions of the supreme court of my State several cases which unquestionably recognize the principle of the common law which forbade the same person from holding incompatible offices.

"I call attention to the case in the matter of J. G. Martin, decided in 62 North Carolina, page 153, which expressly decides that the acceptance of one office by a person already holding an incompatible office vacates the former.

"This is a case which occurred during the late war, when my distinguished predecessor was governor of our State. The question arose as to whether or not General Martin, who was then holding the office of adjutant-general, could at the same time occupy the office of brigadier-general of the Confederate States.

"An agreed case was submitted to the supreme court of North Carolina, and the supreme court of that State, presided over by Chief Justice Pearson, one of the most eminent common-law lawyers in the country, decided that in that case the very moment he accepted the office of brigadier-general in the Confederate States the office of adjutant-general became vacant, and that Governor Vance had the right to appoint a successor.

"Mechem's treatise on the Law of Public Offices and Officers, section 420, in discussing the effect of accepting incompatible offices, says:

"'It is a well-settled rule of the common law that he who while occupying one office accepts another incompatible with the first, ipso facto absolutely vacates the first office and his title is thereby terminated without any other act or proceeding.' (Millard v. Thatcher, 2 T. R., 81; Rex v. Patteson, 4 B. and Ad., 9; Rex v. Hughes, 5 B. and C., 886.)

"I understand the Senators on the other side to take the position that it must affirmatively appear to this body that there was an adjudication of the fact by the senate of the State of Delaware that the office was vacant before we can find that it was vacant. In this decision it is expressly decided to the contrary, that no further proceeding is necessary in order to vacate the first office held by the party who takes the second. I proceed with the opinion:

"'That the second office is inferior to the first does not affect the rule (Millard v. Thatcher, 2 T. R., 81), and even though the title to the second office fail, as where the election was void, the rule is still the same, nor can the officer then regain possession of his former office to which another has been appointed or elected.' (Rex v. Hughes, 5 B. and C., 886.)

"In this connection I wish to call attention to the case of Bryan v. Cattell (15 Iowa, 550), in which the court said:

"'Our opinion is that we are not confined to the statutory clauses or events in determining whether a vacancy exists. If a party accepts another office which, within the meaning of the law and cases, is incompatible with that which he holds, we have no doubt that the first one would become vacant. Thus, as is well said by the appellant, if the judge of a district court should accept a seat upon this bench, a vacancy would be created in the first office, and yet the statute does not, in terms, cover such a case. So if the auditor of state should take the office of treasurer, and many other cases that might be named.'

"Mr. President, I wish to read from a case which is reported in 45 Missouri, The State, ex rel. James W. Owens, petitioner, v. Dan M. Draper, State auditor, respondent, page 356. I will state before I read this opinion that they had a provision in their constitution in the State of Missouri that no one exercising or holding a State office shall at the same time hold an office in the general assembly. I am not going to read the opinion which relates to the construction of that section, but I am going to read the opinion bearing on the construction of the common-law doctrine vacating an office where an incompatible office is accepted. Among other things the court said:

"'The case is submitted on the pleadings, and they show that while Owens was a judge of the circuit court he was elected a representative to the legislature, qualified and took his seat, and performed the duties and functions of that office. There does not appear to have been any resignation of the judgeship, and the question is whether he could legally hold the two offices and receive the pay appertaining to both at the same time. There has never been any doubt about the principle'—

"Says Judge Wagner, who rendered the opinion—

"'so far as I am advised, that at common law, if a party accepts another office which is incompatible with the one he holds, the first one would become vacant.'

"'Suppose Owens'—

"That is, the petitioner—

"'instead of being elected to the legislature had been elected to a seat on this bench, and had qualified and entered on the discharge of its duties. It is perfectly clear to my mind that his seat on the circuit bench would have been thereby vacated.

"'Or if the auditor should be elected treasurer, or the attorney-general secretary of state, their acceptance of the latter offices would necessarily vacate their former ones. Besides the common-law rule, the State government is divided into separate and distinct branches or departments, the officers of each having separate and independent functions to perform.'

"Just as they had in this case. There was the executive of the State of Delaware with his separate, distinct, and independent functions to perform; there was the State senate of Delaware with its separate, distinct, and independent functions to perform.

"'It was designed that they should be distinguished and divided by a line of demarkation, and that one should not trench upon the other.'

"This is a principle which our lawmakers have ever kept in view in the past, and one which we as such are compelled, under our oaths, to preserve and enforce whenever and wherever we come in contact with it in the discharge of our official duties."

"Mr. President:

"It is conceded that at a general election held in the State of Delaware in November, 1894, there were elected a governor for the term of four years, and a full membership of the Delaware legislature, consisting of 9 senators and 21 representatives; that in January, 1895, the governor elect, Mr. Marvil, was duly inducted into office and entered upon the performance of its duties; that both branches of the legislature, composed of members duly qualified, were legally organized, and that Senator Watson was elected speaker of the senate; that among the duties devolving upon such legislature was the election of a United States Senator for the full term of six years beginning March 4, 1895, and ending March 4, 1901; that the legislature entered upon the performance of this duty in conformity to law and continued therein until the day of final adjournment, May 9, 1895; and that on the last-named day the recorded vote in the joint assembly for United States Senator was 15 for Henry A. Du Pont and 15 against him, which did not give Mr. Du Pont a majority of the total recorded vote of 30, and that thereupon the legislature adjourned without day.

"It is further conceded that on the 8th day of April, 1895, Governor Marvil died; and that by the constitution of the State of Delaware it is provided that—

" 'Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified;'

"That on the following day, April 9, and in compliance with this constitutional mandate, the chancellor, in the presence of the senate, administered to Mr. Watson, the speaker of the senate (and I quote the journal entry), 'the oaths of office as governor,' by which, among other things, Watson obligated himself to 'perform the duties of the office of governor of the State of Delaware with fidelity.' It is further admitted that thereupon he entered upon the discharge of the duties of such office and that he has ever since exercised and is now performing the duties of chief executive of the State of Delaware. It is further admitted that from the 9th day of April, 1895, the day Mr. Watson took the oath as governor and entered upon the exercise of that office, until the 9th day of May, 1895, the day of the final vote for United States Senator in the joint assembly, Mr. Watson took no part in the business of the senate, either as speaker or senator, or in the proceedings of the joint assembly; and that the highest vote recorded in the joint assembly for United States Senator between the 9th of April and the 9th of May was 29, and that the declared vote of 30 for United States Senator in the joint assembly of May 9 was made possible only by the appearance of Mr. Watson, then exercising the office of governor, who on that day entered the senate and the joint assembly and cast his vote for United States Senator.

"It is further conceded that on the final vote Mr. Du Pont received 15 votes, and that of the 15 votes cast against him one of the number was the vote of Mr. Watson, and that without his vote Henry A. Du Pont would have had a majority over all, and would have been elected a Senator of the United States from the State of Delaware for the full term of six years.

"The primary and vital question, therefore, to be determined, simply stated, is this: Had Watson, while exercising the office of governor of the State of Delaware, the right to vote in the joint assembly of the legislature for United States Senator? Upon this point the Committee on Privileges and Elections were unable to agree, and this is one and the main issue presented to the Senate for its consideration and final judgment.

"The majority of the committee insist that when, on the 9th day of April, Senator Watson took the oath and entered upon the exercise of the office of governor of the State of Delaware, from that moment, and so long as he continued to exercise its functions, he became and continues to be governor; and that as such he had no constitutional or legal right to discharge the functions of senator, and that his attempt to do so in the joint assembly of May 9 was a usurpation and his vote for United States Senator a nullity.

"On the other hand it is contended that although Watson entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, yet, nevertheless, he was then a senator, and continues to hold the office of senator and speaker, and that there was no constitutional or legal restraint which prevented him from discharging the functions of both offices at the same time, and that, in fact, his exact legal, constitutional, and official status was and is senator and speaker exercising the office of governor.

"It is interesting to note in this connection that the position now taken by opposing Senators—that Watson did not in fact become governor when he entered upon the exercise of that office—is a complete reversal and abandonment of the position taken by counsel in their argument before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, wherein it was admitted that Mr. Watson did become and was in fact governor when he entered upon the exercise of that office. I quote from the reply of opposing counsel to the argument made in support of Du Pont's claim. They say:

"'Counsel devote thirty pages of their brief to a demonstration of the fact that the speaker of the senate, in case of a vacancy in the office of governor, becomes governor of the State. The matter counsel present on this head attests their industry and may interest the curious, but it supports a proposition which we do not contest.'

"It was conceded then that Watson became, and was in fact, governor the moment he entered upon the exercise of the functions of that office; and had that admission been made on the floor of the Senate it would have simplified, if not ended, this controversy. But opposing Senators were too astute to make this concession, knowing that under the constitution of the State of Delaware the office of governor and senator can not be held by the same person at the same time, and that as it was absolutely essential to the validity of Watson's vote for United States Senator that he should have been a lawful member of the State senate and of the joint assembly when he voted, it became equally imperative to deny that he was at that time governor, or that he was 'holding any office under the State' except that of senator.

"It becomes necessary, therefore, to inquire, as a matter of fact, whether Watson, while exercising the office of governor, was by that act "holding an office under the State" within the meaning of the constitution, and whether Senators can successfully cut their way through this constitutional inhibition by contending that such holding was not an office.

"And this brings us to an examination of that provision of the constitution of the State of Delaware under and in obedience to which Watson entered upon the exercise of the executive office.

"Article III, section 14, provides as follows:

"Plain as this proposition of the constitution is, yet it is the storm center around which all the legal acumen of the opposition spends its force. The contention is this, that the expression 'shall exercise the office' does not mean that the speaker of the senate shall become or is governor in fact, but that he is simply 'exercising the office'—moving it around as though it were a thing of life, to keep its blood from stagnating; to keep the office alive until such time as a real governor can be elected by the people and be duly qualified. Is this the common-sense or legal meaning of the expression 'exercising an office?' Webster defines the verb 'to exercise' as follows: 'To put in practice; to carry out in action; to perform the duties of; as, to exercise an office.'

"It is difficult to comprehend how one can exercise an office, perform all its functions, discharge all its duties, and yet not be an incumbent of such office. As was said in a well-adjudicated case, to which I shall have occasion to refer later, 'How can a person fill the office of governor without being governor? Given a public office and one who, duly empowered, discharges its duties, and we have an incumbent of that office.' Mechem, in his work on Public Offices and Officers, a recognized authority in the profession, says:

"'A public office is the right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which, for a given period, an individual is vested with some portion of the sovereign function of the government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public.'

"'An office'—

"Says Blackstone—

"'is a right to exercise a private or public employment and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging.'

"Judge Cooley, whom the Senator from Indiana justly eulogized as a great jurist, in Troop v. Langdon (40 Michigan), said:

"'An office is a special trust or charge created by competent authority. If not merely honorary, certain duties will be connected with it the performance of which will be the consideration for its being conferred upon a particular individual who, for the time being, will be the officer.'

"Judge Danforth, in Rowland v. Major (83 New York), said:

"'Whether we look in the direction of our language, the terms of politics, or the diction of common life, we find that whoever has a public charge or employment, or even a particular employment affecting the public, is said to hold or be in office.'

"'But it is needless to multiply authorities.

"But in examining the question whether Watson, in entering upon the exercise of the office of governor, actually became an incumbent of the office, it is wholly unnecessary, in my judgment, to look beyond the plain terms of the constitution itself. That such became and is his official status is clearly demonstrable, I think, from the very language employed. Indeed any other interpretation would render the words used wholly inexplicable. Let us examine carefully, then, for a moment, that provision of the Delaware constitution under and by virtue of which Watson entered upon and is now exercising the office of governor. It is as follows:

"'Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If there be no speaker of the senate, or'—

"These words have been passed over lightly by our friends on the other side—

"'upon a further vacancy happening in the office by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.'

"I want to call attention to the words 'further vacancy happening in the office;' that is, happening in the office of governor. Here we have, in case of a vacancy happening in the office of governor, the line of succession definitely fixed. First the speaker of the senate, and after him the speaker of the house shall exercise the office. When does the office of governor devolve upon the speaker of the senate? In the language of the provision just quoted, 'upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, removal, resignation, or inability.' And when does the exercise of the office devolve upon the speaker of the house? In the language of the constitution, when there is 'no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy,' not a continuing vacancy, 'happening in the office by his death, removal, resignation, or inability.'

"Here we have, it will be observed, two vacancies referred to—one caused by the death, removal, resignation, or inability of the governor elected by the people; and the other by the death, removal, resignation, or inability of the speaker of the senate, who may have succeeded to the exercise of the executive office. It will be observed that this second vacancy is spoken of as a 'further vacancy in the office.'

* * * * * * *

"Mark the words 'further vacancy.' This presupposes a prior vacancy, and not only that, but that such prior vacancy had been filled by somebody, otherwise the expression 'further vacancy' would be meaningless and absolutely senseless. There could be no further vacancy until that former vacancy had been supplied. There might be a continuing vacancy, but not a further vacancy. If Watson, when he entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, did not fill the vacancy caused by the death of Governor Marvil, and become the governor of the State, then Watson's death, resignation, or removal could not create a further vacancy in that office. It would continue the original vacancy. It is absurd to talk about a further vacancy in an office already vacant and continuing vacant. That is an impossibility. The vacancy already existing must first be filled before it is possible to create another or further vacancy in the same office. One vacancy happening in an office there can not be another or a further vacancy in that office until the prior vacancy has been filled. A tenant may vacate his landlord's house, but there can not be another—a further—vacancy in that house until it has been again occupied. The expression 'further vacancy' is wholly inexplicable upon any other theory than that the original vacancy had been filled and, in this instance, by Governor Watson. This seems to me conclusive.

* * * * * * *

"But it is needless to grope through the uncertain and bewildering paths of legal speculation when we may confidently walk with steady and unfaltering step in a course illumined with the light of judicial learning. I propose to call attention to only two or three cases out of the many which seem to bear most directly upon the issue involved in this controversy. And first I will cite a case to which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Mitchell] alluded in opening the debate, decided by the supreme court of the State of Maine, and reported in 7 Greenleaf, page 483. The constitution of the State of Maine contains the following provision (Article IV, section 14):

"'Whenever the office of governor shall become vacant by death, resignation, removal from office, or otherwise'—

"Precisely like the constitution of Delaware—

"'the president of the senate shall exercise the office of governor until another governor shall be duly qualified.'

* * * * * * *

"On the 14th of January, 1830, Joshua Hall, a member of the Maine senate, was chosen president of that body. Soon afterwards the governor died, and Hall entered upon the exercise of the office of governor. Sixteen senators, including Hall, had been admitted and sworn. On the 26th of January the senate decided that there were four vacancies. Under the constitution these vacancies were to be filled by a joint assembly of the legislature. On the 1st of February the house of representatives sent a message to the senate requesting that body to meet the house in joint assembly for the election of senators to fill the vacancies. On the 2d of February, the senate being in session, a senator moved an adjournment, in order that the members of the senate might meet the members of the house of representatives in joint assembly. Hall, who was then exercising the office of governor, appeared in the senate and claimed the right to act as president. The vote was taken by yeas and nays. Hall voted in the negative. His vote being counted, the result was—yeas 8 and nays 8; and the motion was lost. On the 13th of February Jonathan G. Hunton, having in the meantime been elected governor, submitted certain questions to the supreme court in pursuance of a provision of the Maine constitution. One of these questions was the following:

"'2. Has the president of the senate, when the office of governor is vacant, and when he ought to be acting as governor, a right to preside and vote at the senate board?'

"The answer to this question was given by the chief justice, with the concurrence of the other justices, in the following words:

"'As to the second question, my opinion is that while the president of the senate, in virtue of his office as such, is clothed with the power of exercising the office of governor, he has no right to preside over the senate or to vote as a member of that body?'

"There is a provision of the Maine constitution which, to some extent, impairs, but by no means destroys, the value of this decision as an authority in the case now under consideration. It is to the effect that while the president of the senate exercises the office of governor his duties as president of the senate shall be suspended and a president pro tempore elected. Clearly Hall had no right to preside over the senate, for the constitutton expressly suspended his functions as president of that body while exercising the office of governor, and the court was certainly right in so holding. But the court went further and declared Hall had no right to vote in the senate.

"I have one other case, and only one, to which I desire to call attention, which I think is very important in this connection, and it is the case reported, as I have stated to the Senate, in II Oregon Reports, page 389, of Chadwick v. Earhart.

"By the constitution of the State of Oregon it is provided:

"'In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state; and in case of the removal from office, death, resignation, or inability both of the governor and secretary of state the president of the senate shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor elected.'

"This case arose in this way: The governor of the State was elected to the United States Senate and resigned the governorship, and thereupon, under the provision of the constitution just quoted, the secretary of state entered upon the performance of the duties of governor. The contention was whether the secretary of state was entitled to the salary of governor.

"Chief Justice Waldo, delivering the opinion of the court—and the case is stated in the opinion very fully—said:

"'Two questions are submitted in this case. The first and principal one is whether, when, under section 8 of Article V of the constitution of Oregon, the duties of the office of governor devolve upon the secretary of state, he has a right to the salary of the office.

"'Counsel for the respondent claims that, in the contingency provided for in said section 8, the duties of the office of governor become annexed to the office of secretary of state and are discharged as duties incident to the latter office; in other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolve upon the secretary of state.

"'This position seems to require, first, either that the office of governor should continue vacant during the time the secretary discharges its duties, and that such duties be in some way performed by the secretary of state, as such, consistently with a condition of vacancy; or, second, that the office be filled, and yet he who fills it be in nowise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.'

"I think the case is on all fours with the one we have here.

"'In the first place it is not shown how an office can be vacant and yet there be a person—not the deputy or locum tenens of another—empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does in fact discharge them. It is not explained how in such a case the duties can be separated from the office so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office; and, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor.

"'It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office. Hence, given a public office and one who, duly empowered, discharges its duties, and we have an incumbent of that office. Such is the case here. The secretary of state, by force of the function cast upon him, becomes governor, and consequently entitled to the salary appertaining to the office.'

"It seems to me, in conclusion, in the light of reason and authority, that when Governor Marvil died and Watson entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, he became the executive of the State, and, by reason thereof, was prohibited by the constitution from discharging the duties of senator, and that his participation in the proceedings of the joint assembly of May 9, 1895, and vote therein for United States Senator were without authority of law and wholly void."

[Extracts from remarks of Mr. Gray in opposition to the resolution declaring that Mr. Du Pont was entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Delaware. Found in the proceedings of April 15, 1896, in the Congressional Record, vol. 28, pp. 3982, 3983, 3984.]

"Mr. President, at the outset, it is proper to remark, in view of what has been said by all the Senators who have spoken in support of this claim, that all fair prepossessions founded upon the merits, founded upon the situation in the State of Delaware, are in favor of the propositions that I now support and which have been supported by the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in opposition to the claim of Mr. Du Pont. If Mr. Du Pont shall be seated, he will be seated because a community in the State of Delaware has been disfranchised; he will be seated because one of the regularly elected members of the legislature, upon which the duty of electing a United States Senator devolved, has been deprived of the right to exercise the function of an elector, and thereby made a result possible which, if he had not been thus deprived, could not have been brought about. In other words, Mr. President, those who support the claim of Mr. Du Pont to a seat in this body can only hope to be successful by the accident of a vacancy in representation, which they argue has been brought about under the provisions of the constitution of Delaware.

"No one doubts that if every person elected to the legislature of the State of Delaware by the people of that State was present and voting when the election for United States Senator was being held Mr. Du Pont would not be seated. No one doubts that if Kent County, in the State of Delaware, had its full representation, which it had elected under the constitution, in that electoral body that Mr. Du Pont would not have been chosen. So that, if he should be admitted here and it should be declared that he was elected and entitled to a seat in this body, it would be by reason of this casus in the situation in the State of Delaware, and not by reason of the will of the people as expressed when they elected the members of the legislature.

"The parts of the constitution of the State of Delaware with which we are principally concerned in this discussion are those which I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read for me. They are from article 2 which treats of legislative power.

* * * * * * *

"It is submitted, sir, that a careful and intelligent reading of these provisions would not leave a doubt of the following propositions:

"First. That the scheme of the Delaware constitution provides for a governor, to be elected by the people, in whom the supreme executive powers of the State shall be vested, who shall hold his office for a term of four years, and shall have certain prescribed qualifications, and not be eligible for a second time to the office.

"Second. That no other than one so elected for the term and with the qualifications prescribed by the constitution is a governor in the full constitutional sense.

"Third. That the framers of that constitution, regarding the vicissitudes of human life, have provided in case of the death of a governor so elected that the duties of the office shall be discharged by a person holding a place of high dignity in the legislative department of the government, to wit, the speaker of the senate, who is necessarily a senator elected to represent one of the counties of the State.

"Fourth. That the speaker, upon whom the constitution in such a contingency devolves the exercise of the office, exercises a temporary and ad interim function until a governor in the full constitutional sense can be elected by the people. That he does not exercise the office for a full term of four years or for the remainder of the term of the deceased governor, but only until an election of governor can be had. It may be only for a few weeks.

"Fifth. That the constitution in devolving this temporary ad interim function upon the speaker of the senate has not provided that thereby such speaker shall vacate the place of a senator from the county to which he was elected; and the whole scheme of the constitution negatives any implication of the intent to create such a vacancy.

"The speaker of the senate in such cases is a guardian of the gubernatorial office, like the civil law term in loco parentis—in loco gubernatoris—custos, like the great seal, being "in commission" when there is no chancellor.

"Those are cases which seem to me analogous and most like the provision that is made by the Delaware constitution for the contingency of the death of a governor elected by the people. All of these exercises of authority are well understood and well known as not conferring either the rank or the power or the substance of the office, but are stop-gaps. They are made for a temporary emergency, which it was thought best should be provided for in order that the machinery of government might not break down. It does not require any refined exegesis to explain that to the plain people of the State for whom constitutions are made. They can understand that one officer may, upon a temporary emergency, exercise the duties of another office without stepping into the shoes of that officer, or being or becoming the officer whose duties he is performing. It is a thing which belongs to the common affairs of everyday life, and when the constitution makers of Delaware framed this provision to meet a temporary emergency they knew they were speaking to people who would understand the machinery that had been provided to meet the case that was described.

It is inconceivable that intelligent men, engaged in the serious business of framing the organic law of a State, should have neglected to expressly declare and provide for a vacancy in the representation in the senate from a county, if one was intended or contemplated, when the speaker of the senate should exercise the office of governor upon the happening of a contingency for which they were then providing.

Imagine that having done that, these framers of the organic law of Delaware, having devolved that duty upon the speaker of the senate of Delaware as a stop-gap, should have been confronted with the suggestion, "You have probably made a vacancy in the office or position or place of representative in the senate from Kent County, or Newcastle, or Sussex," and they said, as the Senator from Oregon declares in effect they said, "Oh, well, let it go; we will leave it open for construction when the occasion arises." Or suppose they had been told that "there was an American system, an American common law," that was so binding, that was so well understood, so all-pervasive that of its own force it would work a vacancy, as was said by the Senator from New Hampshire yesterday. If there was such a law, as claimed by the Senator from New Hampshire, we must presume that those framers of the constitution of Delaware understood it as well as he—that John M. Clayton, George Read, James Rogers, Willard Hall, and Charles Polk and their colleagues knew as much about the American system as even the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. Yet we are asked by the distinguished Senator to believe that these men were confronted with this American doctrine which is said created a vacancy in the representation from a county, depriving the constituency of one-third of its representation, they said, "We will not provide for it; let it go; let one-third of the people of that county go unrepresented." Vacancy in the representation of a county where there are only three to represent it is about as important a matter as a vacancy in the executive office, and yet we are told that those men, confronted with that situation, were willing that the vacancy should go unprovided for, and never wrote one line to show that they recognized that vacancy, much less to provide for filling it.

"I am here to defend my State from the imputation of ever having had a constitutional convention composed of men so fatuous, so unfitted for the high duty they were called upon to perform, that when confronted with an exigency like that they did not have intelligence enough to deal with it. Oh, no, Mr. President; I said it was inconceivable. So it is. When they said that the duties of the office shall devolve upon the senator who happens to be speaker, it never entered their heads that they were vacating the office of senator from one of the counties, or else we know they would have provided for the filling of that vacancy.

"We are not to make pawns of the rights of the citizens of a State upon the political chessboard. We are not to gamble away the rights of great communities and to stultify our own common sense in order to accomplish a predetermined purpose or end. Constitutions, as I said a while ago, are made for the plain people of a State. They were meant to be interpreted by those plain rules which govern the meaning of the English language, in which they are written, and it will not do here in this high place by argumentation, by dialectics, by refined and subtle reasoning, to reason away the plain, obvious, common-sense meaning of these great charters, and leave the people dazed and amazed at the consequences of what they themselves have done."

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of the same members mentioned in the statement preceding the report in the case of Henry A. Du Pont, supra.]

HENRY A. DU PONT.

MARCH 1, 1897.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the petition of Henry A. Du Pont, of the State of Delaware, claiming a seat in the Senate from that State by virtue of an election by the legislature thereof on May 9, 1895, have considered the same and report:

Mr. Du Pont presented to the Senate, December 4, 1895, a petition for admission as Senator from the State of Delaware for what then remained unexpired of the term beginning March 4, 1895.

It appeared that at a joint convention of the two houses of the legislature of the State of Delaware, duly held on the 9th day of May, 1895, 15 votes were cast for Mr. Du Pont and 15 votes for other candidates. One of the votes cast for other candidates was the vote of the acting governor of the State of Delaware, who had succeeded to the executive chair on the death of the governor. He was a senator and the speaker of the Delaware senate at the time of the alleged election, the term of office for which he had been elected for senator and speaker having not expired. If he were entitled to vote, Mr. Du Pont was not lawfully elected. If he were not so entitled, Mr. Du Pont had a majority of 1 vote. The question of his right to vote depended upon the question whether his accession to the executive chair by virtue of the constitution of the State should deprive him of his title to vote as a senator.

That question was the only one raised in the discussion of Mr. Du Pont's title to a seat in the Senate. The Committee on Privileges and Elections reported in his favor and there was a full discussion of the question.

On the 15th day of May, 1896, the Senate passed the following resolution by a majority of 1 vote:

"Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895."

Mr. Du Pont now prays to have this question reopened. The grounds of his application, as stated in his petition and by his eminent counsel in an argument addressed to the committee, are:

First. That there was a mistake in the pairs as announced when the vote on this resolution was taken, so that a Senator who was in favor of Mr. Du Pont was paired against him. On investigation we find that no such mistake occurred, and that every Senator who desired to vote who was in favor of Mr. Du Pont either voted for him or was paired in his favor.

Second. That the petitioner expects to satisfy the Senate that it was wrong in its construction of the constitution of Delaware when it held that the vote of the acting governor for another candidate than Mr. Du Pont was lawful.

New Senators have entered the chamber since the resolution just cited was adopted. Nothing else has changed. The case then stated and acted upon is the case now stated. The simple question is: Whether the Senate, notwithstanding its decision of May 15, 1896, will now admit Mr. Du Pont to a seat?

The majority of your committee now, as then, are of the opinion that this decision of the Senate was wrong; but the Senate is made by the Constitution the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its members, and its judgment is just as binding in law, in all constitutional vigor and potency when it is rendered by one majority as when it is unanimous.

It is clear that the word "judge" in the Constitution was used advisedly. The Senate in the case provided for is to declare a result depending upon the application of law to existing facts, and is not to be affected in its action by the desire of its members or by their opinions as to public policies or public interest. Its action determines great constitutional rights—the title of an individual citizen to a high office and the title of a sovereign State to be represented in the Senate by the person of its choice. We can not doubt that this declaration of the Senate is a judgment in the sense in which that word is used by judicial tribunals. We can conceive of no case which can arise in human affairs where it is more important that a judgment of any court should be respected and should stand unaffected by caprice or anything likely to excite passion or to tempt virtue. When the Senate decided the question it was sitting as a high constitutional court. In its action we think it ought to respect the principles, in giving effect to its own decision, which have been established in other judicial tribunals in like cases and which the experience of mankind has found safe and salutary.

We do not doubt that the Senate, like other courts, may review its own judgments where new evidence has been discovered, or where by reason of fraud or accident it appears that the judgment ought to be reviewed. The remedy which in other courts may be given by writs or review or error or bills of review may doubtless be given here by a simple vote reversing the first adjudication. We have no doubt that a legal doctrine involved in a former judgment of the Senate may be overruled in later cases. But there is no case known in other judicial tribunals in which a final judgment in the same case can be rescinded or reversed merely because the composition of the court has changed or because the members of the court who originally decided it have changed their mind as to the law or fact which is involved.

It seems to us very important to the preservation of constitutional government, very important to the dignity and authority of the Senate, very important to the peace of the country, that we should abide by this principle. There are few greater temptations which affect the conduct of men than the temptation to seize upon political power without regard to the obligation of law. To act upon the doctrine upon which this petition rests would expose the Senate to the temptation to reverse its own judgments and to vacate or to award seats in this Chamber according as the changing majorities should make possible. If such practice should be admitted it would, in our opinion, go far to weaken the respect due to this body and the respect due to constitutional authority.

The term of Anthony Higgins as Senator from the State of Delaware expired March 3, 1895. After the decision by the Senate that Henry A. Du Pont was not elected to the office of United States Senator by the legislature of the State of Delaware, and on the 21st day of January, 1897, a paper was presented in the Senate certifying to the election of John Edward Addicks as Senator from the State of Delaware on the 20th day of January, 1897, for the term beginning March 4, 1895. These credentials purported to be signed by the speaker of the senate of the State of Delaware, the speaker of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware, and the clerk of the senate and the clerk of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware. February 5, 1897, the credentials of Richard R. Kenney were presented in the Senate duly signed by the governor of the State of Delaware and certifying to the election of said Richard R. Kenney on the 19th day of January, 1897, as a Senator from said State for the term ending March 3, 1901. These credentials being in due form, Mr. Kenney was admitted to a seat in the Senate.

March 19, 1897, the petition of John Edward Addicks was presented in the Senate, claiming that he, said John Edward Addicks, was elected to the Senate of the United States on the 20th day of January, 1897, by the legislature of the State of Delaware, and alleging certain facts in relation to the election of Richard R. Kenney from which the petitioner asserted that Mr. Kenney was not legally elected to that office. This petition was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but no report concerning the matter was made by the committee nor was any further action taken by the Senate in reference to such petition.

The history of the case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate in said case as published in the Congressional Record, and the remarks of Mr. Hoar on the occasion of the presenting of the credentials of Mr. Kenney.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 21, 1897.

Mr. Chandler presented the following paper, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"DELAWARE, ss:

"Be it known that the legislature of the State of Delaware did, on the 20th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1897, at an election in due manner held according to the form of the act of the general assembly of said State in such case made and provided, choose John Edward Addicks to be a Senator from said State in the Senate of the United States for the constitutional term from the 3d day of March, in the year of our Lord 1895.

"Given under our hands in obedience to the said act of the general assembly the day and year aforesaid.

"ROBERT J. HANBY,
"Speaker of the Senate.

"THOMAS C. MOORE,
"Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"GEO. W. ROGERS,
"Clerk of the Senate.

"CHAS. R. HASTINGS,
"Clerk of the House of Representatives.

FRIDAY, February 5, 1897.

Mr. Gray presented the credentials of Richard W. Kenney as a Senator from the State of Delaware. The credentials were read, as follows:

"STATE OF DELAWARE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

"To the President of the Senate of the United States:

"This is to certify that on the 19th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1897, Richard R. Kenney was duly elected by the legislature of Delaware a Senator to represent said State in the Senate of the United States, to fill a vacancy existing in the representation of said State for the term ending the 3d day of March, A. D. 1901.

"Witness his excellency, our governor, Ebe W. Tunnell, and our seal hereunto affixed, at Dover, this 21st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1897, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and twenty-first.

"EBE W. TUNNELL.

"By the governor:

"WM. H. BRYCE, Secretary of State."

Mr. Kenney being present, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 29, pp. 1559, 1560.)

[Remarks of Mr. Hoar on the occasion of the presenting of the credentials of Mr. Kenney as a Senator from the State of Delaware. Found in the proceedings of February 5, 1897, in the Congressional Record, vol. 29, pp. 1559, 1560.]

"Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement also before the Senate admits this gentleman to a seat.

"At the last session of the Senate the Senate determined by a majority of 1, I think (I was not present when the final vote took place, being absent in consequence of illness), that Mr. Henry A. Du Pont was not entitled to a seat in the Senate. The result necessarily involved in that determination was the decision of the Senate that a vacancy existed from the State of Delaware.

"I suppose it is unnecessary to say that I dissented from the opinion on which that vote of the Senate was based. The question was whether the acting governor, formerly speaker of the senate and formerly a member of the senate, was disqualified from voting under the Delaware constitution by his accepting and entering upon the then vacant office of governor. I thought then and think now that it was just such an act of usurped authority when he undertook to vote as it would have been if President Johnson or President Arthur had come back to the Senate here and undertaken to preside as Vice-President and to give a casting vote on some important question. I never have changed that opinion and I have no great doubt about it; but the Senate adjudged otherwise.

"The Senate is made by the Constitution the judge of the election and qualification of its members, and its judgment is just as binding in law, in all constitutional vigor and potency, when it is rendered by 1 majority as when it is unanimous. I remember very well what I think was one of the most admirable public utterances of the late James G. Blaine. The year after his own party had nearly lost the State government by an attempted fraud and usurpation on the part of their antagonists there was a contested election, that party then being in power. It was very close, and Mr. Blaine declared that 1 majority for Plaisted was as good as a thousand in entitling Mr. Blaine's opponent, Governor Plaisted, to the seat.

"Now, what was the effect of that judgment of the Senate? It seems to me that it was the same as the judgment of a court would have been fixing the rights of parties. It may be undoubtedly reviewed for newly discovered evidence; it may undoubtedly be vacated for an error in the record, as if we should discover that one or two Senators who were recorded as voting one way in fact voted another way. I suppose it could be vacated if it should turn out, to use an illustration that some one else made in my hearing recently, that that governor, when it was supposed he voted in the Delaware legislature, was falsely impersonated by some one else and was not there at all. But, although parliamentary proceedings differ in form from those of courts, the great rule on which the safety of all human property and transactions depend, established in courts of justice, ought in substance to govern us here.

"There has been an application on the part of Mr. Du Pont—whom I respect personally, whom I eagerly desire should have a seat in this body, and who I think ought to have had one on the merits of his case—to reopen that case. No newly discovered evidence is suggested; no fraud or mistake is suggested. The reopening of the case would merely be a reconsideration of a question of constitutional law which this great constitutional court has decided once. That is all he asks and that is all he would obtain if his prayer for a reopening of the case were granted.

"That petition was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and after a very able and interesting argument in favor of Mr. Du Pont by Mr. Garland, late Attorney-General—and it is not necessary to say that any argument that gentleman makes will be able and interesting—the committee unanimously decided this morning that there had been an adjudication by the Senate and that nothing further remained to be done. It was unanimously decided with the exception of one member, who was not prepared to determine what was his duty at the particular time.

"Mr. President, I propose to act upon that doctrine. I think it is very important for constitutional government, very important to the dignity and authority of the Senate, very important for the peace of the country that we should stand by these principles.

"It is a very unpleasant thing to me that Mr. Du Pont is not to take his seat, and that some one else is to take it. But it would be a very bad thing for every citizen of this country unless the Senate of the United States could act and could be known to act upon great questions where right and righteousness are involved in pursuance of a law other and higher than its own desire.

"If it be true that Mr. Du Pont was not legally elected, or if it be true that that question has been settled by a judgment of the Senate, it follows that there is a vacancy, and that there was a vacancy at the time of the alleged election of Mr. Kenney, in the office of Senator from the State of Delaware; and there being a vacancy under the Constitution and statute of the United States, the credential in due form, signed by the executive of that State, gives the gentleman who now applies for the seat a prima facie title to the seat, subject, as has been suggested by my honorable friend from New Hampshire, to reexamination on the merits hereafter, if that reexamination shall be desired. I therefore assent to the request of the Senator from Delaware that the oath be administered."

FRIDAY, March 19, 1897.

Mr. BURROWS. I present the petition of John Edward Addicks, a citizen of the State of Delaware, setting forth that on the 20th day of January, 1897, by a majority of the duly elected and qualified members of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Delaware, he was duly elected a United States Senator to fill the vacancy in the United States Senate occasioned by the expiration of the term of Anthony Higgins, and that he was denied the usual and formal certificate of election to which he was entitled. He further sets forth that the Hon. R. R. Kenney, now holding a seat in the United States Senate, was not duly and legally elected to fill the vacancy and is not legally entitled to his seat; that a majority of the citizens who met and assumed to act as the legislature of said State and went through the form of electing Mr. Kenney were never elected, but usurped the office of members of the legislature. The petitioner further contests the right of said Kenney to occupy a seat in the United States Senate, and affirms that Mr. Kenney was not legally elected thereto.

The petition further states that the three counties in the State of Delaware, which comprise its entire territory, elected at the last election seven members of the legislature from each of the counties, and that a canvass of the ballots since the election shows that in two counties—the county of Kent and the county of Sussex—the Republican candidates, seven from each county, were elected, or fourteen members of the lower house, and that, in substance, the members elected, with those holding over, constituted a majority of the legislature in both houses. The petitioner prays that the matter may be investigated and his right to a seat in the Senate passed upon by the Senate. I move that the petitition be printed and that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GRAY. * * * I wish to state that as a matter of fact there has been no canvass, in the legal or official sense of that term, of the voters of those two counties since the election.

The memorial was ordered to be printed as a document and to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, February 21, 1901.

Mr. Chandler submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Richard R. Kenney, a Senator from the State of Delaware, the sum of $500 in reimbursement of expenses necessarily incurred by him in defense of his title to a seat."

FRIDAY, February 22, 1901.

Mr. Pettus, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That there should be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Senator Richard R. Kenney, of Delaware, the sum of $488, the amount expended by him in defending his right to a seat in the Senate."

THURSDAY, February 28, 1901.

Mr. Jones, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported by Mr. Pettus from the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the 22d instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MARCUS A. HANNA,

Senator from Ohio.

Marcus A. Hanna was chosen by the legislature of the State of Ohio a Senator from that State for the remaining portion of the term ending March 3, 1899, in place of John Sherman, who resigned to accept the office of Secretary of State of the United States. Mr. Hanna appeared January 17, 1898, and took his seat in the Senate without objection. Subsequently, and on the 28th day of May, 1898, a certified copy of the report of the committee appointed by the senate of the State of Ohio to investigate charges of bribery in the election of Mr. Hanna to the Senate of the United States was filed and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. On the 28th day of February, 1899, the committee submitted a report asking to be discharged from further consideration of the report of the State senate of Ohio. A minority of the committee submitted a minority report recommending further inquiry and investigation. One member of the committee did not join in either the majority or the minority report, but submitted a separate report for himself. No further action was taken by the Senate in the case, but on the 5th day of June, 1900, the matter was referred to by Mr. Pettigrew in debate, and by request of Mr. Foraker the entire report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the case was inserted in the Record.

The history of the case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate in the case, as published in the Congressional Record, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the report of the minority of the committee, and the separate report of Mr. Allen, a member of the committee, and also a reference to the proceedings in the Senate during which the entire report of the committee was ordered to be printed in the Record.

State of Ohio, pursuant to senate resolution No. 21, to investigate the charges of bribery in the election of Hon. Marcus A. Hanna to the Senate of the United States, submitted a written report, which was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

Mr. Turley submitted a minority report, which was also ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

Mr. Allen submitted a report for himself in relation to which the same order was made.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Chandler (chairman), Hoar, Burrows, Pritchard, Spooner, Faulkner, Caffery, Allen, and Pettus.]

ELECTION OF HON. M. A. HANNA.

FEBRUARY 28, 1899.—Ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. Chandler, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report on the charges of bribery in the election of Hon. M. A. Hanna to the Senate of the United States:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred the certified copy of the report of the committee appointed by the senate of Ohio to investigate the charges of bribery in the election of Hon. Marcus A. Hanna to the Senate of the United States, having considered the same, report back to the Senate said certified copy, and further report as follows:

This certified copy of the report of the senate of Ohio, being a typewritten document, was presented to the United States Senate by the Vice-President on May 28, 1898, having been received by him through the mails, and was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections on motion of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Teller), but no order for printing was made. It has, however, been put in type for the use of the committee. The contents of the certified copy are the "Report of the committee appointed by the senate of Ohio," including the testimony, of which 500 copies were printed by the Ohio senate, and the report further ordered to be printed in the appendix of the State senate journal. The closing paragraph of the report, signed by the chairman and three members, recommends its adoption by the State senate and that a copy thereof, with the testimony, "be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the United States, of which Senator Hanna is a member, for such action as it may deem advisable." The clerk of the State senate, in certifying on May 26, 1898, that the papers transmitted were a true and correct copy of the report of the committee, adds as to the report the words "and adopted by the Ohio senate."

From the above statement it will be seen that no direct remonstrance, memorial, or protest setting out that Mr. Hanna was not elected Senator or that he ought to be expelled, coming from parties asserting readiness to prosecute their charges, has been presented to the Senate. Nor has the reception on May 28, 1898, of the certified copy of the State senate report been followed up by any appearance before this committee of any prosecuting parties or by the submission to the committee of any additional papers from any source. Nevertheless, the committee have given an examination to the report of the Ohio State senate committee, the points of the same, concisely stated, being as follows:

The specific charge is what the committee call "four main facts" stated in language as follows:

"The evidence taken by your committee, in its judgment, proves four main facts:

"1. That on or about January 9, 1898, an attempt was made to bribe John C. Otis, a member of the house of representatives of the present general assembly of the State of Ohio, to vote for Marcus A. Hanna for United States Senator.

"2. That Henry H. Boyce was the principal offender in the commission of that crime.

"3. That Maj. E. G. Rathbone and Maj. Charles F. Dick were agents of Marcus A. Hanna, and procured, aided, and abetted Henry H. Boyce to commit that crimes

"4. That H. H. Hollenbeck aided said Henry H. Boyce in committing that crime."

Although there is no evidence that Mr. Hanna had knowledge of the alleged attempt to bribe Mr. Otis, the State senate committee argue that the proven relations of the above parties to Mr. Hanna are persuasive to the conclusion that he knew and sanctioned what they did.

The only other point made by the State senate committee is that Hollenbeck and Boyce evaded the jurisdiction of the committee and that Messrs. Rathbone and Dick, and Mr. Hanna himself, omitted to appear in response to subpœnas and invitations sent them by registered mail.

The above report of the State senate committee appears to have been adopted by the Ohio State senate on April 23, 1898, by a vote of 19 yeas to 17 nays. Senator James R. Garfield made a minority report dated April 23, 1898, a copy of which is herewith submitted, in which he reviews the evidence and declares his belief that the conclusions of the majority report are "contrary to the acts presented." He further argues that the Otis case was the outcome of "a scheme carefully prepared and executed by the opponents of Mr. Hanna to secure his defeat by making this charge of bribery during the last days of the Senatorial contest."

The report of the State senate committee does not show the proceedings of the Ohio legislature when Mr. Hanna was elected Senator, but the record of the ballotings is as follows:

The votes of Tuesday, January 11, 1898, were, in the house: Mr. Hanna 56, all others 53; in the senate: Mr. Hanna 17, all others 19; being 73 for Mr. Hanna and 72 for all others.

On Wednesday, January 12, the joint balloting resulted as follows: Mr. Hanna 73, all others 71; and Mr. Hanna was declared elected.

Mr. John C. Otis did not vote for Mr. Hanna, but on both days voted for Robert E. McKisson, and his vote is included in the 72 and 71 opposition votes above given.

There is no proof submitted either (1) that Mr. Hanna was elected Senator through bribery, or (2) that he had any agents engaged in carrying on his canvass for the Senate who were directly or impliedly authorized by him to resort to corrupt methods or any form of wrongdoing, or (3) that he had any personal knowledge of the facts of the Otis case. It may be said that there is no evidence which fairly tends to prove either of the foregoing three propositions.

Upon the view of the case thus briefly stated, the Committee on Privileges and Elections has reached the conclusion that the United States Senate is not called upon to take any action in the premises. The utmost fact which the committee of the State senate claim to have proved is that an attempt was made to bribe Mr. Otis, which failed. Without further facts than this the validity of Mr. Hanna's election will stand unimpeached, and the Senate is not called upon to search for further facts in the absence of any specification of such facts or of any distinct suggestion where they may be found, the whole demand of the State senate report that Mr. Hanna be expelled from the United States Senate being rested upon the Otis case.

Whether, even if this unsuccessful attempt at bribery in the case of Representative Otis were fastened upon the representatives of Senator Hanna by undoubted proof, the Senate would be called upon to take any action is not by any means clear. Certainly without strong evidence that Senator Hanna himself had knowledge of the transaction the Senate would hardly be justified in doing more than expose the facts for condemnation by public opinion; and the exposure of such facts as the State senate say were proved has already been accomplished by the State senate report, while there is no direct evidence, and substantially no presumptive evidence, that Senator Hanna had any knowledge of what was going on.

Moreover, it seems clear to this committee that it would not be justified in recommending any action whatever to be taken by the Senate without further testimony to be taken by the committee. The question whether additional evidence should be taken has been the only difficult question which the committee has considered. It is clear that Mr. Otis never had any intention of yielding to bribery. He encouraged Mr. Boyce, by the advice of others, only in order to entrap him. Then he carefully withdrew and substituted his attorney, Mr. Campbell, to continue the negotiations. Mr. Campbell labored to induce Mr. Boyce to offer money, and finally, as he says, obtained $1,750 from him as part payment on $3,500 to be paid for Mr. Otis's vote for Mr. Hanna, leaving $6,500 to be paid if Mr. Hanna was elected. At this point public exposure through Mr. Otis, Mr. Campbell, and their associates took place. Mr. Boyce disappeared and the incident was closed.

That Mr. Boyce, operating at Cincinnati, where Mr. Otis lived, had relations with Mr. Hanna's representatives at Columbus, the State capital, the State senate committee undertook to prove by the evidence of various detectives, professional and amateur, who listened at telephone wires and shadowed Mr. Boyce, Mr. Hollenbeck, and others. The effort of the committee was carefully and skillfully made. It was not wholly devoid of results. It raises suspicions that Mr. Hanna's representatives at Columbus knew what Mr. Boyce was doing. But this whole line of inquiry would require verification by testimony to be taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections before that committee would be willing to found conclusions thereon.

In reaching the opinion that the Senate is not called upon to take further testimony the committee are not unmindful of the fact that many witnesses refused to testify when they appeared before the State senate committee, and that Mr. Hanna and his representatives had subpœnas sent to them by mail and did not respond. Mr. Garfield in his minority report states the alleged reasons why Mr. Hanna did not appear, namely, that a fair and impartial hearing was impossible because of the known hostility of the chairman of the committee, and because the committee at its first meeting decided to refuse to allow any person whose name was connected with the investigation "to appear in person and be represented by counsel."

The reasons why the Committee on Privileges and Elections do not decide to ask for power to take testimony may be restated as follows:

I.

The belief, heretofore suggested, that even if the unsuccessful attempt at bribery into which Messrs. Otis and Campbell led Mr. Boyce were to be proved as alleged by the State senate committee, the United States Senate would not feel called upon to do more than has already been done by the State senate, namely, expose the transaction to public view. To go over again the whole ground covered by the State senate merely for the purpose of such additional exposure would be tedious, expensive, and unnecessary.

II.

The fact that no case of bribery beyond the Otis case and no further specific corrupt acts are alleged or suggested. The beginning and the end of the State senate report is the Otis case.

III.

The fact that there has been no demand for the prosecution of the inquiry coming from the State of Ohio, except by the transmission by the chief clerk of the Ohio State senate of the senate report, as hereinbefore stated, to the United States Senate for "such action as it may deem advisable." This was received by the Senate on May 28, 1898, and referred to this committee, and from that time to this, as hereinbefore stated, no further interest has apparently been taken in the subject by any resident of the State of Ohio.

The committee do not doubt that if facts appeared from the report of the committee of the State senate requiring the United States Senate, out of a proper regard for its own reputation, to take further testimony concerning Mr. Hanna's election it would be the duty of the Senate to proceed without waiting for further prosecution of the case coming from residents of the State of Ohio. But, taking the case as it stands and noting the absence of such prosecution, the conclusion of the committee is not to ask the Senate for authority and direction to take further testimony, but to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the report of the State senate of Ohio.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. Turley, from the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following views in the matter of the report of the committee appointed by the senate of the State of Ohio to investigate the charges of bribery in the election of Hon. M. A. Hanna to the Senate of the United States.

We can not concur in the report of the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the matter of the report of the committee appointed by the senate of the State of Ohio to investigate the charges of bribery in the election of Hon. M. A. Hanna to the Senate of the United States.

The charge is that early in January, 1898, an attempt was made by H. H. Boyce and others to bribe John C. Otis, a member of the house of representatives of the general assembly of the State of Ohio, to vote for Marcus A. Hanna for the Senate of the United States.

Among other things, the majority of the committee say:

"Moreover, it seems clear to this committee that it would not be justified in recommending any action to be taken by the Senate without further testimony to be taken by the committee. The question whether additional evidence should be taken has been the only difficult question which the committee has considered. It is clear that Mr. Otis never had any intention of yielding to bribery. He encouraged Mr. Boyce by the advice of others only in order to entrap him. Then he carefully withdrew and substituted his attorney, Mr. Campbell, to continue the negotiations. Mr. Campbell labored to induce Mr. Boyce to offer money, and finally, as he says, obtained $1,750 from him as part payment on $3,500 to be paid for Mr. Otis's vote for Mr. Hanna, leaving $6,500 to be paid if Mr. Hanna was elected. At this point public exposure, through Mr. Otis, Mr. Campbell, and their associates, took place. Mr. Boyce disappeared, and the incident was closed.

"That Mr. Boyce, operating in Cincinnati, where Mr. Otis lives, had relations with Mr. Hanna's representatives at Columbus, the State capital, the State senate committee undertook to prove by the evidence of various detectives, professional and amateur, who listened at telephone wires and shadowed Mr. Boyce, Mr. Hollenbeck, and others. The effort of the committee was carefully and skillfully made. It was not wholly devoid of results; it raises pregnant suspicions that Mr. Hanna's representatives at Columbus knew what Mr. Boyce was doing. But this whole line of inquiry would require verification by testimony to be taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections before that committee would be willing to found conclusions thereon."

The attempt on the part of Boyce to buy Otis's vote for Mr. Hanna is clearly proven by Campbell, who, from his testimony, seems to have been a lawyer of large practice. One thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars was paid in cash by Boyce to Campbell as attorney for Otis. Boyce agreed to pay $1,750 more when Otis reached Columbus and a balance of $6,500 if Mr. Hanna was elected.

We will now refer to portions of the evidence before the committee of the State senate of Ohio bearing upon the relations existing between Mr. Boyce while at Cincinnati and Mr. Hanna's representatives at Columbus. It is shown that Mr. Hanna and Majors Dick and Rathbone (Dick and Rathbone being managers for Mr. Hanna) were at the Neil House, in Columbus, Ohio, where Mr. Hanna had his headquarters, for a part of three weeks preceding January 12, 1898. The private telephone used in Mr. Hanna's headquarters was No. 1092.

Otis testifies that on Friday, January 7, 1898, about 11 o'clock, he was called up over the telephone from the Great Southern Hotel at Columbus by a General Boyce. He had never heard of Boyce before. Boyce stated that he "had come on from New York to see Otis on important business and had reached Columbus on Wednesday about two hours after Otis had left." The result of the conversation was that Boyce and Otis agreed to meet at the Gibson House that evening. Later in the day Boyce telegraphed Otis that he would reach Cincinnati at 5.30 o'clock. Otis says he met Boyce at the Gibson House between 5.30 and 6 o'clock that evening and had a conversation with him in which the senatorial question was discussed and they agreed to meet again the next evening. Myers, a clerk at the Gibson House, testified that at about 6.40 p. m. on the 7th of January a call came over the telephone from Columbus for General Boyce, but he could not be found at the time. It was repeated a little later on, at which time General Boyce was standing in the lobby. He was at once called to the telephone in the hotel office. Myers said he heard Boyce say, "Hello, Major Dick!" and speak of Hanna being sore.

This conversation, as far as he heard it, Myers says he repeated to the manager of the hotel, who told him if Boyce wished to use the telephone again to arrange for him to use the one in the manager's private office, which was numbered 548. It seems the two telephones were so connected that a person listening at the telephone in the hotel office could overhear everything which passed through the telephone in the manager's private office. Now, the books of the telephone company in Columbus show that on January 7 there was but one call from telephone 1092 at the Hanna headquarters to telephone 548, Gibson House, and that was at about 8 p. m. Myers testifies further that Boyce went to the theater after supper on the night of the 7th, returning to the hotel somewhere at about 10.45 p. m. In the meantime another call had come for him from Columbus. He was so notified and went to the telephone in the manager's private office and called up telephone 1092 at Columbus.

Myers said he listened at the telephone in the hotel office and heard all that was said, taking notes of same at the time. He says Boyce addressed the person in Columbus as "Major," told him he had seen "O," had arranged matters, and it would take $20,000 down; that the Major replied: "They did not know about that; they would see 'H,'" and that then there was an intermission of about five minutes, when the person at Columbus said they would give $10,000 down and $10,000 when it was over; and that the conversation continued concerning Mr. "O," and what they would pay him for his vote. The books of the telephone company in Cincinnati show that on the 7th of January, 1898, at about 11.20 p. m., Boyce, from telephone 548, called up Columbus and talked with Rathbone eleven minutes, and the telephone books in Columbus show that telephone 548 in Cincinnati called telephone 1092 in Columbus at about 11.15 p. m. on that day.

Myers and two other employees of the Gibson House testify that at about 12 o'clock the same night another call came from telephone 1092 at Columbus for Boyce. Myers claims to have overheard this conversation also, and to have taken notes of it, copies of which were produced in full, and which are as follows:

"COLUMBUS. Mr. Boyce in?

"CINCINNATI. Yes.

"COLUMBUS. Call him to long-distance telephone.

"CINCINNATI. Who wants him?
"COLUMBUS. Columbus does.
"CINCINNATI. All right; wait five minutes.
"BOYCE. Hello, Columbus! This you, Major?
"MAJOR. (Major) Yes.
"BOYCE. What do you want?
"MAJOR. Have been talking to H. and he says: 'Suppose he won't put signature on paper—what will we do?'
"BOYCE. I will fix that all right; but if I was in his place I would not sign paper, as it is a foolish play. His price is $20,000. (Dick is speaking to Hanna.)
"MAJOR. If he wants protection, exchange notes and accommodation papers with him, as that will protect both of you. He don't want him alarmed.
"BOYCE. How will you arrange matters?
"MAJOR. I will speak to Hanna. I will send Hollenbeck down in the morning. He will be there about 10; may be a little late. We are afraid that if Mr. O. falls out the rest will go to pieces. We will make it in a package and give it to Hollenbeck, so he can transfer it and not know what he is doing.
"BOYCE. What shall I pledge him to do?
"MAJOR. To vote for Hanna and the Hanna wing of the Republican party. I want you to make him feel as though he were among friends. Give him to understand that he will be treated as one of us, and we will not overlook him when the fight is over. The terms are $10,000 and the rest as soon as it is over. You want to meet Hollenbeck to-morrow and stay with him until he is ready to come back to Columbus, and then, if possible, come up with him.
"BOYCE. I will do as you say. I think everything is all right and in good shape. I am a very good judge of human nature, and I don't think that Mr. O. will betray us. If he should, I would have him killed.
"MAJOR (laughingly). Dead men tell no tales. Myers is up to some tricks again to-night.
"BOYCE. What is he doing?
"MAJOR. I only heard it mentioned.
"BOYCE. Major, you will hear good news from Washington Sunday morning over the long-distance phone.
"MAJOR. What is it about, and who is it from?
"BOYCE. I can't tell you, but it is away up and is of the best.
"MAJOR. As soon as your meeting is over to-morrow call me up and let me know what you did.
"BOYCE. Justing, of Fairfax County, is all right.
"MAJOR. I think Governor Bushnell is tired of the whole thing, and if he gets a chance he will give it up and drop out. Good night."

Hollenbeck, according to the evidence, did arrive at the Gibson House next morning, January 8, and had one or more interviews with Boyce. Miss Jacobs, a stenographer at the Gibson House, testifies that on January 8, at 1.30 p. m., she took notes of a conversation between Hollenbeck and some one at telephone 1092, Columbus. Her notes were produced and show the conversation to have been as follows:

"SATURDAY, January 8, 1898—1.30 p. m.

"HELLO. Will you tell 1092, at Columbus, that Hollenbeck is now at the Gibson House—that is, Mr. Hollenbeck? I will wait for him.
"Q. Hello. Is this long distance?—A. Yes.
"Q. Did you hear anything from Columbus?—A. The line in Columbus is busy now, but I will call you as soon as I can get them.
"Q. I will wait right here.

A little later.

"Mr. HOLLENBECK. Hello! This is Hollenbeck.
"COLUMBUS. Is this Hollenbeck?
"Mr. H. Yes.
"COLUMBUS. Say, hold that line and just wait a minute there. [After a few minutes' pause.] Hello!
"Mr. H. I did not succeed in finding Mr. Schmidlapp, but found another man who got the matter.
"COLUMBUS. Who got the other matter?
"Mr. H. The other man.
"COLUMBUS. Who was the other man?
"Mr. H. He is all right.
"COLUMBUS. But who is he?

"Mr. H. One of your friends—all right. He was up at Columbus the other day with you.

"COLUMBUS. To whom did you deliver the message?

"Mr. H. General Boyce.

"COLUMBUS. What became of the letter to Schmidlapp?

"Mr. H. The Schmidlapp letter was left with Mr. Schmidlapp.

"COLUMBUS. Did he see the letter?

"Mr. H. He was not in, but it was left with his private man.

"COLUMBUS. What was done with the draft?

"Mr. H. That was returned.

"COLUMBUS. What was done with the letter?

"Mr. H. The letter was left. You can reach Schmidlapp by telephone to St. Louis if you want him.

"COLUMBUS. I do not care for that.

"Mr. H. The General feels very well over the outlook.

"COLUMBUS. Did you find the other man?

"Mr. H. The other man has not come in yet.

"COLUMBUS. There is a telegram here dated at Springfield.

"Mr. H. I have not telegraphed. Have not said a word to anybody.

"COLUMBUS. That is strange.

"Mr. H. Shall I show the letter introducing me?

"COLUMBUS. Do as you think best. Here is the telegram I got. It reads: 'Springfield Depot, January 8, 1898. Party left train at Springfield.' That is the telegram received.

"Mr. H. I did not send any telegram to anybody. That is very funny. I was very careful not to be seen; went down dark alleys and byways.

"COLUMBUS. How about the General?

"Mr. H. I am not supposed to know anything about him, but he is very well and very happy over it.

"COLUMBUS. You have to be watchful.

"Mr. H. I will be that. Good-bye.

"(And telephone rang off.)"

The books of the telephone company in Columbus show that on January 8, at 1.30 p. m., telephone 1092 called telephone 548 in Cincinnati.

Otis says he had his second interview with Boyce at the Gibson House Saturday evening, January 8, 1898, at about 3 p. m.

Miss Jacobs says that about 6.45 p. m. on January 8 she took down a conversation between Boyce and Rathbone. Her notes are produced and show the conversation to have been as follows:

"SATURDAY, January 8, 1898—about 6.45.

"Major RATHBONE. Hello! Is this Gibson House?

"General BOYCE. Yes; we are still alive. My party has just gone. He has been here ever since 3. We have gone over the ground pretty thoroughly. A signed letter or telegram, which I am authorized to give the President out of deference to him—do you understand? He is all right; is very much interested. He is thoroughly convinced that if he did not come in that others would do it without him, but he says that neither Lane nor Droste will vote for Hanna. I want to tell you that. He can not do much with Droste. He says that Droste is jealous of him because he thought he got the inside of the speakership, but both of these men have asked him to help them about the committee. He thinks he could get Lane if he had somebody to go to Lane. He wanted to know if we counted the majority without that?

"COLUMBUS. We do.

"BOYCE. But of course we want them both.

"COLUMBUS. Yes.

"BOYCE. Can you make any suggestion at all? Well, I think the line for him to work on is that one to help out the committee, and he will do as they want him to do. I think that is the line to work on. We shall go up together on the train to-morrow, leaving here about 4 o'clock. Don't think that there will be anybody else on the train so far as we are interested. He thinks Droste is up there, and Lane, too.

"COLUMBUS. I don't know.

"BOYCE. He is eager now to do something more—authorizing the telegram. He is coming again to-night, and we will spend most of to-morrow together—dine together.

"COLUMBUS. How about telegrams?

"BOYCE. If he signed the statement and said he was going to vote for Hanna, that will answer. Don't you think it will?

'COLUMBUS. Yes; if he signs it.

"BOYCE. Well, I will tell you. One of the inducements you know as thoroughly—but that was not enough. He wants to be protected, etc. I told him he should be. I did not write any papers, because I did not want him to have any paper. He has not told anybody up to this time that he has been talking with me. He is afraid of Mason. Mason is going to give him some choice committee position, and, of course, he is shy of Mason. I suppose there is no hope for him.

"COLUMBUS. I do not know.

"BOYCE. When Otis comes up there and goes to Mason and says, 'The thing is all up, I am going with the others,' won't that help? Of course, if Mason knew that they were all going to break away, he would not be left in the lurch, would he?

"COLUMBUS. No; I do not think so.

"BOYCE. The whole atmosphere is in our favor.

"COLUMBUS. About this telegram; will you let me know when it is sent, just as soon as you can?

"BOYCE. I want to get your judgment. Both of us want to be judicious. We do not want to expose him to fight. You will see that he is taken care of in Washington.

"COLUMBUS. I can arrange at that end so there is no leak there. About that dispatch; if you send it, send it through the Postal and let me know as quickly as it goes.

"BOYCE. He is coming back here about 9 o'clock or so, and we will have another talk about these matters. Droste is a silver man and would have voted for Gray, but Otis would not have voted for Gray anyhow. In his mind was Kurtz and Bushnell when I opened the campaign.

"COLUMBUS. As soon as you come I would like to see you and have a conference with you. Supposing we meet at 10 o'clock, unless I notify you to the contrary, at 263 East Broad street at 10 o'clock.

"BOYCE. Will be at the Great Southern. We expect to leave here on the Pennsylvania line about 4 o'clock, but we are going to settle definitely to-night or to-morrow. Good-bye.

"(And the telephone rang off.)"

The telephone books in Cincinnati show that at 6.52 p. m. on January 8 Boyce, from telephone 548, talked to Rathbone about thirteen minutes; and the telephone books at Columbus show that at 6.50 p. m. on January 8 telephone 548, at Cincinnati, called telephone 1092 in Columbus. According to Campbell and Otis, Boyce's first interview with Campbell was on Saturday night, January 8. Other interviews followed on Sunday, and it was in these interviews that the terms for the purchase of Otis's vote were finally agreed upon between Boyce and Campbell. Campbell says in these conversations Boyce wanted to know if they could not arrange for the votes of Droste and Lane, and other members of the legislature, mentioning the sums that he could get for these votes, and stating that there would be a large amount to divide between them.

Now, Miss Jacobs testifies further that on January 9, at about 11.35 o'clock a. m., she took down another conversation between Boyce and Columbus, which was in the following words:

"SUNDAY MORNING, January 9, 1898—about 11.35.

"BOYCE. Hello! Is this the Major?

"MAJOR. Yes; wait a minute. [After a moment's pause.] Hello!

"BOYCE. How are you, Major?

"MAJOR. I recognize you.

"BOYCE. Well, I wanted to ask if you have any direct connection with either Droste or Lane? These men were all elected here on a pledge, and our little friend, who is interested, would like to have the others come, and he brought to me a lawyer, who wants to make a deal. They would not do it unless they received a consideration for it. He says that under no circumstances does he think Droste will vote for the Senator unless for these reasons. Do you think I can put any emphasis upon Lane coming our way?

"MAJOR. I do not know; we are catching them as fast as we can bring them.

"BOYCE. Do you put much faith in Jones?

"MAJOR. He can not get away.

"BOYCE. I said in the first place we did not need either Droste or Lane, only for their strength. Now, you know there is going to be a conference to-night with the other fellows. Isn't it wise for us to keep away and not come?

"MAJOR. I don't know, General.

"BOYCE. You know when a man is safe he is safe; that is all there is about it.

"MAJOR. They telegraphed them all to come down.

"BOYCE. If anything should occur between now and 2 o'clock, will you ring me up, please?

"MAJOR. Yes; I will.

"BOYCE. The young lawyer is coming to see me again. You understand these men were elected on a pledge saying that they would not vote for Senator Hanna?

"MAJOR. I know that.

"BOYCE. It was a peculiar thing to get this man off Jones or Manuel. This man had pledged himself. This man had pledged himself to become elected. He has been afraid all the time, and is now afraid, of the Enquirer.

"MAJOR. I do not think they will have much to say. During the heat of the discussion the whole thing would be wiped out. I think we are in good shape. We have got the men with us.

"BOYCE. We want a clear majority for our side without any question. There is no doubt but what we will have 17 of the senators.

"MAJOR. There ought to be 18. I don't see why Burke should not come in.

"BOYCE. My man would like to have Mason for Hanna very much. You see Mason votes before he does. He couldn't raise a question then about it. If I will not come up there I will notify you. I shall see in an hour or two whether Lane or Droste are both here or one of them. No one seemed to know last night and I couldn't find out. I shall know in an hour or two. The latest information is that Droste would nominate Gerrard.

"MAJOR. I am to have a conference a little later and then we will see what is to be done. I will let you know. Good-bye."

The telephone books in Cincinnati show that on January 9, at 11.18 a. m., Boyce, from telephone 548, talked to Rathbone in Columbus for ten minutes, at a cost of $2.50, while the books in Columbus show that on said day telephone 1092 at 11.15 a. m. called telephone 548 at Cincinnati, at a cost of $2.50.

There was other evidence before the State senate committee tending to show the intimate relations between Boyce and Mr. Hanna's managers, but it would carry this report to unnecessary length to quote it.

We think that the evidence to which we have already referred, standing as it does uncontradicted and unexplained, shows that certain of Mr. Hanna's managers at Columbus not only knew the purposes which Boyce had in view in Cincinnati, but also that they aided, abetted, and advised him in carrying out these purposes, and that this state of affairs existed while Mr. Hanna was present at his headquarters.

This view is strengthened by two facts disclosed in the report of the State senate committee:

First. That many of the witnesses, whose testimony apparently would have thrown much light upon the subject under inquiry, denied the jurisdiction of the committee and refused to testify under the advice of counsel, who stated that they represented the interests of Majors Rathbone and Dick and Senator Hanna; and,

Second. That Mr. Hanna and his representatives had subpœnas sent them by mail, which seem to have reached them, calling upon them to appear before the State senate committee, to which they made no response.

The report of the majority says they "do not doubt that if facts appeared from the report of the committee of the State senate requiring the United States Senate, out of a proper regard for its own reputation, to take further testimony concerning Mr. Hanna's election, it would be the duty of the Senate to proceed without waiting for further prosecution of the case coming from residents of the State of Ohio."

We think such facts do appear from the report of the committee of the State senate, and that this body should direct further inquiry and investigation to be made.

D. CAFFERY.

Mr. ALLEN, from the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following views on the charges of bribery in the election of Hon. M. A. Hanna to the Senate of the United States:

In view of the fact that this Congress will expire within the next three days and that the term of service of Mr. Hanna will expire with it, it is apparent that there is not time within which to consider the case, and it will perforce of circumstances fall with the close of the session. My term of office expires with this Congress, and

I do not, under such circumstances, deem it wise to express an opinion as to what a future Congress should do, to which Mr. Hanna has been elected.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM V. ALLEN.

[Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.]

NATHAN B. SCOTT,

Senator from West Virginia.

Nathan B. Scott was elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term beginning March 4, 1899, in place of Charles J. Faulkner, whose term expired March 3, 1899. Before Mr. Scott appeared to claim his seat certain memorials were presented to the Senate remonstrating against the seating of Mr. Scott. At the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress Mr. Scott was duly seated as a Senator from the State of West Virginia, without objection at the time. Afterwards a resolution was introduced in the Senate declaring that Mr. Scott was not entitled to a seat in the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with the memorials referred to.

March 20, 1900, the committee submitted a report with an accompanying resolution that Mr. Scott was entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of West Virginia. A minority of the committee submitted a report which was adverse to the right of Mr. Scott to the seat held by him in the Senate. The objections to the title of Mr. Scott to a seat in the Senate, the conclusions of the committee thereon, and the views of the minority of the committee in relation thereto are fully stated in the report of the committee, with the views of the minority, submitted and printed in the case and hereinafter appearing.

The matter was debated in the Senate April 25 and 26, 1900, and the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections was adopted April 27, 1900, by a vote of 52 yeas to 3 nays.

The history of the case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate relating thereto, as published in the Congressional Record, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the dissenting report of the minority of the committee, a statement of the days on which these reports were debated in the Senate with a reference to the record of the same, extracts from the remarks of Mr. McComas and Mr. Pettus in such debate, and the vote on the resolution submitted by the committee.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 23, 1899.

Mr. Faulkner presented the memorial of John T. McGraw, of Grafton, W. Va., remonstrating against the seating of Hon Nathan B. Scott as a Senator of the United States from the State of West Virginia for the term beginning March 4, 1899. The memorial was ordered to be printed as a document.

THURSDAY, March 2, 1899.

Mr. Faulkner presented a memorial signed by 45 members of the legislature of West Virginia, remonstrating against the seating of Hon. Nathan B. Scott, a Senator of the United States from that State for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1899.

The memorial was ordered to be printed as a document.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1899.

The President pro tempore presented the depositions of R. W. Morrow and sundry other citizens of West Virginia, witnesses in behalf of John T. McGraw against the title of Hon. Nathan B. Scott to a seat in the United States Senate; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Jones of Arkansas submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"Resolved, That Nathan B. Scott, now occupying a seat as a Senator from West Virginia, is not entitled to a seat in the Senate."

The memorial of John T. McGraw, which was presented to the Senate during the last Congress by Senator Faulkner, was ordered taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in connection with the foregoing resolution.

THURSDAY, December 7, 1899.

Mr. Chandler, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate the right and title of Nathan B. Scott to a seat as Senator from the State of West Virginia, and said committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths, and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee."

TUESDAY, December 12, 1899.

Mr. Gallinger, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported by Mr. Chandler from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on the 7th instant, in reference to the investigation of the title of Nathan B. Scott to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of West Virginia, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

TUESDAY, March 20, 1900.

Mr. McComas, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report in relation to certain memorials protesting against the seating of Mr. Scott as a Senator from the State of West Virginia. The report was accompanied by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Nathan B. Scott has been duly elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1899, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator."

Mr. Pettus submitted the views of a minority of the committee; which were ordered printed with the report of the committee.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Chandler (chairman), Hoar, Burrows, Pritchard, McComas, Caffery, Pettus, Turley, and Harris.]

PROTEST AGAINST THE SEATING OF HON. NATHAN B. SCOTT.

MARCH 20, 1900.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. McComas, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report and views of the minority (to accompany Senate Res. No. 213):

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred a certain memorial of John T. McGraw, a citizen of West Virginia, and a certain memorial of John J. Cornwell and others, members of the senate and house of delegates of West Virginia, each memorial protesting against the seating of Hon. Nathan B. Scott as a Senator from that State, have considered the same and respectfully report:

The certificate of the governor of West Virginia, in due form, of the election of Mr. Scott by the legislature constituted a prima facie title in Mr. Scott to a seat in the Senate, and thereupon he was admitted to take the oath of office. The remonstrants insist that he is not entitled to a seat in this body.

The matter was submitted to the committee upon the memorials, the journals of each house, an agreed statement of facts, and certain oral arguments and admissions of counsel at the hearing. The remonstrants offered to prove certain declarations of several State officials, of members of the general assembly, and of attorneys in argument before legislative committees; also certain acts of persons, detailed in certain alleged depositions, submitted in printed form, but the committee was of opinion that there was no proffer of sufficient evidence of fraud or intimidation affecting the election to warrant such investigation by the committee.

On January 24, 1899, the two houses of the legislature of West Virginia each balloted, but failed to concur in the appointment of a Senator, and on the next day both houses met in a joint assembly, and upon the first ballot the whole number of votes cast was 95, of which Mr. Scott received 48, Mr. McGraw 46, and Mr. Goff 1.

Thereupon the presiding officer of the joint assembly declared that Nathan B. Scott having received a majority of the votes cast by both branches of the legislature voting in joint assembly he is duly elected a Senator in the Congress of the United States. The joint assembly thereupon adjourned.

A quorum of the joint assembly and a quorum of each house was present and voted. The proceedings were regular and resulted in the election of Mr. Scott, unless certain admitted facts constitute a valid objection to his election.

The memorial of John J. Cornwell and other members states briefly, and the memorial of John T. McGraw states fully, the objections of the remonstrants to Mr. Scott's title to a seat in this body.

The objections stated by Mr. McGraw are five in number.

The first objection assigned is that Mr. Scott did not receive a majority of the votes constituting such joint assembly; that there were in said body 97 votes, a majority of which is 49, and that Mr. Scott received but 48 votes.

The journal of the joint assembly on January 25, 1899 (House Journal, p. 189), shows 25 senators and 70 members of the house of delegates present and voting; shows 95 to be the whole number of votes cast, and of these Mr. Scott received 48 votes—a majority of all votes cast.

Under the apportionment the senate contained one more member and the house one more member. The journal of the joint assembly discloses nothing concerning these two. It does not appear therefrom whether they were present. It does not show that they were entitled to vote or that they in any manner claimed or waived the right to vote. Prima facie, from the journal of the joint assembly, either they were not entitled and were not present, or if present did not claim or waive their right to vote. Therefore this journal shows that Mr. Scott received a valid majority of the joint assembly, consisting of 95 members.

As was said in Lapham and Miller (Senate Election Cases, p. 697):

"The ground alleged is that there was not a majority of the whole legislature actually voting for the members chosen. In our opinion that is not necessary. There was a quorum of each house present in the joint assembly; there was a majority of that quorum actually voting for the members chosen. In our opinion that was a valid election."

See also Clark and Maginnis v. Sanders and Power (Senate Election Cases, 727); Davidson v. Call (Senate Election Cases, 806).

The journals of the senate and house explain the nonparticipation of the senator from the fourth senatorial district and the member of the house of delegates from Taylor County.

On January 20, 1899 (Senate Journal, p. 66), a resolution was introduced in the senate declaring that Kidd, the sitting member, was not elected and that Morris was duly elected, directing that Kidd vacate his seat and Morris be sworn in.

On January 23, 1899 (Senate Journal, 91–94), this resolution was considered and a substitute was adopted reciting the contest between Kidd and Morris, the reference to and pendency of the contest before the committee on privileges and elections, and the opinion of the senate that Morris was entitled to the seat pending the contest, wherefore the senate resolved that Kidd was not entitled and that Morris was entitled to a seat in the senate from the fourth senatorial district pending the contest, and that Morris be sworn in. Morris took the oath and was seated.

On January 25, 1899 (Senate Journal, p. 1081), the senate adopted a resolution that the contested-election case of Morris v. Kidd be the special order for consideration and determination on its merits on February 7, 1899, with leave to either party to take testimony, "and that pending the determination of such contest neither Morris nor Kidd shall be entitled to vote or sit as a member of this body."

The journal of the house shows the following proceedings in the contest over the seat of delegate from Taylor County:

The secretary of state, under chapter 3, section 70, of the Code of West Virginia, returned to the house when it assembled the list of delegates entitled to participate in its organization, and among them Brohard, of Taylor County, who was sworn in. (House Journal, p. 5.)

On January 12, 1899, the house referred to the committee on privileges and elections the question of the right of Brohard to be sworn in, with instructions to report the person prima facie entitled to be sworn in as member from Taylor County. On January 16, 1899, the house adopted a resolution reported from said committee that, pending determination of the title to the seat, neither Brohard nor Dent (the contestee) "be permitted to participate in the proceedings of this house."

On January 24, 1899, the majority of said committee reported a resolution that Dent was elected a delegate from Taylor County, and that he at once be qualified and take his seat.

On January 25, 1899, the house unanimously resolved that the consideration of the majority and minority reports concerning the contest in relation to the delegate from Taylor County be postponed until February 7, with leave to either party to take testimony.

The judgment of the senate was a finality in respect of Morris and Kidd. The judgment of the house was a finality in respect of Dent and Brohard. Each of them was adjudicated not qualified to participate or vote in the house wherein he claimed a seat, pending the final decision of the body which by the constitution of West Virginia (art. 6, sec. 24) is made "the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members."

Therefore, on January 25, 1899, only 95 members had the right to participate and vote in the two houses; only 95 members had the right to participate and vote in the joint assembly. Of these Mr. Scott received 48 votes—a majority. Therefore the first objection, that there were 97 votes in the joint assembly, and that a majority was 49, is unfounded.

The second objection assigned is, that "of 48 votes received by Mr. Scott were the votes of Senators Getzendanner and Pearson, cast and received against a protest spread upon the journal of the joint assembly, and showing that these senators had, under article 6, section 13, of the State constitution, forfeited their seats as senators in the legislature by the acceptance of lucrative offices under the Federal Government, and likewise their right to vote in said joint convention."

These protests show that Senators Getzendanner and Pearson accepted commissions in the Second Regiment of West Virginia Volunteers and discharged the duties and received the pay of captain and lieutenant, respectively, while in the service of the United States during the Spanish war. These facts are admitted, and it is further admitted that these senators were "hold-over senators," who, between the session of the last legislature and the assembling of the new legislature in 1899, had accepted, had served, and had resigned their commissions prior to the twenty-fourth regular session of the State legislature. The protest further recites that these two senators had vacated their seats and forfeited their right to vote in the joint convention, as stated in the second objection.

It appears by the journal of the joint assembly that Senator Getzendanner and Pearson were present therein and voted for Mr. Scott.

The constitutional provision is that—

"No person holding a lucrative office under this State, the United States, or any foreign office * * * shall be eligible to a seat in the legislature."

On January 20, 1899, resolutions of like tenor and effect with these protests were offered in the senate, declaring that by virtue of this constitutional provision and the acceptance of said commissions each of these senators "thereby became ineligible and forfeited his right to a seat in this body." These resolutions were referred to the committee on privileges and elections, and on January 23 1899, that committee reported in lieu of said resolutions a substitute declaring that Getzendanner and Pearson are legally qualified and entitled to hold their membership in the senate, and have not vacated their seats therein under the provisions of section 13 of article 3. The senate adopted the substitute on January 24, 1899.

This judgment of the senate of West Virginia upon the title of Senators Getzendanner and Pearson to their seats therein is a finality. The Senate of the United States can not reverse it. As before said, the State senate is, under the State constitution, "the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." Such constitutional powers have effect, not only to make the members of each house the judge in each case, but also to forbid that the members of any other tribunal shall be judges thereof to review or reverse such original judgment. The jurisdiction of each of the houses of the State legislature is original and exclusive. (Case of H. A. Du Pont, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, Report No. 289, p. 104.)

The senate of West Virginia is the only tribunal which could either hear or determine lawfully these objections to the qualifications of Senators Getzendanner and Pearson. Its judgment in their favor is final. The Senate of the United States has not authority to originate, hear, or determine any objections to the qualifications of those who acted and voted as members of the senate of the State. Where the title of an individual member of the legislature who has once been seated has been determined by a subsequent adjudication of the house to which he belongs, such judgment will not be here disturbed or inquired into. (Potter v. Robbins, Senate Election Cases, 179; Clark and Maginnis v. Sanders and Power, Senate Election Cases, 727; the case of David Turpie, Senate Election Cases, 719; the petition of H. A. Du Pont (minority report), Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, Report No. 289, pp. 98–104; Sykes v. Spencer, Senate Election Cases, 611.)

It should be noted that the Senate of the United States, in Stanton v. Lane (Senate Election Cases, 276), upon a similar case came to a like conclusion with the senate of West Virginia. James H. Lane was elected a Senator from Kansas in April, 1861, and took his seat July 4, 1861. It appears that on June 20, 1861, President Lincoln appointed him brigadier-general of volunteers; that he accepted the appointment and qualified to perform its duties, but had resigned the office. The governor of Kansas appointed Frederic P. Stanton to fill the vacancy, but on January 16, 1862, the Senate voted that Lane was entitled to his seat in that body. Of the majority, some held that the office of brigadier-general did not exist on June 20, 1861; others that, although Lane held the office after he had been elected Senator, yet, having resigned the same before taking his seat in the Senate, he did not come within the constitutional provision (art. 1, sec. 6). It profits little here to discuss the reasons or motives of State senators or of the Senate.

It is well said in David Turpie's case (Senate Election Cases, 719), that—

"This body is made by the Constitution the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members. The senate of Indiana is likewise the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members. We must determine all questions arising out of the proceedings of the electors. But who sustain the character of electors is to be determined by the legislative body of the State. We can not inquire into the motive which controlled its judgment."

The third and fourth objections of John T. McGraw, remonstrant, may be considered as two parts of the same ground of objection. It is charged that Republican senators in the State senate threatened to unseat unlegally certain Democratic senators unless the house acceded to demands (not stated), and did unseat R. F. Kidd, a Democratic senator, in partial execution of these threats; that thereby the Democratic members went into joint convention under duress; that this joint convention was not held under the law, but under a private agreement between the members of the two houses, ratified by both houses; that this agreement was void as against public policy and vitiated the election of Senator Scott; that the effect of this agreement was to disfranchise one Democratic senator and one Democratic member of the house of delegates, who, had they been permitted to cast their votes in the joint convention, would have voted against Mr. Scott.

It does not appear from the journal of the joint convention that the alleged Democratic senator, Kidd, and the alleged Democratic delegate, Dent, were present or offered to vote in the joint convention. Their names were not called. If present, as stated in brief and argument, they appear to have acquiesced, to have waived their alleged right as representatives.

It does appear that the State senate had a Republican majority and the house of delegates had a Democratic majority, and that when the joint convention met that body was comprised of 49 Republicans and 46 Democrats. All of the latter voted for Mr. McGraw; all save one of the Republicans, who voted for Judge Goff, voted for Mr. Scott, giving him 1 majority, as stated.

It was conceded in briefs of counsel and in their oral arguments that there was excitement and much activity, as is not unusual in legislative bodies in like situations, and that there were contests against sitting members from political motives. One Democrat in the senate, Kidd, had been unseated and a Republican, Morris, seated in his place. One sitting Republican in the house, Via, had been unseated and a Democrat, Logan, had been seated in his place. Another sitting Republican, Brohard, of Taylor County, had been excluded from participation in the proceedings of the house on January 16, and on January 26 the committee had reported that Dent was entitled to the seat. Neither Kidd, Dent, nor Brohard had voted that day for Senator in either house, balloting separately, nor had either offered to vote. In the senate Morris was present and voted for Scott.

As the joint convention was to assemble at noon on the following day, it would appear difficult to unseat Brohard and seat Dent earlier the next morning.

At this juncture the Republicans would have had in joint convention 50 votes and the Democrats would have had 46 had the joint convention met without further action in either house.

As a result of conferences among adherents of the two parties, 5 Democratic members of the house, including Mr. McKinney, the speaker, and Mr. Davis, the leader of his party, signed the following proposal, which was thereafter presented to and signed by 5 Republican senators, including Mr. Marshall, the president of the senate. This proposal, which purports to have been made by Democrats and accepted by Republicans, is as follows:

"To the Republican Senators:

"GENTLEMEN: In order to bring about a peaceful and orderly settlement of the differences now existing between the two houses of the West Virginia legislature, we submit to you the following propositions, viz:

"(1) The election and qualification of the member of the house of delegates from Taylor County to be heard and tried upon its merits.

"(2) The election and qualification of a senator from the Fourth senatorial district to be heard and tried upon its merits.

"(3) These two cases to be finally voted upon in each house on the 7th day of February, 1899, after 2 p. m. of that day, with privilege to any party to take any evidence pertinent up and until noon of February 6, 1899, when the taking of evidence shall be closed.

"(4) All contests and controversies as to the membership of each house other than the two above named to be dismissed, and no further contests or controversies respecting the membership therein to be brought or entertained by either house.

"(5) Pending the investigation hereinabove referred to, neither Dent, Brohard, Kidd, or Morris shall vote, in joint assembly or otherwise.

"(6) All resolutions now pending in either house, looking to unseating any member thereof, or questioning the seat of any sitting member, shall be dismissed.

"(7) Each of the signers of this proposition pledges himself to vote and use all honorable means to have the stipulations herein contained faithfully carried out and observed.

"O. S. McKINNEY.
"ISAIAH BEE.
"W. L. MANSFIELD.
"JNO. W. DAVIS.
"R. W. MORROW.

"We, the undersigned Republican senators, concur in the foregoing proposition.

"R. E. FAST.
"O. S. MARSHALL.
"ALONZO GARRETT.
"S. W. MATTHEWS."

Its first sentence declares its purpose to bring about a peaceful and orderly settlement of the differences now existing between the two houses. It is to be noted that those who are alleged to have acted under duress first signed and submitted the proposal, then those who it is alleged threatened them consented to accept the proposal.

This proposal stipulated that the case of Brohard, Republican, in the house, and the case of Kidd, Democrat, in the senate, shall be heard and tried upon their merits, and finally voted on February 7, 1899; that, pending the decision of these cases, neither Dent, Democrat, nor Brohard, Republican, in the house, nor Kidd, Democrat, nor Morris, Republican, in the senate, shall vote, in joint assembly or otherwise, and that all contests and resolutions looking to unseating of members shall cease in each house.

The signers pledge themselves individually to so vote and to use all honorable means to have those stipulations carried out. Five Democrats in the house and 5 Republicans in the senate were numerically sufficient to change the partisan majority in either house. As these men included the presiding officers of each house and the floor leaders of the majority in each house, their statement of the spirit and purpose of the proposal of these Democrats, accepted by these Republicans in the paper they signed, should be accepted as true.

In the senate, as a result of this conference, Senator Garrett the next morning offered the resolution postponing the Kidd v. Morris contest, as before stated, and forbidding further participation of Morris in the voting for Senator of the United States. It was adopted unanimously.

In the house Mr. Davis offered a like resolution, postponing the discussion of the Dent v. Brohard contest, as before stated. It was adopted unanimously.

Mr. John W. Davis, conceded by both sides to be a man of ability and high character, the leader of the Democratic majority in the house, who introduced the resolution, in a printed deposition (used by both sides in argument before the committee and so used here) gives his own reasons for signing this paper, and declares that the statement he makes for himself was in accord with conversations he had with other Democratic signers at or before the time the agreement was presented to him for signature. Mr. Davis's statement may therefore be taken as the statement of all the Democrats who signed this proposal:

"Question. What was your understanding of the purpose of that agreement upon the part of the Democrats?

"Answer. That agreement, as I understood it, was entered into for the purpose of avoiding further trouble between the two houses and in each house in regard to contests then pending, the situation having become very acute, rumors being current upon all hands of an intention upon the part of the Republican minority in the house to withdraw and organize a separate house and upon the part of the Republican majority in the senate to unseat various Democratic senators, and it being believed that the best interests of the people of West Virginia and the proper conduct of the business of the legislature demanded an early and final settlement of these questions."

In the senate Kidd had been unseated by the Republican majority. In the house Via had been unseated and Brohard was about to be unseated by the Democrats. Other contests were pressed from partisan motives. The pacific understanding of these 10 men ended this strife and enabled the legislature to proceed with its business.

It may be that wrong and injustice to members and contestants was done and intended to be done upon one side or the other or on both sides. There is no evidence of force or fraud in these transactions in the documents and facts before us. The unanimous vote in both houses upon resolutions postponing pending contests for seats disproves duress if the word duress has meaning in this remonstrance.

We can not say that such an agreement as this between 10 men, and favored afterwards by all members, is "void as against public policy." We can not declare void the unanimous act of the senate or the unanimous act of the house of like pacific purpose. Nor can we perceive how it "vitiated said election." Its immediate result was not "to disfranchise one Democratic senator and one Democratic member." Its immediate result, if any, was pacific, and the subsequent action of both houses had as its immediate result the disfranchisement of Morris, the sitting Republican senator.

The sitting Republican delegate from Taylor County had eight days before been excluded from participation in the proceedings. The Federal statute required this legislature to proceed to elect the Senator of the United States on the second Tuesday after organization of the legislature and to meet next day at noon in joint assembly, and pending this joint meeting both houses thus disposed of contested cases. As it was unanimous in both houses, the members appear to have considered it a fair and reasonable plan, as it facilitated the meeting in joint assembly—to have considered it to be in the public interest.

It is true that speedily thereafter Morris was unseated and Kidd seated again, and that Brohard was unseated and Dent seated in his place. The merits of these contests were to be decided by the two legislative bodies having original and exclusive jurisdiction. As we have said, their public and solemn adjudications of the election of these members can not be reviewed, or reversed, or affirmed here. Therefore the third and fourth objections of the remonstrants are insufficient.

A majority of the committee do not mean to decide that the Senate could not refuse a seat to a claimant who is elected by a legislature which is itself directly and plainly the result of force or fraud. If, on the eve of a joint assembly, a majority in either house should cease to be judges of the elections and qualifications of members of the minority and become revolutionary conspirators; if, for instance, a majority should imprison enough minority members on the day of the joint convention to reverse the majority therein, we do not assert that the Senate should not inquire into such violence, force, and intimidation, or that it could not declare that there was a joint convention in form only, but not in fact, and that there was no election therefore. In the past the Senate has investigated fraud and corruption in elections where the proceedings were regular and the form was lawful, and then declared there had been no election.

The case presented by the remonstrants in no wise resembles such extreme case.

Upon careful consideration of the case before us the majority of the committee agree that Mr. Scott was peacefully and fairly elected, and that the first four objections of the remonstrants are not valid objections.

The fifth objection assigned by John T. McGraw, memorialist, is that at the time of the election of Mr. Scott he was a citizen but not an inhabitant of the State of West Virginia, but was an inhabitant of the District of Columbia.

It is admitted that Mr. Scott was born in Ohio; that when a young man he removed to Wheeling, in West Virginia, engaged in business, had resided there until January 1, 1898, when he was appointed by the President Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and upon his confirmation thereafter he came to Washington to discharge the duties of this Federal office, but with the intent to retain his residence, citizenship, inhabitancy, and domicile in Wheeling, W. Va., his home; that in accord with this intent he exercised unchallenged the right to vote and did vote on November 8, 1898, in the precinct in Wheeling where his residence was and had remained unchanged; that he came here with no intent to change his domicile to Washington from Wheeling, and that he claims to be an inhabitant of Wheeling, W. Va., and that he remained in Washington in the discharge of his official functions with intent to return to his home in Wheeling when his duties of office here ended.

The mere statement of facts should suffice to show that this objection is unfounded. The Federal Constitution requires that the Senator shall be an "inhabitant" of the State. This term is a legal equivalent of the term "resident," and residence is what is required by the law of West Virginia to entitle the male citizens of that State to vote.

The committee, without extended discussion, were unanimously of the opinion that Mr. Scott was an inhabitant of West Virginia at the time of his election to the Senate of the United States and is entitled to retain his seat.

The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the several memorials, and recommend the passage of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Nathan B. Scott has been duly elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term of six years commencing on the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator."

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The remonstrants in this case took a large number of depositions, on notice to Mr. Scott of the time and place, and these depositions were offered to the committee as evidence. But these depositions were not taken under authority of the committee, but were taken as though there was a case pending in a court of the United States between parties. The committee rejected the depositions.

Then the remonstrants asked to have the witnesses whose depositions had been taken summoned as witnesses, but the committee refused this request, and the case was tried on the journals of the two houses of the legislature of West Virginia, and some arguments of counsel as to certain facts. Later your attention will be called to parts of the said depositions.

The facts, on the evidence received by the committee, are as follows:

On the 11th day of January, 1899, the legislature of West Virginia assembled and each house was organized.

In the senate the Republicans had about two-thirds, but two Republicans would not vote for Mr. Scott. The house of delegates was Democratic by a small majority.

In the Senate objection was made to H. C. Getzendanner and E. G. Pierson being admitted to seats as senators, on the ground that each of them, after election in November, 1896, and after serving as senators in 1897, had accepted a commission as an officer in the Volunteer Army of the United States—an office of profit— and served as such officers—one as captain and the other as lieutenant. At first these objections were laid on the table, and the two persons objected to took their seats.

Afterwards the matter was referred to a committee, and the committee, in substance, found the facts as stated in the objections to be true; but the committee further found that each one of these army officers had been discharged before the legislature met in January, 1899. Therefore the committee reported that said Getzendanner and Pierson were still senators; and this report was adopted, by a party vote, on the 24th day of January, 1899. This ruling was made on a demand for the previous question and without any debate.

And on the same day (January 24, 1899) two petitions for contests of seats in the senate were presented to the senate as follows:

J. H. Collins, Republican, against J. H. Marcum, Democrat, and D. M. Shirkey, Republican, against Walter L. Ashby, Democrat.

On January 20, 1899, the following resolution was offered by Mr. White:

"As there is a contest pending in this senate against Walter L. Ashby, a member of said senate from the ninth senatorial district: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, that said Walter L. Ashby be suspended from voting or discussing any matter that may come up before this body until said contest is settled."

This resolution, under the rules, went over. And at the same time, January 20, 1899, Mr. White offered another resolution in these words:

"Resolved, That R. F. Kidd, from the fourth senatorial district, now holding a seat in the senate of the State of West Virginia, was not duly elected on the 8th day of January, 1898, but B. M. Morris was duly elected: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That said R. F. Kidd vacate his seat in the senate of West Virginia, and M. B. Morris, of Gilmer County, be required to be sworn in as a member of said body." (66.)

This is the first mention of the name of M. B. Morris in the journal of the senate. This resolution also went over, under the rules, for one day.

As above shown, the petition of contest of J. H. Collins against James H. Marcum was presented to the senate on the 24th day of January, but it was marked by the clerk "Filed January 21, 1899, at 8.15 p. m."

On January 21, Mr. Latham offered the following:

"Whereas a contest has been instituted by J. H. Collins against James H. Marcum for a seat in the senate as senator from the sixth senatorial district, and believing that, pending the further investigation of the case, justice and right dictate that said seat be declared vacant:

"Resolved, That the seat in the senate now occupied by James H. Marcum as a senator from the sixth senatorial district be declared vacant; that the committee on privileges and elections be instructed to make a thorough investigation of the case and have power to send for persons and papers and any ballots in dispute, and to take such pertinent evidence as may be offered by either party, and that said Collins and Marcum be granted leave to appear before said committee in person and by counsel, and that pending such investigation neither James H. Marcum nor J. H. Collins be permitted to participate in the proceedings of the senate nor to occupy a seat therein." (78, 79.)

This resolution was laid over for a day under the rules.

On January 23, 1899, the resolution offered by Mr. White unseating Kidd and seating Morris was called up and a substitute was offered by Mr. Smith, a Republican, and was adopted by a party vote—16 to 8. That resolution is as follows:

"Whereas there is now pending in the senate a contest between R. F. Kidd and B. M. Morris for a seat as senator from the fourth senatorial district of this State; and

"Whereas said contest has been referred to the committee on privileges and elections, where the same is pending, and can not be determined for a considerable length of time; and

"Whereas it is the opinion of the senate that pending said contest B. M. Morris should be entitled to said seat: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That R. F. Kidd is not entitled to a seat in the senate as a senator from the fourth senatorial district, and that B. M. Morris is entitled to a seat in the senate as a senator from the fourth senatorial district pending the final disposition of said contest proceedings, and that said B. M. Morris be forthwith sworn in as such senator." (91, 92.)

And B. M. Morris was sworn as a senator pro tempore et pro hâc vice. (94.)

On the 24th of January, 1899, the senate voted for United States Senator, and N. B. Scott received 17 votes, counting Getzendanner and Pierson, the two who were army officers, and B. M. Morris, the man sworn in temporarily on the preceding day.

And J. T. McGraw received 8 votes, Whitaker, Republican, not voting.

Protests were filed against counting the votes of Getzendanner, Pierson, and Morris.

In the house of delegates a vote was had for United States Senator on January 24, 1999; and John T. McGraw received 38 votes and Nathan B. Scott received 29 votes, Nathan Goff received 1 vote, Reese Blizzard received 1 vote, and Mr. Asbury was absent and did not vote.

Scott had 46 votes, McGraw had 46 votes, and 2 votes scattered.

On the 24th of January, 1899, when the vote for United States Senator was taken in each house separately, there were pending for seats in the Senate the following contest cases: M. B. Morris v. R. F. Kidd, D. M. Shirkey v. W. L. Ashby, and J. H. Collins v. J. H. Marcum. And in the house of delegates there were then pending references as to the title to seats of the following persons: H. F. Brohard v. W. R. B. Dent, of Taylor County; Wilbur Spencer, W. S. Talbott, J. D. Logan, W. B. Cutright, Julius Scherr, B. J. Redmond, and Frank Legge, respectively.

The case of Brohard and Dent was in this shape: Neither had a certificate of election. The returns showed a majority for Brohard, but on a recount by the returning board, authorized by law, it appeared that Dent was elected. This board consisted then of two members only, and the two did not agree. However, the officer who made the list of members, a Republican, put the name of Brohard, a Republican, on the list, though he had no certificate.

Then, after the first vote for United States Senator, five Democrats of the house and five Republicans of the senate made a written agreement on January 24, 1899, which is copied into the report of the majority of this committee, and by this agreement the contests between Morris and Kidd in the senate, and between Brohard and Dent in the house, were to be laid over until the 7th day of February, 1899, and neither one of the four was to be allowed to vote until the contests were decided; and all other contests were to be dismissed.

And on the morning of the 25th of January, 1899, resolutions were passed in each house to carry that agreement into effect.

And afterwards, on the last-named day, the two houses met together and voted for United States Senator, and N. B. Scott received 48 votes, J. T. McGraw received 46 votes, and Nathan Goff received 1 vote—total, 95. (S. J., 112.)

So Mr. Scott received a majority of 1 vote and was declared elected.

After Mr Scott was declared elected, the senate, on February 7, 1899, had no trouble in giving Mr. Kidd the seat from which he had been suspended, pro hac vice.

No one then disputed his right, for the purpose of his exclusion had been accomplished. (S. J., 312.)

And on the same day Dent was given his seat as a member of the house.

From the facts above stated, which are proved by the journals of the two houses, it appears that the election of Mr. Scott was procured by fraud. The senate elected two members for that body (Getzendanner and Pierson), and suspended a Democrat (Kidd) until after the Senatorial election so that he could not vote against Mr. Scott. It must be remembered that Mr. Scott was declared to be elected by a majority of 1 vote only, and that on the vote in the houses separately on the day before Scott received 46 and McGraw 46 votes. So without some curiously fraudulent proceedings Scott could not be elected.

Now, look at the facts proved by the depositions above mentioned.

Together these depositions prove a regular conspiracy to elect Mr. Scott by fraudulent practices.

George W. Atkinson was governor, William M. O. Dawson was secretary of state and chairman of the Republican State executive committee, A. B. White was collector of internal revenue and secretary of the Republican State executive committee, Edgar P. Rucker was attorney-general of the State, and all of them Republicans, and all of them engaged in the conspiracy to elect Mr. Scott.

The governor, it appears, commenced the fraudulent proceedings. At the November election, 1898, R. B. Ash, of Marion County, a Democrat, was elected a member of the house of delegates over A. N. Pritchard, a Republican. On the 29th day of November the governor of the State sent a telegram in these words:

"CHARLESTON, KANAWHA COUNTY, W. VA.,
"November 29, 1898.

"Capt. A. L. PRITCHARD, Mannington:

"Party interests demand contest in your case. We will pay all expenses. Please wire Kendall to proceed immediately.

"G. W. ATKINSON."

And on the same day the secretary of state and the collector of internal revenue sent a telegram in these words:

"CHARLESTON, KANAWHA COUNTY, W. VA.,
"November 29, 1898.

"Capt. A. L. PRITCHARD, Mannington:

"Republican State executive committee request you to allow the use of your name in contest proceeding to protect interests of Republican party. All costs and expenses will be paid by us.

"WM. M. O. DAWSON, Chairman.
"A. B. WHITE, Secretary."

These telegrams were addressed to Capt. A. L. Pritchard at the place of his residence, and were received by him, but were intended for Mr. A. N. Pritchard, who was defeated by Mr. Ash for a seat in the house of delegates (pp. 86, 87, brief of remonstrants).

In the house of delegates Logan had the regular certificate of election, and the committee on privileges and elections reported that he was prima facie entitled to be seated, though Via, who had no certificate, was improperly placed on the roll of the house by the secretary of state, W. M. O. Dawson, who sent the telegram to Pritchard.

Attorney-General Edgar P. Rucker and United States District Attorney Joseph H. Gaines and others represented Via in his contest with Logan before the house committee, and in his speech before that committee the attorney-general, in an ill-tempered way, charged that the committee had already agreed to decide against Via and in favor of Logan, and if they were to carry out this prearranged plan the committee need not be surprised "to see blood flow in the capitol on the next day, because plans had been formulated looking to the preventing of the seating of Logan, even at the cost of shedding of blood" (p. 81 of brief of remonstrants).

Threats were made by Republican members of the senate to turn out all of the Democratic senators elected in November, 1898, if a compromise was not made.

And many threats were made by Republicans in authority to organize a new house of delegates out of the Republicans then sitting and the Republicans defeated at the election in 1898, if a compromise was not made.

For the purpose of carrying out these threats, the defeated candidates for seats in the house of delegates of the Republican party were summoned and came to the capital.

And for the same purpose, Republicans defeated in November, 1898, for seats in the senate were summoned to the capital to occupy seats to which Democrats were duly elected, and the contests mentioned were instituted in the senate.

These fraudulent and revolutionary proceedings had the active support of the senate, the governor, the secretary of state, and the attorney-general, and all for the purpose of electing Mr. Scott to a seat in this body.

And threats were made to turn out of the senate all Democratic senators elected in November, 1898, if the compromise were not made.

Threats of violence were made by Republicans against Republican members who refused to vote for Mr. Scott.

It is inferred from the form of the paper called "The compromise agreement," in the report of the majority of the committee, that the Democrats in the legislature made the proposition for the compromise to the Republicans. The inference, though natural from the form of writing, is not true as matter of fact. The Republicans in the senate made the proposition to the Democrats in this way, as shown by the deposition of Hon. William A. Ohley. He testifies:

"Very soon after the unseating of Kidd I was met by Hon. Z. I. Vinson, of Huntington, chairman of the Gold Democratic State committee, at the Hotel Ruffner, who invited me to a conference with himself and John T. McGraw in John T. McGraw's room. He said that Senators Fast, Marshall, and others, though they acted with their party in unseating Kidd, did not approve of such revolutionary tactics, and wished to make a compromise fair and just to all concerned under which they could break away from their party associations and act in accordance with good conscience.

"He stated that if a sufficient number of Democrats in the house to carry the resolution through the house, in conjunction with the Republicans, would agree to the proposition he had to make, that enough Republicans in the senate would agree to such a resolution to carry the proposition in the upper branch of the State legislature. His proposition had the essential features of the agreement as it was finally signed.

"He said at the time that should Senator Elkins and Chairman Dawson learn what was going on before it was done they would put a stop to it, and urged that if the Democrats wished to retain their newly elected senators and to reseat Kidd, who had already been unseated, that they act with all speed, while those Republicans who had cooperated with their party in unseating Kidd were repentant and willing to act the part of honest officials and conscientious citizens. He was requested, either by myself or Mr. McGraw, to put his proposition in writing.

"He did so then and there, and the proposition filed herewith is the original proposition then and there drafted, except as to the striking out of the word 'conservative' and the change of dates in section 3. Figuring what the result would be under the compromise agreement it was seen at once that the Democrats could not elect a United States Senator by a party vote, but the advantage of retaining the legislature in its integrity and of preventing any further revolutionary tactics upon the part of the Republicans, and the undoing of the great wrong that had already been done Senator Kidd, was regarded by us as of too great advantage to be lightly thrown aside, particularly in the face of the evident purpose of the Republicans to further increase their majority by throwing out additional hold-over senators.

"I therefore, after discussing the length of time allowed for maturing the contests and objecting to any greater delay than February 4, which was inserted in the paper, took the paper to the capitol and in fifteen minutes had the necessary number of signatures of the Democratic members of the house of delegates. The paper was then handed to Mr. Vinson, and he stated that he would immediately obtain the signatures of the Republican senators. The next time I saw the paper was that evening, when it was handed to me by George W. McClintic, who had been acting as counsel for the Republican committee in the Republican contest cases. The dates of hearing the contest cases had been changed in the paper from the 4th day of February to the 10th day of February, Mr. McClintic stating that this much time was necessary in order to mature the contest cases.

"The Democrats objected to this delay, as needed legislation had already been delayed too long. We were in the hall of the house of delegates, and there was a considerable dispute before the opening of the night session as to this change in date. Very much to the surprise of the Democrats, who supposed that the leaders of the Republican party were neither aware of the agreement nor approved of it, many of the latter appeared to participate in the discussion. W. M. O. Davidson, chairman of the Republican State committee, and the secretary of the committee, A. B. White, of Parkersburg, and others appeared as though interested in the proceedings.

"The speaker of the house called the house to order and, on motion, it was adjourned in a very few minutes; and by arrangement the signers of the agreement and those proposing the same agreed to meet at the Ruffner Hotel, and did later gather at the room of Speaker McKinney. Here were present Senator Stephen B. Elkins, Congressman B. B. Dovener, Chairman Dawson, and other leaders of the Republican party. All seemed to be fully cognizant of the terms of the agreement and fully advised as to the difference between the parties having it under consideration. After some discussion the change in time to the 7th of February was agreed upon, and resolutions carrying out the terms of the agreement were spread on the records of the two houses the following morning, which was the day of the joint convention."

In short, those depositions prove the following:

1. That in November, 1898, soon after the election, the governor of the State, the secretary of state, who was also chairman of the Republican State committee, and the secretary of the said committee and others entered into a fraudulent conspiracy, the purpose of which was to elect Mr. Scott United States Senator.

2. And that the said conspirators, aided by the attorney-general and State senators and others in authority, accomplished their fraudulent purpose by fraudulent means.

The questions of law arising on the facts of this case will be briefly noticed.

It is urged by the majority of the committee that as each house of the legislative body was the judge of the election of its own members its decision can not be reviewed. This proposition, though often asserted, is not sound law, in the broad way it is asserted, because there are many cases to which it does not apply.

It is a universal rule of the courts that a judgment obtained by fraud will be set aside on timely application of the party injured if he is not in fault. One of the old judges put the law down in this form:

"The jurisdiction of courts of equity to set aside a decree obtained by fraud in an original bill filed for that purpose has long been unquestioned."

See Freeman on Judgments, sections 486 and 489, where the learning on this subject is collected.

The report of the majority of the committee states an exception to their general rule, which, if fairly applied to the facts, would be decisive against Mr. Scott. The paragraph of that report referred to is on page 8, and concludes in these words:

"In the past the Senate has investigated fraud and corruption in elections where the proceedings were regular and the form was lawful, and then declared there had been no election."

Senators sometimes forget that this Senate is the judge of the "elections, returns, and qualifications" of its own members.

There is no need to cite cases to prove that, under common law, and under the constitution of West Virginia, quoted in the majority report, Getzendanner and Pierson, after they were elected senators in 1886, and after serving as senators in January, 1887, resigned their seats by accepting offices of profit under the United States, and the State senate again elected them to seats in the senate. These senators were elected by the people and had their seats and resigned their seats and never were reelected by the people, but were reelected by the senate and voted for Scott.

But if it were admitted that the State senate were absolutely the judge of the elections and qualifications of its members, and that their decision could not be investigated elsewhere, still the record shows that in the case of Kidd the State senate did fraudulently and illegally suspend Kidd, who was duly elected a senator and received a certificate of election, and was duly sworn and admitted to his seat, and afterwards, on January 23, 1899, the senate passed a resolution, not as to his election or qualifications, not that he was not elected, not that his opponent, Morris, was elected, but the senate resolved in substance, without authority, that Morris should occupy Kidd's seat pending the contest—a fraudulent device, entirely outside of any pretense of authority, for the purpose of securing the election of Mr. Scott to a seat in this senate.

Remember that all of the members of both houses were 97, and on the vote as counted, Scott received 48, McGraw 46, and Goff 1. Getzendanner and Pierson, senators only by the fraudulent action of the senate, voted for Mr. Scott, and Kidd was prevented from voting against Scott by the revolutionary and fraudulent contrivances of the senate in suspending Kidd without any cause stated and without any authority to do so; for no man will dare to contend that any legislative body in any one of the United States has the authority to suspend a member without cause or evidence.

If you once establish such a doctrine, the inevitable result will be anarchy. For, unfortunately for this country, men like Governor Atkinson, Secretary of State Dawson, and Collector White are to be found to invent plans of fraud; and bold men like Attorney-General Rucker may be found to threaten bloodshed on "plans formulated," even when addressing a legislative committee as lawyers. And he the State's chief law officer!

The senate of the State, for cause, and by a two-thirds vote, could expel a member, or by a majority vote could decide a contest after hearing, but who so bold as to assert that the senate had authority, without any cause, to suspend a member pending a contest for his seat? And that contest in this case was merely a fraudulent pretense, invented by the governor and his associates, in champertous and fraudulent conspiracies, to institute contests and pay "all costs and expenses,"—"against the peace and dignity of the State."

Kidd's case, when he was suspended, was before a committee of the senate, and that committee had sent for and obtained certain ballots, but never afterwards asked for or received any other evidence. And the senate, after Mr. Scott was declared elected, unanimously declared that Kidd was elected. And peace was again a blessing in Charleston.

But it is insisted that Kidd and Dent were suspended by agreement. That agreement was, in itself, an illegal and void contract, and against public policy. And the purpose of the senate to elect Mr. Scott by fraud is clearly shown by giving Morris Kidd's seat pending the contest, and allowing Morris to vote for Scott on the 24th of January when the houses voted separately.

The following authorities cited by counsel demonstrate that the action of the senate in suspending Kidd from his seat, and the agreement made by five Republicans of the senate and five Democrats of the house of delegates, consenting to the suspension of Kidd and suspending Dent of the house, was illegal and void, and vitiated the pretended election of Mr. Scott, which was the result of such fraudulent practices.

In 1873, in the special session, there was a great debate of this question here raised, in the Caldwell case. It appeared that Caldwell had bought off his competitors and spent other money improperly, and afterwards Caldwell was regularly elected.

In that debate Senator Saulsbury said:

"What is meant by the authority conferred upon each House of Congress to judge of the election of its members? It is something distinct from judging of their qualifications and the returns of elections. It must mean that you may look into the election and judge not only whether it took place at the proper time and at the proper place, and by the proper legislative body (for these facts must appear on the face of the returns), but also to see if the election was conducted in the proper manner; that is, whether it was the free expression of the legislative will, uncontrolled and undeterred by force or fraud." (90.)

And Senator Morton, in the same case, said:

"If the Senate can not inquire into the circumstances attending the election of its members, whether such election was procured by bribery, corruption, or other matter impairing the freedom of elections, such inquiry can not be made anywhere. * * * The Constitution provides that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members.

"It may inquire into his qualifications, whether the member is 30 years old, had been nine years a citizen of the United States, and was an inhabitant of the State; whether the returns of the election are in due form and show an election by the lawful legislature of the State, certified as required by law, and whether the election was conducted according to law, and was free or attended by circumstances that would make it invalid, such as bribery, fraud, or intimidation. * * * Whatever impairs the freedom of elections is illegal and against public policy, and makes the election void." (Mar. 11.)

And Senator Pratt, speaking against Caldwell's claim to a seat, said:

"Called upon to pronounce whether that election was valid, can I say that such means were honest and proper, and not calculated to interfere with that freedom of elections which is the very soul of our political system?" (95.)

This case was referred to the committee on the protest of 49 members of the legislature of West Virginia against the seating of Mr. Scott. The entire legislature, by law, could not have been over 97. So a majority of the whole body protests.

And good government and fair dealing protest.

E. W. Pettus.

The foregoing resolution, reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was the subject of debate in the Senate April 25, 1900 (Cong. Rec., vol. 33, pp. 4651–4653); April 26, 1900 (ibid., pp. 4696–4710), and April 27, 1900 (ibid., p. 4742 and pp. 4750–4759).

[Extracts from remarks of Mr. McComas in support of the resolution declaring that Mr. Scott was duly elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia. Found in the proceedings of April 25, 1900, in the Congressional Record, vol. 33, pp. 4651 and 4652.]

"Mr. President, the certificate of the junior Senator from West Virginia was in due form, and he was seated.

"Certain remonstrants protested that he is not entitled to retain his seat.

"These memorials came in for decision by the committee on the proceedings in the journals, agreed facts, and admissions of counsel.

"It is true the remonstrants offered to prove the declarations of a couple of State officials, of several members of the assembly, and of attorneys before committees, and certain acts of little significance detailed in certain ex parte depositions, or, rather, printed copies of them.

"The committee was almost unanimous in the opinion that there was no proffer of evidence of frauds or intimidation to warrant any investigation of these vague and unimportant matters. I will briefly state the case made before the committee, confining myself to undisputed facts:

"On January 24, 1899, both houses voted separately for Senator.

"On January 25, 1899, both houses met in joint assembly. Ninety-five votes were cast. Mr. Scott received 48 votes, Mr. McGraw 46 votes, and Mr. Goff 1 vote. Mr. Scott received a clear majority of the votes cast and was declared duly elected Senator, and the convention adjourned.

"A quorum of the joint assembly, or quorum of each house, was present and voted. The proceedings were regular, and Mr. Scott was elected, unless some or all of the objections I now recite invalidate his election:

"1. The first objection assigned by the remonstrants is that there were 97 votes constituting the joint assembly; that 49 votes was a majority, but Mr. Scott received only 48 votes.

"But the journal shows 25 senators and 70 members present and voting. The total was 95 and Mr. Scott received 48 votes, a majority of the votes cast. It is true that by the apportionment of West Virginia the senate contained 1 more and the house 1 more member.

"Prima facie, from the journal, these seats were vacant or these members were not present. They did not, if present, vote or claim the right to vote. Mr. Scott's majority was a valid majority.

"As was said in Lapham and Miller (Senate Election Cases, p. 697):

"'The ground alleged is that there was not a majority of the whole legislature actually voting for the members chosen. In our opinion that is not necessary. There was a quorum of each house present in the joint assembly; there was a majority of that quorum actually voting for the members chosen. In our opinion that was a valid election.'

"See also Clark and Maginnis v. Sanders and Power (Senate Election Cases, 727); Davidson v. Call (Senate Election Cases, 806).

"The journals of the senate and house explain the nonparticipation of the senator from the fourth senatorial district and the member of the house of delegates from Taylor County.

"On January 20, 1899 (senate journal, p. 66), a resolution was introduced in the senate declaring that Kidd, the sitting member, was not elected and that Morris was duly elected, directing that Kidd vacate his seat and that Morris be sworn in.

"On January 23, 1899 (senate journal, 91–94), this resolution was considered and a substitute was adopted reciting the contest between Kidd and Morris, the reference to and pendency of the contest before the committee on privileges and elections, and the opinion of the senate that Morris was entitled to the seat pending the contest, wherefore the senate resolved that Kidd was not entitled and that Morris was entitled to a seat in the senate from the fourth senatorial district pending the contest, and that Morris be sworn in. Mr. Morris took the oath and was seated.

"On January 25, 1899 (senate journal, p. 1081), the senate adopted a resolution that the contested election case of Morris v. Kidd be the special order for February 7, 1899, with leave to either party to take testimony, and 'that pending the determination of such contest neither Morris nor Kidd should be entitled to vote or sit as a member of this body.'

"The journal of the house shows that in the contest of Dent for the seat of Brohard a like course was pursued, and a resolution was passed that pending the decision neither Dent nor Brohard 'be permitted to participate in the proceedings of this house.' The judgment of the senate was a finality in respect of Morris v. Kidd. The judgment of the house was a finality in respect of Dent v. Brohard. Each house, by the constitution of West Virginia, is made 'the judge of the election, returns, and qualification of its members.' Therefore, on January 25 only 95 members had the right to participate and vote in the joint assembly. Of these Mr. Scott received 48, a majority. Therefore the first objection is unfounded.

"2. The second objection is that Senators Getzendanner and Pearson, who voted for Mr. Scott, had forfeited their seats by accepting commissions in the regiment of State volunteers in the service of the United States during the Spanish-American war.

"These two members were 'hold-over' senators who, between the session of the last legislature and the assembling of the new legislature in 1899, had accepted, had served under, and had resigned their commissions prior to the meeting of the legislature.

"It appears by the journal of the joint assembly that Senators Getzendanner and Pearson were present therein and voted for Mr. Scott.

"The constitutional provision is that—

"'No person holding a lucrative office under the State, the United States, or any foreign office * * * shall be eligible to a seat in the legislature.'

"On January 20, 1899, resolutions were offered in the senate declaring that by virtue of this constitutional provision and the acceptance of said commissions each of these senators 'thereby became ineligible and forfeited his right to a seat in this body.' These resolutions were referred to the committee on privileges and elections, and on January 23, 1889, the committee reported in lieu of said resolutions a substitute declaring that Getzendanner and Pearson were legally qualified and entitled to hold their membership in the senate and had not vacated their seats therein under the provisions of section 13 of article 3. The senate adopted the substitute on January 24, 1899.

"The judgment of the senate of West Virginia upon the title of Senators Getzendanner and Pearson to their seats therein is a finality. The Senate of the United States can not reverse it. As before said, the State senate is, under the State constitution, 'the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.' Such constitutional powers have effect, not only to make the members of each house the judge in each case, but also to forbid that the members of any other tribunal shall be the judges thereof to review or reverse such original judgment. The jurisdiction of each of the houses of the State legislature is original and exclusive. (Case of H. A. Du Pont, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, Report No. 289, p. 104.)

"The senate of West Virginia is the only tribunal which could either hear or determine lawfully these objections to the qualifications of Senators Getzendanner and Pearson. Its judgment in their favor is final. The Senate of the United States has not authority to originate, hear, or determine any objections to the qualifications of those who acted and voted as members of the senate of the State. Where the title of an individual member of the legislature who has once been seated has been determined by a subsequent adjudication of the house to which he belongs, such judgment will not be here disturbed or inquired into. (Potter v. Robbins, Senate Election Cases, 179; Clark and Maginnis v. Sanders and Power, Senate Election Cases, 727; the case of David Turpie, Senate Election Cases, 719; the petition of H. A. Du Pont (minority report), Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, Report No. 289, pp. 98–104; Sykes v. Spencer, Senate Election Cases, 611.)

"It should be noted that the Senate of the United States in Stanton v. Lane (Senate Election Cases, 276), upon a similar case, came to a like conclusion with the senate of West Virginia. James H. Lane was elected a Senator from Kansas in April, 1861, and took his seat July 4, 1861. It appears that June 20, 1861, President Lincoln appointed him brigadier-general of volunteers; that he accepted the appointment and qualified to perform its duties, but had resigned the office. The governor of Kansas appointed Frederic P. Stanton to fill the vacancy, but on January 16, 1862, the Senate voted that Lane was entitled to his seat in that body. Of the majority some held that the office of brigadier-general did not exist on June 20, 1861; others that, although Lane held the office after he had been elected Senator, yet, having resigned the same before taking his seat in the Senate, he did not come within the constitutional provision (Art. I, sec. 6). It profits little here to discuss the reasons or motives of State senators or of the Senate."

"Mr. President, I claim that it has been my habit in discussing law questions to deal fairly with my own mind and to assert no proposition of law which I do not believe to be true. I do this as a matter of policy, if for no better reason; for the man who is in the habit of advocating false propositions of law will so debauch his own mind, no matter what may be his learning or brain power, that he can not see the truth, though he meet it at noon in the public road. He makes 'such a sinner' of his intellect 'as to credit his own lie.'

"The question now submitted for your judgment is whether, according to the law of the land, the Hon. N. B. Scott is entitled to a seat as a Senator from West Virginia. The Committee on Privileges and Elections have given their report to the effect that he was so entitled; but that report is now to undergo the scrutiny of the Senate.

"The learned and accurate lawyer who made the report and has ably presented the argument to sustain it has discussed two questions not now in issue, because they were unanimously decided by the committee in his favor and were abandoned by the parties contesting. The first was the objection that Senator Scott was not an inhabitant of West Virginia, and the second was that 48 votes were not a majority of the entire legislature. Neither of these objections was well founded in law, and nothing will be said by me as to either of them.

"The facts, from the evidence as received by the committee, are as follows:

"On the 11th of January, 1899, the legislature of West Virginia assembled. Each house was organized. In the Senate the Republicans had about two-thirds of the members. * * *

* * * * * * *

"The house of delegates was Democratic by a small majority. I beg Senators' attention to this part of the statement. In the senate objection was made to H. C. Getzendanner and E. G. Pierson being admitted to seats as senators, on the ground that each of them after election, in November, 1896, and after serving as senators in 1897, had accepted commissions as officers in the U. S. Army, an office of profit, and served as such officers, one as captain and the other as lieutenant.

"At first these objections were laid on the table, and the two persons objected to took their seats. Afterwards the matter was referred to the committee on privileges and elections, and the committee in substance found the facts as stated in the objection. But the committee found that each one of these army officers had been discharged before the legislature met in January. Therefore the committee reported that Getzendanner and Pierson were still members, and this report was adopted by a party vote on the 24th day of January, 1899. This decision was made on a demand for the previous question and without debate.

"It is proper to state here that the 24th day of January, the day on which this vote was taken, was the day on which each of the houses was to vote separately for Senator.

"Now, it is insisted that this was no disqualification, or, if it is, that the senate of the State of West Virginia was a proper judge of the election and qualification of its own members.

"Now that, as a general rule, is a correct proposition. Furthermore, it is a general rule that when the senate of a State decides on the election or qualification of its own members this body does not ordinarily inquire into it—not at all in ordinary cases. There comes up a contest, facts are heard, the matter is decided, and this body has time and again said that they will let it remain where it was decided.

"But that is not this case. Here two senators, regularly elected, appeared and offered to take their seats. It was objected that those two senators had resigned their seats by accepting office under the United States and that they could not be properly received in that body.

"Now, Mr. President, I do not dispute the proposition of law as asserted by the Senator from Maryland, that that is the general rule where you decide on the election and qualification of members, but in all cases in the law courts fraud vitiates every business transaction, if it is sufficiently brought to the attention of the court and in proper form. So fraud in this very matter we are considering vitiates every such proceeding. This body has so declared, and the courts have so declared, and the Senator from Maryland has so declared in this very report itself. To be sure, he did not seem to see exactly how it fits. I desire to read a paragraph from the report of the Senator from Maryland. I call it his report. It is the report of the committee, but it was prepared by him.

"Now, Mr. President, in that connection I beg to read another paragraph from another report of this same committee. I believe it is good law. The committee says it is and cites many authorities. This is the writing of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire:

"'It is clear that if, by bribery or corrupt practices on the part of the friends of a candidate who are conducting his canvass, votes are obtained for him without which he would not have had a majority, his election should be annulled, although proof is lacking that he knew of the bribery or corrupt practices.' (Pomeroy's case, Senate Election Cases, 426)

"A number of authorities are cited to prove the proposition, and it is proved. Well, are you going to put a bridle on this Senate so as to prevent them from looking into all sorts of fraud and corruption in the election of one of your body? If you are going to do that, you had as well abandon business and give it over to fraudulent men, and men who can buy what they want.

"Mr. President, on this subject that I am at present considering—that is to say, whether those two senators had a right to seats in that body—it does not depend upon any statute law; it does not depend upon any constitutional law. It has been the law of England from the very foundation of the common law to the present day. It is now and always has been the law in the United States and of every one of the States where the common law prevails.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. President, we were talking about two military senators, I will call them. The Senator from Maryland comes up like the brave and fair lawyer that he is, and says that the decision in the Lane case was not the law. It has always been the law in England that where a man holds one office and accepts another inconsistent with the discharge of the duties of the first he thereby resigns his first office. This has been the law from time immemorial.

"I recollect an old case, away back yonder in the black-letter books, where a justice of the peace in England concluded that it would suit his purposes if he had the office of constable also, and thereupon he applied for the office of constable and was appointed constable of his bailiwick. The case came up for judgment, to ascertain whether he was a justice of the peace any longer, and the judges said he was not; that by accepting the office of constable, which was utterly inconsistent with the office of justice of the peace, he had resigned his first office; it was vacant, and he could not discharge any of its functions. That is a simple case. It is away back in the black-letter books, and there is nothing to the contrary of it since.

"You talk about the constitutions of the various States. There have been some people—not the Senator from Maryland—but there have been some people who have actually tried to fritter away the constitution of West Virginia in reference to this subject, which says that a man who holds an office of profit under the United States, or any other power, is ineligible to the office of member of the legislature of West Virginia. If he is ineligible he can not hold the office lawfully. A man can not go into an office and go out of an office and come back into the office at his will and pleasure. An office is a continued thing. One term of an office can not be broken in two and renewed at the will of the man who holds it. If a man be ineligible to hold an office after he is elected to it, he goes out."

WILLIAM A. CLARK, Senator from Montana.

At the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress William A. Clark was duly admitted to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Montana for the term of six years, commencing March 4, 1899. On the same day a memorial signed by certain citizens of Montana was presented in the Senate protesting against the validity of the election of Mr. Clark, and a petition signed by other citizens of Montana to the same effect was also presented. These were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The committee submitted a report in the case April 23, 1900, in which report the committee found that Mr. Clark was not legally elected to the office of United States Senator from the State of Montana, for the reason that while he received 54 votes in the legislature by which he was chosen, and there were only 39 against him, leaving him an apparent majority of 15, he had obtained more than 8 votes of this majority through illegal and corrupt practices. The committee also submitted with their report a resolution that Mr. Clark was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate by the legislature of the State of Montana.

Two of the members of the committee, while agreeing to the resolution reported by the committee, dissented from many parts of the report and did not agree with the majority of the committee in the general conduct of the investigation of the case, nor in regard to the admission of much of the evidence which was received by the committee in the case.

The resolution submitted by the committee was the subject of debate in the Senate, and on the 11th day of May, 1900, Mr. Clark resigned his office as Senator.

The history of the case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings of the Senate in the case as published in the Congressional Record, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with the views of the minority of the committee, a statement of the days on which the case was discussed in the Senate, with a reference to the record of the same, and also a reference to the letter of Mr. Clark containing his resignation.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE.

MONDAY, December 4, 1899.

Mr. Carter presented a memorial protesting against the validity of the election of William A. Clark as a Senator from the State of Montana. He also presented a petition asking the Senate at the earliest practicable moment to set a time and place for the hearing before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the protest therein set forth. The memorial and petition were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1899.

Mr. Chandler presented certain exhibits in connection with the contest against the right of Senator W. A. Clark to a seat in the Senate. The papers were received, ordered to be printed, and were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, December 7, 1899.

Mr. Chandler, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate the right and title of William A. Clark to a seat as Senator from the State of Montana; and said committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and that the expense of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee."

TUESDAY, December 12, 1899.

Mr. Gallinger, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported by Mr. Chandler, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on the 7th instant, relative to the investigation of the title of William A. Clark to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Montana, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MONDAY, April 23, 1900.

Mr. Chandler, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution:

"Resolved, That William A. Clark was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Montana."

He also submitted a written report of the committee and the testimony taken by the committee.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of the same Senators named in the statement preceding the report of the committee in the case of Nathan B. Scott, supra.]

Mr. Chandler, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report, to accompany Senate Res. No. 284:

THE RIGHT OF SENATOR WILLIAM A. CLARK, OF MONTANA, TO A SEAT IN THE SENATE.

This case was referred to the committee on December 4, 1899, upon a memorial dated February 25, 1899, signed by 27 members of the legislative assembly of Montana, and upon a later memorial signed by Robert B. Smith, governor of Montana; T. E. Collins, State treasurer; Henry C. Stiff, speaker of the house of representatives of the sixth legislative assembly of Montana; A. J. Campbell, member of Congress from Montana, and Charles S. Hartman, ex-Representative in Congress from Montana.

On December 7, 1899, the Senate directed the committee to investigate the right of W. A. Clark to a seat as Senator from Montana and authorized the sending for persons and papers. The committee began consideration of the case January 5, 1900, and hearings were held on January 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17, 19, 20, 22, 23, 29, 30, and 31; February 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, and 28; March 1 and 2; April 3, 5, and 6; and the finding of the committee was made April 10, 1900.

FINDING OF THE COMMITTEE.

The finding of the committee is that the election to the Senate of William A. Clark, of Montana, is null and void on account of briberies, attempted briberies, and corrupt practices by his agents, and of violations of the laws of Montana defining and punishing crimes against the elective franchise.

THE ADMITTED OR UNDISPUTED FACTS.

This finding is made in view of certain admitted or undisputed facts, with their attendant circumstances, appearing in the testimony taken by the committee, as follows:

I.

Prior to 1895 the elections in Montana were accompanied by enormous expenditures of money, unquestionably involving widespread belief that extensive corruption was resorted to in all elections. Ex-Governor Hauser, a witness called by Senator Clark in his defense, testified that at the first State election the Big Four, so called, consisting of Senator W. A. Clark, Mr. Broadwater, Mr. Marcus Daly, and himself, as first contributions gave $40,000 each; and he also estimated that the expenditures made in connection with the contest to determine whether Anaconda or Helena should be the capital of the State were upward of $1,000,000. Senator Clark said he spent over $100,000 in that contest.

II.

On February 25, 1895, Montana undertook to protect herself against corruption in elections and passed a law relative to crimes against the elective franchise, which limited in purpose and amount the political expenditures which could be made in any election, either by a political committee or a candidate, especially naming a candidate for United States Senator, who could not give more than $1,000 to any one committee in one county and could not pay more than $1,000 for his personal expenses in lawful ways specified, and provided that every political committee should make a public return of its expenditures, stating from whom every dollar was received and to whom every dollar was paid, and that every person acting otherwise than under a political committee should make a similar public return; and further provided a fine and imprisonment against persons omitting to make the return required by law.

III.

Senator Clark has been constantly a candidate for office. He was a candidate for Congress in 1888 and defeated. In 1890 there were two legislatures in Montana. He was elected United States Senator by the Democratic legislature, but was not seated. He was again a candidate for the Senate in 1893, but there was no election. In 1895 he was voted for as the Democratic candidate, but Senator Carter was elected.

In the summer of 1898, after he had consulted with Governor Hauser and other supporters, including at that time Mr. A. J. Campbell, a committee of his friends was created outside the State committee of the Democratic party, which was in the hands of persons not favorable to him; this, his committee, being organized for the purpose of controlling the politics of the State and securing the legislature to meet in January, 1899. This committee consisted of his son, Charles W. Clark, William McDermott, and A. J. Davidson, agent. Charles W. Clark was made treasurer, and the assistants of the committee were John B. Wellcome, Walter M. Bickford, A. J. Steele, John S. M. Neill, Frank E. Corbett, E. L. Whitmore, and Walter Cooper. To this committee Senator Clark gave unlimited authority to expend money which he agreed to furnish; an estimate, however, being made that at least $35,000 would be necessary to secure the State convention, and that $75,000 might be needed to secure the State legislature.

IV.

In the canvass which ensued the approximate expenditures admitted by the various members of his committee and their assistants were as follows: By Charles W. Clark, $25,000; by McDermott, $22,000; by Davidson, agent, $22,300; by Wellcome, $25,000; by Steele, $11,000; by Corbett, $5,000; by Whitmore, $4,600; by Cooper, $2,900, mainly furnished by Charles W. Clark; and the amount of these expenditures Senator Clark himself paid to his son. The advances and payments made by Senator Clark to his committee and agents, as admitted by him, amounted to about $139,000, of which sum Charles W. Clark received from him on August 12, 1898, $35,000; October 17, $20,000; November 23, $40,000, and February 13, 1900, $20,592; and in addition to this $139,000 Senator Clark paid $5,000 to McDermott, one of his agents; $5,000 to Wellcome, his attorney, and $5,000 to E. C. Day, a member of the legislature.

V.

None of the members of his committee or their assistants made the sworn returns required by law, nor did Senator Clark himself make any return.

VI.

In December, 1898, Senator Clark began negotiations with one H. W. McLaughlin, a member of the legislature, for the purchase of his wood lots and sawmills, and on the 9th day of December bought all Mr. McLaughlin's property for the sum of $24,684, paying $10,000 down, and on the 12th of March paid him $6,000 cash and $8,684 in stock of a new lumber company to which the property was transferred, which lumber company employed Mr. McLaughlin as its agent, with a salary of $200 per month.

VII.

On December 31, 1898, Mr. Walter M. Bickford received from Mr. Charles W. Clark five one-thousand-dollar bills and four five-hundred-dollar bills, and went to Missoula for the purpose of purchasing a supposed indebtedness on account of his ranch of one E. P. Woods, a member of the legislature, but, not succeeding in meeting Mr. Woods, he returned the money to Mr. Charles W. Clark. In February, 1899, Mr. Massena Bullard paid to Mr. Kemper the amount due upon the ranch and a deed was made running to Mrs. Woods, which was not recorded, but in January, 1900, the property having been sold to other persons for $9,750, the deed to Mrs. Woods was destroyed and new deeds made to the new purchasers.

Senator Clark knew of Mr. Bickford's attempts to purchase the indebtedness which Woods owed, and the correspondence shows that the object was to secure Mr. Wood's vote for Senator Clark. Mr. Bickford testified: "In pursuance of that letter (the letter of November 21 from one Ector) and of the invitation I at that time received, I made arrangements to obtain, for the purpose of using it to prevent the indebtedness of Mr. Woods going into the hands of Mr. Daly's friends, the sum of $7,000 with which to take up that indebtedness." On November 12, 1898, Mrs. Woods mortgaged their sheep and cattle for $1,000, payable in one year, and on April 22, 1899, paid the mortgage debt. Mr. Woods has left Montana and gone to New Mexico.

VIII.

Mr. W. E. Tierney was senator and W. C. Eversole and Michael Shovlin were representatives from Broadwater County. Mr. Tierney voted for Mr. Clark on the first ballot, and Eversole and Shovlin came over on the sixth. Mr. Tierney was a dealer in general merchandise in three small firms—Miss A. M. Darcy & Co., Tierney & Co., and Eversole & Co.—which had moderate capital and were in debt. After the legislature adjourned, on March 3, Mr. Shovlin deposited $8,500 in the Montana National Bank. Eversole, who had in fact been only a clerk, bought out Mr. Tierney; paying him $1,600 in cash and a credit with his new firm of $3,000.

On June 1 Mr. Tierney organized the State Bank of Townsend with a capital stock of $25,000, of which he took $5,800. Mr. Shovlin took $1,000 and Mr. Eversole $1,000, nearly all the $25,000 passing through Mr. Tierney's hands in currency. His $5,800 he says he took from the money drawer in a safe in the office of Miss Darcy & Co., but whence this $5,800 came he did not show by any writing whatever.

IX.

Mr. E. L. Whitmore, the confidental agent and employee of Mr. Charles W. Clark, purchased of D. G. Warner, a member of the legislature, certain lots in the town of Boulder, Jefferson County, and a small ranch near by and took the deed in his own name, paying the amount of $7,500 in bank bills in Helena in the first week of January, 1899, the deed being recorded February 1, 1899. Mr. Warner has left Montana and gone to California.

X.

Mr. H. H. Garr, member of the legislature, lodged a package during the session with Mr. Peeler, of the bank of Kalispell. After the legislature adjourned he obtained the package, went to his home, and in the name of Miss Wickham, his wife's aunt, a milliner, who had lived with him for seven years, purchased a ranch for $3,500, for which he paid in currency, including a thousand-dollar bill, which money he said he obtained from his wife's aunt, believing she had accumulated and kept it in a box in her room in his house.

Mr. Garr had been a poor man, with little or no property, earning sometimes $50 or $75 a month as a notary public, sometimes nothing. He had in cash $75 or $80 when elected and borrowed $25 to go to Helena with. His wife's aunt paid board in the family at the rate of $2.50 a week. He had no previous knowledge of how she had accumulated this money. Mr. Steele had obtained interviews with him before the legislature met with a view to securing his vote, and after his arrival he figured in the Whiteside exposure.

XI.

Mr. John H. Geiger was a Republican who, after Mr. Whiteside's exposure, was seated in the legislature as a senator, in place of Mr. Whiteside, on the 26th day of January, by the votes of the Republicans and the Democratic supporters of Senator Clark, on the ground that his name on a few of his ballots had been marked at the wrong end, and on the 28th Mr. Geiger voted for Senator Clark. He was a man with no regular occupation, was entirely without means, and a borrower of small sums. During the session of the legislature he received and carried home with him $3,600. After accounting for one or two petty sums he claims that he obtained this money by faro gambling and through $1,100 in bills which he found in his room and believed came in connection with some bills pending in the legislature which Mr. John B. Wellcome was carrying through as attorney.

XII.

Mr. B. F. Fine, a member of the legislature and a mining operator with no property, in May after it had adjourned, in pursuance of an agreement made during the session by Senator Clark after his election as Senator, received $2,000 from Senator Clark's bankers, and since that date has received other moneys, making the sum of $5,000 in all, which has been all his earnings since his nomination, his only business being the hunting up of testimony to disbar or impeach Mr. W. A. Clark, of Madison County, one of the principal witnesses against Senator Clark, to do which no steps have yet been taken.

XIII.

Mr. Stephen Bywater, a Republican, 30 years of age, and a railroad conductor, voted for Mr. Clark for the first time on the eighteenth ballot, when he was elected. On the 3d day of March, immediately after the legislature adjourned, he deposited in the Montana National Bank $15,000. He accounts for it by saying that he brought from Kalispell, his home, $6,000 in currency, which he kept with him during the whole session of the legislature, and by saying that he received on March 3 $9,000 from his brother for the purchase of stock in a mining company in British Columbia, but he produced no writing in confirmation of his statement as to either the $6,000 or the $9,000. He did produce a prospectus and letter showing that there was such a mining company and that he was its president, and a Mr. Peeler, a broker, with whom Mr. Bywater kept an account, testified that Mr. Bywater also kept a package of money not included in the bank account.

XIV.

Mr. E. C. Day was Senator Clark's candidate for speaker, and was defeated in the Democratic caucus, receiving 25 votes against 30 votes for Mr. Stiff. Mr. Day was the leader of Mr. Clark's forces in the legislature during all the ballotings after the second. On February 13 Senator Clark personally wrote a letter directing that $5,000 should be given to Mr. Day for his services in the legislature and as a retainer as counsel in the future. This amount was received by Mr. Day, through Mr. Wellcome and Mr. Davidson, on the 3d day of March, the day after the legislature adjourned.

Mr. Day testified that the services for which he received the $5,000 were as follows: "I had acted as the manager, you might say, or leader of his forces upon the floor of the house. I attended to keeping a quorum present and seeing that friends of his were sent for that were not present at roll call, and made motions and attended to the ordinary parliamentary—perhaps you would call it—procedure of his friends in that body." Later Mr. Day received from Charles W. Clark $2,000 as fees in the Wellcome proceedings and $1,000 in two suits brought by Mr. Whiteside against the Butte Miner and the Helena Independent.

XV.

Mr. W. W. Beasley, a Republican representative, first voted for Senator Clark on the eighteenth ballot, when he was chosen, and that night or the next night he left Helena for St. Paul, having in his possession about $5,000 in currency, at least $1,000 of which was a thousand-dollar bill. He claimed that he had taken this money with him to Helena and carried it in his vest pocket during the whole session. By no writing did he show whence he received it or what he did with it. He claimed that he kept the money with him because he was in embarrassed circumstances in the sheep business and was afraid of law suits. When he was elected he owed a board bill of nearly $400, and while in Helena took out a life-insurance policy and gave a note for the premium. All the time he had a bank account in the Thomas Cruse Savings Bank at Helena.

ADDITIONAL STRENGTHENING FACTS.

While the findings of the committee are justified by the foregoing admitted and undisputed facts, with their attendant circumstances standing alone, those facts are strengthened by additional facts, including various unsuccessful attempts to secure votes by offers of money, which, although denied, are found by the majority of the committee to be sustained by the preponderance of the testimony. It would unnecessarily encumber and extend this report to attempt to give these additional facts in detail.

THE WHITESIDE $30,000 INCIDENT.

In addition to these unsuccessful attempts at bribery certain other alleged attempts will be narrated, because there is difference of opinion in the committee concerning them. They are as follows:

The case of W. A. Clark, State senator from Madison County, is one of those embraced in the Whiteside exposure. Mr. Clark and Mr. Whiteside testified that Mr. Wellcome placed $10,000 in an envelope and handed it to Mr. Whiteside, Mr. Clark's initials being written by the latter on the back of the envelope, the amount to be delivered to Mr. Clark in case he voted for Senator Clark. This money was part of the $30,000 produced by Mr. Whiteside before the legislative committee. Mr. Wellcome denied these statements.

State Senator H. L. Myers testified that in like manner $10,000 was placed in an envelope, upon the back of which he wrote his initials, and the package was retained by Mr. Whiteside to be delivered to him in case he voted for Mr. Clark. Mr. Whiteside testified that the $10,000 was furnished by Mr. Wellcome. Mr. M. L. Hewett testified that Mr. Charles W. Clark authorized the payment of $10,000 to Myers. Prior to the session of the legislature Mr. Charles W. Clark had, as shown by a letter signed by him, sent $500 to Mr. Myers as a retainer as counsel for the Bridger Coal Company, which Mr. Myers did not accept. But Mr. Clark denied the statement made by Mr. Hewett, and Mr. Wellcome denied the statement of Mr. Whiteside.

As to Representative H. H. Garr, Mr. Whiteside testified that in like manner $5,000 was furnished him by Mr. Wellcome for Mr. Garr and placed in an envelope, on the back of which Mr. Garr wrote his initials, Mr. Whiteside retaining the package as in the other two cases. Mr. Garr admits seeing the money and writing his name upon the back of the envelope, but says it was for purposes of identification, and that he did not know what the transaction meant. Mr. Wellcome denied these statements.

Mr. Whiteside, who was a State senator, testified that in like manner $5,000 was given to him by Mr. Wellcome as part of $10,000 which he was to receive for his vote for Senator Clark, which he placed in an envelope and later produced before the legislative committee. Mr. Wellcome denied these statements.

It is in connection with these last four cases of attempted bribery—those of Messrs. Clark of Madison, Myers, Garr, and Whiteside—that the controversy concerning Senator Clark's election has been largely maintained from the beginning.

The reasons why a majority of the committee find that, on the whole, the statements of Messrs. Clark of Madison, Myers, and Whiteside are true, notwithstanding the denials of Mr. Wellcome and others, may be briefly stated. The three accusers undoubtedly occupied the position of detectives, who willfully deceived the parties with whom they were dealing and against whom they made charges. On the other hand, the parties against whom they testified and who make the denials are charged with crimes to which, if guilty, they would be quite certain to add the offense of false swearing.

The majority of the committee, under all the circumstances appearing, are not willing to consider the situation as one of equilibrium between the detectives on the one hand and the alleged lawbreakers on the other. If Messrs. Clark of Madison, Myers, and Whiteside testified falsely, they must have contemplated in the beginning a conspiracy of the basest character, to be followed up by perjury of the worst sort, and they must have intended to pass through ordeals in the course of the investigations which would be made to which it can not be inferred they were willing to subject themselves merely to prevent Senator Clark from becoming a United States Senator.

THE ALLEGED DALY CONSPIRACY.

In the opinion of the majority there was no affirmative disproof produced by Senator Clark at any time showing that the facts in connection with the $30,000 exposure were not true. The charge that the accusations and the exposure resulted from a conspiracy formed and carried forward by Mr. Marcus Daly was a necessity of Mr. Clark's canvass and defense. But Mr. Daly and Mr. Conrad and others who were suspected of conspiracy denied all knowledge of the $30,000, of which $27,000 was in one-thousand-dollar bills, which had been produced by Mr. Whiteside as the money furnished by Mr. Wellcome in the attempted briberies. No one-thousand-dollar bills were shown to have been in the hands of any of the alleged Daly conspirators. On the other hand, the five one-thousand-dollar bills and four five-hundred-dollar bills which Mr. Bickford took from C. W. Clark and carried to Missoula on December 31, in connection with the E. P. Wood's transaction, were returned to Mr. Clark on January 1, and during the ensuing week, when the alleged briberies were attempted, large sums in currency were in the hands of Mr. C. W. Clark and Mr. Wellcome, including various one-thousand-dollar bills.

Mr. Clark, on January 3, had brought to him by a Mr. Hirshfield $9,000 in currency, in which were three one-thousand-dollar bills, and from this $9,000, or the money returned by Mr. Bickford, he gave Mr. Wellcome three or four one-thousand-dollar bills. On December 28 Mr. Wellcome drew from the bank $10,000, of which he says one, two, three, four, or five were one-thousand-dollar bills, and he carried them in the inside pocket of his vest until he used them. There were on the 3d or 4th of January three one-thousand-dollar bills and eight five-hundred-dollar bills in the possession of Mr. Whitmore, Mr. Charles W. Clark's confidential agent in the purchase of D. G. Warner's property. Charles W. Clark testified that his income was $250,000 per year.

In connection with the consideration of these last four cases of attempted bribery—of Clark of Madison, Myers, Garr, and Whiteside—it is important to state, in view of the difference of opinion in the committee concerning the credibility of Messrs. Clark of Madison, Myers, and Whiteside, that the whole committee find that if all the testimony concerning the $30,000 and all the testimony of Mr. Whiteside and Mr. Clark, of Madison, were laid aside there would still remain sufficient evidence in the case to lead the committee to find, as they do, that Mr. Clark's election is void. From the briberies which have been established the majority of the committee feel justified in finding that there were other successes in procuring, by corrupt practices, the votes of members of the legislature, where the facts naturally can not be directly proved.

THE CONDUCT OF THE REPUBLICAN LEGISLATORS.

The conduct of the Republican members of the legislature who, on the 28th day of January, left their Republican candidate and voted for Senator Clark and gave him his election, in the opinion of the majority of the committee, calls for special criticism. Senator Clark, beginning with 7 votes on January 10, had carried his votes up to 41 on the 27th of January. Mr. Conrad, beginning with 36 votes, had, on the 27th, 29 votes, and until that day his natural strength of over 30 votes had not been impaired from the beginning. There was an absolute deadlock and no possibility of the election of a Democrat without the aid of the Republicans.

On January 28, on the second ballot, Mr. Clark's vote was carried from 41 up to 54. Mr. Conrad's went down from 30 to 27, but only one of his supporters, Mr. Moran, voted for Senator Clark. Four Republicans, McKay, Worden, Hedges, and Lindsay, voted for the Republican candidate, Mr. Marshall, for whom they had first voted on January 10.

Eleven Republicans—Messrs. Geiger, Hobson, Mitchell, Phillips, Beasley, Bywater, Ingersoll, Jaqueth, Long, Magee, and Marcyes—went over to Senator Clark and gave him the election.

It is difficult to account for these Republican votes for Senator Clark. Senator Clark's candidacy had been tainted on the 10th of January by the Whiteside exposure. The facts exposed had not been disproved on January 28. It is true that a grand jury composed of six persons had reported that while there was evidence tending to show that money had been used it would not, in their judgment, warrant a conviction by a trial jury, but no other fact impugning the testimony of Messrs. Whiteside, Clark, of Madison, and Myers had then appeared.

The reasons given for the Republican votes for Mr. Clark seem to be pretenses and covers. Mr. Clark, who had been negotiating with Mr. Hobson, the leader of the Republicans, wrote a letter on the 16th of January, in which he declared himself to be in favor of a tariff on Montana products. Some of the Republicans said there ought not to be a deadlock, and that it would be better to have a Democratic Senator than a vacancy.

No one pretends that any effort was made to bring about the election of any other Democrat that Mr. Clark, against whose agents the charges of bribery had been made. The committee do not say that the votes of all the 11 Republicans were improperly secured, but that those of Mr. Geiger, Mr. Beasley, and Mr. Bywater were has already been found. The circumstances of suspicion against the others are numerous.

Senator S. S. Hobson is mainly responsible for the action of the Republican members. He was the chairman of their caucus and the leader in the Clark movement. He early began negotiations with Mr. Clark, and the latter's written promise that he would be an independent tariff Democrat was addressed to Mr. Hobson under the date of January 16.

Mr. Hobson was a man of moderate means. When he was elected he owed $22,000 or $23,000 to the Fergus County Bank, of which he was president. This he paid in May, 1899, and went East and to Europe about the time Senator Clark went; and when in connection with the Fergus County Bank he feared some manifestation of indignation at his course from ex-Senator T. C. Power, Senator Clark, in accordance with a promise he had made soon after his election, promptly purchased the $46,000 of the bank stock which Mr. Power owned and took a transfer thereof, which has not been recorded on the books of the bank.

In the face of all the facts tending to impeach the conduct of so many of the Republican members, and of the evident political reasons why they should not have contributed their votes to the election of Senator Clark, a Democrat, under charges of corruption, the finding that Senator Clark's election was obtained by corrupt practices, in the opinion of the majority, is much strengthened by the action of the 11 Republicans who, on the 28th day of January, abandoned their own party and thus strangely elected a Democratic Senator.

THE DISOBEDIENCE OF THE MONTANA LAW CONCERNING CRIMES AGAINST THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

The direct violations by Senator Clark and his committee and agents of the provisions of the Montana laws, before stated, are of the first importance in connection with the conclusions reached by the committee. The citizens and legislature of Montana in 1895, conscious of the discredit into which the State had fallen by the enormous expenditure of money in previous elections, made an earnest and legitimate effort to prevent corruption in politics in the future, and the act of February 25, 1895, was passed and incorporated into the penal code of that year.

RECITAL OF THE SUBSTANCE OF THE LAW.

A concise but correct and complete analysis of this law of 1895 is as follows:

The Montana Penal Code, in Title IV, headed "Crimes against the elective franchise," in section 85 of the act of February 25, 1895, provides that no person, to aid in his election to a public office, shall, directly or indirectly, by himself or through another person, expend or promise to expend any money or other valuable thing, except, as later provided, "for personal expenses and to a political committee."

Section 86 provides that a candidate may pay—

"(1) His own personal expenses for traveling and purposes properly incidental to traveling.

"(2) For sending out special publications giving his position and views.

"(3) For stationery and postage, telegraph and telephone and other public messenger service, and other petty personal expenses. 'And in no other case whatever' shall the total sum for his own personal expenses as authorized exceed the sum of $1,000 by any candidate for United States Senator."

Section 87 provides that a candidate may pay money to a political committee, not exceeding $1,000 by a candidate for United States Senator, nor to more than one committee in any county.

Section 88 applies the term "political committee" to "any combination of persons" who shall aid a party, principle, or candidate, and every such committee or combination must have a treasurer who shall keep its accounts.

Section 90 requires every treasurer to file his account within thirty days after an election, stating in detail his receipts and expenditures.

Section 91 requires every person who, acting otherwise than under the authority of a committee, expends money, to file such a statement as is required of a treasurer "in the county in which he is a legal voter."

Section 98 requires every statement to be made on oath.

Section 104 punishes violations of sections 90 and 91 by fine not exceeding $1,000 and imprisonment for not more than three months.

After the passage, in 1895, of this law punishing crimes against the elective franchise there was no serious occasion to test its provisions until 1898. In 1896 the coalition of the Silver Republicans with the Democrats made the State overwhelmingly Democratic, the plurality for Mr, Bryan being 32,043, and for Mr. Hartman, the Bryan Congressman, 24,503. In 1898, when Senator Clark renewed his canvass for the United States Senate, and his friends determined to directly disregard the law, he had no right to expend more than $1,000 through his one committee, nor more than $1,000 for his own personal expenses.

He expended a sum vastly in excess of the limit provided by law, and failed to render any return, and no such return was made by the aforesaid persons acting in his behalf. This failure to make return was with full knowledge of the fact that it was widely charged and widely believed that the election had been accomplished by bribery and the corrupt expenditure of money on a very large scale. He also, in June, 1899, with full knowledge of this belief and these charges, but in accordance with what he testified was his custom, destroyed all his checks, including those for his expenditures in his canvass, and was unable to give any full and satisfactory vouchers for the money so expended by him and his agents.

The committee find the case proved without relying upon such destruction of checks, failure to render accounts, and disregard of the legal limit of expenditure. But they furnish to the committee strong additional reasons for believing the other evidence, which seems to them to establish the corruption charged.

On the other hand, returns were made, as appears in the book of testimony, by the Republican State committee of expenditures of $4,291.31, by the Democratic State committee of $9,161.49, by the Silver Republican State Committee of $1,708.25, by the People's Party State committee of $1,193.50, by the Silverbow County Democratic committee of $10,005.06, by the Silverbow County Silver Republican committee of $1,453.05.

Mr. Marcus Daly testified that he contributed to the State committee $4,500, to the Silverbow County committee $2,500, to the Deer Lodge County committee $500, to the Missoula County committee $250; making his total contributions $7,750. Mr. Daly was not a candidate and has never been a candidate for any office. Mr. W. G. Conrad, who was the principal opposing Democratic candidate for United States Senator against Mr. Clark, swore that he contributed to the State and various county committees between $5,000 and $10,000, not over $1,000 to any one committee, and after the election he spent between $200 and $300 outside of hotel bills, but paid no money in aid of his candidacy for Senator.

QUESTIONS OF LAW INVOLVED IN THE CASE.

In justifying the finding of the committee it is not necessary to discuss any doubtful questions of law.

(1) It is clear that if by bribery or corrupt practices on the part of the friends of a candidate who are conducting his canvass votes are obtained for him without which he would not have had a majority his election should be annulled, although proof is lacking that he knew of the bribery or corrupt practices. (Pomeroy's case, Senate Election Cases, 426; Caldwell's case, 430; Clayton's case, 444; Ingall's case, 692; Payne's case, 700, 705, 706; Minority report, 712.)

(2) It seems to have been admitted that if the person elected clearly participated in any one act of bribery or attempted bribery he should be deprived of his office, although the result of the election was not thereby changed. (Pomeroy's case, Senate Election Cases, 426; where Mr. Pomeroy had 84 votes against 25.)

According to the law, as understood by the committee, Senator Clark can not be permitted to retain his seat. He received 54 votes and there were 39 against him, leaving him an apparent majority of 15. If he obtained through illegal and corrupt practises 8 votes which would otherwise have been cast against him, he was not legally elected. More than this number of votes, the committee find from all the evidence, was thus obtained.

It is also a reasonable conclusion upon the whole case that Senator Clark is fairly to be charged with knowledge of the acts done in his behalf by his committee and his agents conducting his canvass. He arrived in Helena from Butte on January 4 and remained there until after his election on January 28, and was in constant conference with his committee and agents.

REJECTED TESTIMONY—CRITICISM OF THE PROSECUTORS.

There has been much testimony received by the committee which has not proved of substantial value. Many of the witnesses were unreliable, having made contradictory statements and having apparently sought to obtain from both sides of the controversy money for testifying.

Much criticism has been made of the contestants, especially of Mr. A. J. Campbell, a member of the House of Representatives, and an active prosecutor of the charges against Senator Clark. Some members of the committee can not refrain from expressing their disapproval of many of the methods pursued by Mr. Campbell and Mr. Whiteside in the prosecution of the charges against Senator Clark, and they do not approve of the actions of Mr. Daly in agreeing to furnish an unlimited amount of money to carry on the prosecution.

It appears from the evidence that Mr. Campbell, among other things, made a suggestion in a letter to a detective employed by him indicating that he wished the detective to obtain information from some member of the grand jury of one of the counties in Montana; and, further, that his stenographer or secretary gave several hundred dollars to two persons who made affidavits bearing on matters involved in this prosecution, the drafts for which sum Mr. Campbell paid. It also appears that Mr. Campbell, in the course of the prosecution, participated in opening a letter written by Mr. Bickford to one Jesse B. Root.

It further appears that Mr. Campbell was one of the committee of friends consulted by Senator Clark in the summer of 1898 at the opening of the canvass, and that he was nominated for Congress at the Democratic convention held that year by the supporters of Senator Clark, as well as other members of the convention. In June, 1899, Mr. Campbell became the attorney for a corporation in which Marcus Daly was largely interested.

While it is true that bribery can never be proved by the testimony of the briber nor of the person bribed, and that it is almost always necessary to obtain the required information from go-betweens or persons who have explored the field and made reports backward and forward as to the probability of obtaining results by bribery, yet some members of the committee believe that this does not justify the character of acts which are proved and established against Mr. Campbell. Some members of the committee, however, do not join in any criticisms of Mr. Campbell and Mr. Daly.

These go-betweens who were employed by Mr. Campbell testified before the committee, most of them in the last instance, in behalf of Senator Clark. Some of their statements were true and some false.

The testimony of these persons, where they had made conflicting statements, has not been regarded by the committee unless corroborated, as the testimony of accomplices and detectives ought always to be corroborated. These witnesses, whose conduct has occasioned comment, had all been originally employed by Senator Clark or his committee or his friends. They are as follows:

One Z. T. Cason was retained by Senator Clark personally to endeavor to secure the vote of Representative Marcyes, and after the election was over, in a letter dated February 3, 1899, Senator Clark sent him $500. Cason testified before the supreme court and before this committee that he was authorized by Senator Clark to offer $10,000 to Mr. Marcyes. Later, getting into communication with Mr. Jesse B. Root, who was Mr. John B. Wellcome's law partner, he received $1,500 from him, and in consideration thereof signed a letter drafted by Root, dated December 8, 1899, saying that his previous statement was untrue, and then went to Baker City, Oreg., where he remained under an assumed name until he was caught by the subpœna of this committee.

One Benjamin Hill, during the senatorial contest, was a supporter of Senator Clark, and was paid by Senator Clark's clerk $350. He later met Whiteside and agreed to get evidence against Senator Clark, and told him what he now says was a "pack of damn lies," and he also entered into communication with Mr. Campbell. On June 30, 1899, he made a long affidavit against Senator Clark, which he now testifies was wholly false. He subsequently revealed to Senator Clark's counsel what he claimed to be the whole story. He was paid $610 by Mr. Wellcome, and appears to have received from the prosecutors about $1,500.

One L. L. Wright went to Helena to work for Senator Clark, and received from Mr. A. J. Steele $240. Later he engaged, through Benjamin Hill, to get evidence for the prosecution against Senator Clark, and on the 3d of November, 1899, he made an affidavit for the contestants, which he testified before the committee was false. He received $250 from Benjamin Hill, which appears to have come from the prosecutors.

One Thomas T. Lyon went to Helena, at the request of Mr. Wellcome, to serve Mr. Clark. Mr. Wellcome gave him $250. Later, in company with Benjamin Hill, he engaged with Campbell to furnish evidence against Mr. Clark, and said that Campbell agreed to give him $5,000, which Mr. Campbell denies. Later he told his story to Charles W. Clark, and on November 29, 1899, made an affidavit for the Clark side. He received from that side $250 and received from Mr. Campbell $300. He told Mr. Henry G. Rickerts that he had received from the Clark side $2,000, which he had deposited in his wife's name.

William F. Rector's testimony was considered by the committee entirely unreliable. So was that of E. L. P. Ector, except where he was corroborated, as he was upon the important parts of his evidence by Senator Clark and Mr. Bickford and by his correspondence with those two gentlemen.

THE APPROACH TO THE SUPREME COURT.

The majority of the committee think that the transactions connected with the judges of the supreme court of Montana need special consideration. The undisputed facts are as follows:

I.

Proceedings having been instituted against John B. Wellcome for the purpose of securing his disbarment for attempted bribery in connection with Senator Clark's election, it appears that on August 5, 1899, after a preliminary decision by the supreme court that the court had jurisdiction, one Dr. William Treacy, a Republican advocate of Senator Clark, at Helena, approached Mr. Justice William H. Hunt, one of the three members of the supreme court, being his family physician, bearing a proposition which he said was from a party in town that Judge Hunt could have $100,000 if the court would dismiss the proceedings against Mr. Wellcome, and he advised Judge Hunt to accept the amount.

This proposition was first mentioned to Judge Hunt about noon. At half past 10 in the forenoon a special train had arrived from Butte bringing Charles W. Clark, Frank E. Corbett, and E. L. Whitmore, who went to the Helena Club, where, during the day, they saw Mr. John S. M. Neill, Mr. Davidson, Mr. Steele, Mr. Steve Carpenter, and Mr. Thomas Miller. They said they came to see Mr. B. Platt Carpenter. to induee him to put in an answer for Wellcome in the proceedings pending, and they returned in their special train to Butte in the afternoon, after Mr. Corbett had also had an interview with Mr. Justice Pigott, narratives of which were given to the committee by both parties thereto.

[Mr. Justice Pigott testified that Mr. Corbett told him that he had come over on the special train because Mr. Neill on the previous night telephoned to Butte that it had been ascertained that a deal could be had with the supreme court; that he, Mr. Corbett, condemned such a movement, had a mortgage of $24,000 on Mr. Neill's newspaper, and would foreclose it if Mr. Neill made any such attempt. All this Mr. Corbett denied.]

II.

On three occasions Dr. Treacy approached Attorney-General C. B. Nolan, who was in charge of the proceedings against Mr. Wellcome, and proposed to him to accept $100,000 and dismiss the proceedings.

III.

During the pendency of the proceedings against Mr. Wellcome Rev. A. B. Martin, president of a school at Great Falls, Mont., in which Senator Clark and Chief Justice Brantley were trustees, visited the chief justice with a letter in his hand dated October 7, 1899, from Senator Clark, wherein the latter urged him to see the chief justice and endeavor to prevent the disbarment of "that splendid man," John B. Wellcome.

Upon the foregoing undisputed facts and other facts which are controverted, a majority of the committee believe that Senator Clark's agents, in their desperation on account of the decision of the court to take jurisdiction in the Wellcome case, attempted an improper approach to the judges of the court and to Attorney-General Nolan, which fact can not but have a certain influence in the consideration of the other acts of those agents in connection with the Senatorial election. A minority of the committee, however, believe that the transactions were res inter alios acta, and that the evidence does not sufficiently bring home to Senator Clark or his agents any improper attempt to influence the court or the attorney-general.

PROMPT ACTION SUGGESTED.

This briefest possible summary of the material facts in a case whose hearings have covered over three months, from January 5 to April 10, 1900, and whose record requires 2,677 pages, has extended to great length, and the committee will not present any general considerations in this report. The Senate should, as a duty to itself and to the country, demonstrate by its action in this case that seats in the United States Senate procured as Senator Clark's has been procured can not be retained by the deliberate judgment of the Senate.

The Senate also owes a duty to the people of Montana who, conscious of the bad repute into which the State had fallen by reason of vast expenditures of money in connection with its elections, manifested such a public sentiment that the legislature of 1895 passed a statute which, if obeyed, would have redeemed the State from its bad name. For the direct and gross violations of that statute and the consequent discredit which continues to rest upon the State, Montana has a right to expect a prompt and decisive remedy from the action of the Senate upon the report of this committee.

The committee report and unanimously recommend the adoption by the Senate of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That William A. Clark was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Montana."

MONTANA ELECTION LAWS DEFINING AND PUNISHING "CRIMES AGAINST THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE."

[Portions of the act of February 25, 1895, being sections of the penal code of 1895.]

"Sec. 83. No person shall, in order to aid or promote his own nomination as a candidate for public office, by a caucus, convention, or nomination paper, directly or indirectly, by himself or through another person, or by a political committee, give, pay, expend, or contribute, or promise to give, pay, expend, or contribute, any money or other valuable thing, except for personal expenses, as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 85. No person shall, in order to aid or promote his own election to a public office, directly or indirectly, by himself or through another person, give, pay, expend, or contribute any money or other valuable thing, except as hereinafter provided, for personal expenses and to a political committee.

"Sec. 86. A candidate for nomination or for election to a public office, and any other person, may incur and pay, in connection with such nomination or election; his own personal expenses for traveling and purposes properly incidental to traveling, for writing, printing, and preparing for transmission, any letter, circular, or other publication, which is not issued at regular intervals, whereby he may make known his own position or views upon public or other questions; for stationery and postage, for telegraph, telephone and other public messenger service, and for other petty personal expenses; but all such expenses shall be limited to those which are directly incurred and paid by him, and by him alone; and every person shall be required to include such personal expenses in any statement which may be required of him under this act. And in no other case whatever shall the total sum paid, or agreed to be paid, by any candidate for his own personal expenses, as authorized by this act, exceed the sum of one thousand dollars by any candidate for United States Senator, for Congress, or for any State office; nor shall such personal expenses exceed the sum of one hundred dollars by any candidate for a county or other office.

"SEC. 87. A person who is nominated as a candidate for public office by a caucus, convention, or nomination paper, and any person who shall, with his own assent, be voted for for public office, may make a voluntary payment of money or a voluntary or unconditional promise of payment of money to a political committee as hereinafter defined for the promotion of the principles of the party which the committee represents and for the general purposes of the committee. But in no case, by direct or indirect voluntary contribution, shall such total aggregate voluntary payments exceed the sum of one thousand dollars by any candidate for the United States Senate, for Congress, or for State offices; nor shall such total aggregate voluntary payments exceed the sum of fifty dollars by any candidate for member of the State legislature, or one hundred dollars for any county or other office within the State, nor the sum of one hundred dollars by any candidate for any other office: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to authorize or permit any candidate to make such payment to more than one committee or person, acting otherwise than under the authority or in behalf of a political committee, in any county.

"SEC. 88. The term "political committee," under the provisions of this act, shall apply to every committee or combination of persons who shall aid or promote the success or defeat of any political party or principle in a public election, or shall aid or take part in the nomination, election, or defeat of a candidate for public office. Every such committee shall have a treasurer, who is a legal voter of the State, and shall cause to be kept by him detailed accounts of all money and the equivalent of money which shall be received by or promised to the committee, or any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and of all such expenditures, disbursements, or promises of payment or disbursement which shall be made by the committee or any person acting under its authority or in its behalf; and no person acting under the authority or in the behalf of such committee shall receive any money or equivalent of money, or expend or disburse the same, until the committee has chosen a treasurer to keep its accounts, as herein provided.

"SEC. 89. A person who, acting under the authority or in behalf of a political committee, shall receive any money or equivalent of money, or promise of the same, or shall expend any money or its equivalent, or shall incur any liability to pay money or its equivalent, shall at any time thereafter, on demand of the treasurer of such committee, and in any event within fourteen days after such receipt, expenditure, promise, or liability, give to such treasurer a detailed account of the same, with all vouchers required by this act; and such account shall constitute a part of the accounts and records of such treasurer.

"SEC. 90. The treasurer of every political committee which shall receive or expend or disburse any money, or equivalent of money, or incur any liability to pay money, in connection with any election, if the aggregate of such receipts or of such expenditures, disbursements, and liabilities shall exceed ten dollars, shall, within thirty days after such election, file a statement setting forth all the receipts, expenditures, disbursements, and liabilities of the committee, and of every officer and other person acting under its authority or in its behalf. Such statement shall include the amount in each case received, the name of the person or committee from whom it was received, and the date of its receipt, and shall also include the amount of every expenditure or disbursement, the name of the person or committee to whom the expenditure or disbursement was made, and the date of every such expenditure or disbursement, and shall clearly state the purpose for which it was expended or disbursed. The statement shall also give the date and amount of every existing unfulfilled promise or liability, both to and from such committee, remaining uncanceled and in force at the time the statement is made, with the name of the person or committee to or from whom the unfulfilled promise or liability exists, and clearly state the purpose for which the promise or liability was made or incurred.

"SEC. 91. Every person who, acting otherwise than under the authority or in behalf of a political committee having a treasurer, as hereinbefore provided, receives money or the equivalent of money, or expends or disburses or promises to expend or disburse money or its equivalent, to an amount exceeding ten dollars, for the purpose of aiding or promoting the success or defeat of a political party candidate or principle in a public election, or of aiding or taking part in the nomination, election, or defeat of a candidate for public office, shall file such statement as is herein required to be filed by a treasurer of a political committee in the county in which he is a legal voter, and shall be subject to all the requirements of this act, the same as a political committee and the treasurer thereof; but no person other than a legal voter of the State shall receive, expend, or disburse any money or equivalent of money, or promise to expend or disburse the same, for either of the purposes above named, except for personal expenses, as herein provided, or under the authority or in behalf of a political committee.

"SEC. 92. No person shall, directly or indirectly, by himself or through another person, make a payment or promise of payment to a political committee, or to an officer or other person acting under its authority or in its behalf, in any other than his own name; nor shall such committee, officer, or other person knowingly receive a payment or promise of payment, or enter or cause the same to be entered in the accounts or records of such committee, in any other name than that of the person by whom such payment or promise of payment is made.

"SEC. 94. The statement required by this act to be filed by the treasurer of a political committee shall be filed with the clerk of the county in which the treasurer is a legal voter, except that, in case a political committee has its headquarters in some other town or city than that in which the treasurer is a legal voter, the treasurer shall file the statement required of him with the clerk of the county in which such headquarters are maintained at the time of the election to which such statement relates. A statement relating to any other than a municipal election shall be filed in duplicate, and one copy shall be forthwith forwarded by the county clerk receiving the same to the secretary of state, by whom it shall be placed on file.

"SEC. 95. The supreme court and the district court shall have full equity powers to compel any person who fails to file a statement as required by this act, or who files a statement which does not conform to the provisions of this act in respect to sufficiency in detail, conformity to the truth, or otherwise, to comply with the provisions of this act by filing such a statement as is required, and shall compel such compliance upon the petition of any candidate voted for or of any five persons qualified to vote at the election on account of which the expenditures, or a part thereof, were or are alleged to have been made. No such petition shall be brought later than sixty days after such election against anyone who has filed his account within the thirty days required, excepting that a petition may be brought within thirty days of any payment which was not stated in the statement so filed. Proceedings under this section shall be advanced upon the dockets of said courts, if requested by either party, so that they may be tried and decided with as little delay as possible. No petition brought under this act shall be withdrawn or discontinued without the consent of the attorney-general.

"SEC. 96. No person called to testify in any proceedings under the preceding section shall be liable to criminal prosecution under this act or otherwise, for any matters or causes in respect of which he shall be examined or to which his testimony shall relate, except to prosecution for perjury committed in such testimony.

"SEC. 97. If any statements which are filed under this act shall apparently fail to be in conformity with the requirements thereof, it shall be the duty of the clerk with whom any such statement is filed forthwith to notify the person making the same of such failure, and to request him to amend and correct the same.

"SEC. 98. Every person making a statement required by this act shall make oath that the same is in all respects correct and true, to the best of his knowledge and belief.

"SEC. 99. All statements which are filed in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be preserved for not less than fifteen months from the time of the election to which they relate, and shall, during that period, be open to public inspection.

"SEC. 102. Every payment in respect of any expense incurred, which is to be accounted for under this act, shall be vouched for by a receipted bill stating the particulars of expenses, and every voucher, receipt, or account required by this act shall be preserved for at least six months from the election to which it relates.

"SEC. 103. This act shall apply to all public elections, whether for officers or upon questions to be submitted to the people, except elections of township officers, and shall apply to caucuses and conventions for the nomination of candidates to be voted for at such elections, and to nomination papers for the nomination of candidates to be voted for at such elections, except that Ss. 83, 85, and 92 of this act shall not apply to the proprietors and publishers of publications issued at regular intervals in respect to the ordinary and regular conduct of business as such proprietors and publishers.

"SEC. 104. Whoever shall violate any of the provisions of Ss. 83, 84, 85, 88, 89, 93, 94, 98, 99, and 102 of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than three months. Whoever shall violate any of the provisions of Ss. 90, 91, and 92 of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars and by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than three months."

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Views of two members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the case of W. A. Clark, now sitting as a Senator from Montana.

We agreed and still agree to the resolution reported by the committee through its chairman. That resolution was adopted by the committee itself. But the report is merely the writing of the chairman with the aid of one other member, and never was submitted to any meeting of the committee, and therefore can not be considered as the words of the committee.

It is true that we saw and read that report, by the grace of the chairman, and dissented from many parts thereof, and gave the chairman notice of such dissent, when the chairman informed us that we were not bound by the wording of the report.

It was our misfortune not to agree with a majority of the committee in the general conduct of the investigation of this case. We believed that in this important inquiry the committee was bound by, and ought to act on, the ordinary rules of evidence.

And in this contention we merely followed another member of the committee who is one of our great lawyers and who is fresh from a long service as a nisi prius judge under Federal authority. That great lawyer, in gentle but forceful language, admonished us of the great danger of disregarding the common rules of evidence established by great judges through the centuries and known to all lawyers. But it was said the committee was not a court and had a right to receive "hearsay" evidence in order to get on the track of better evidence. And we did receive it constantly, and in great volumes.

We tried merely to discharge our duties as members of this committee and as judges in this most important cause. The chairman, however, left the committee little to do. The committee made an order at the beginning appointing the chairman and another member to determine what witnesses should be summoned, and the two did determine that matter at first, but the chairman kindly relieved the other members of that labor and determined that matter for the committee.

This report of the chairman declares that, as to many matters stated separately, some members of the committee think or believe one way and some think or believe another way. So we preferred to state our individual findings for ourselves.

It is our opinion from the evidence that the friends of Senator Clark illegally and improperly used large amounts of money and thereby caused the election, and that this election is not valid, but under the law of the land is void, and therefore we agreed to the resolution reported by the chairman.

We consider it our duty to call attention to the general features of this case. There were in Montana two factions in the Democratic party. Marcus Daly was considered the head of one faction and W. A. Clark was considered the head of the other.

In the summer of 1898 there was a meeting of "Clark men," as they were called, to consider political matters, concerning the general election to be held in November of that year.

Mr. A. J. Campbell was invited and attended that meeting, which was held privately. It was agreed at that meeting to try to elect a legislature of Democrats of their own faction of the party, or not of the Daly faction. And W. A. Clark agreed to pay the expenses. And large sums of money were sent out, by the three men who acted as a committee, to the various counties. A Democratic convention was held in September. And at that convention A. J. Campbell was chosen its president, with the aid of all of the "Clark men." And at the same convention A. J. Campbell was nominated for Congress, with the same aid; and in November, 1898, he was elected to Congress with the same aid. So, to the extent named, Mr. Campbell got the benefit of that private meeting of which he was a member, and the benefit of the money sent out by the committee to the executive committees in various counties.

Mr. Campbell was a well-known opponent of the Daly faction prior to and in 1898.

The witness Whiteside had been employed by one of Marcus Daly's corporations as a contractor to build a large house prior to 1898. A. J. Campbell was employed, for the first time, in the summer of 1898 to do one piece of work as a lawyer for one of Daly's corporations.

The evidence tends to show that Whiteside was unfriendly to W. A. Clark, and that he made a threat to "explode a bomb" if Clark became a candidate for the Senate; and that about the same day Marcus Daly, in New York, made a threat "to run W. A. Clark and his family out of the State of Montana."

On or about the 15th day of December, 1898, A. J. Campbell and Whiteside met. Whiteside called on Mr. Campbell in his office to obtain the advice of Mr. Campbell, and informed Mr. Campbell of his plan to act with Mr. Clark's friends and secure Mr. Clark's confidence and then betray and destroy him. Mr. Campbell had no difficulty in advising Whiteside as to how he could best betray and destroy his friend, W. A. Clark. That interview was private, and all we know of it is what the parties have consented to give us; but we learn of them that Mr. Campbell gave to Whiteside advice full of grim, blunt wisdom.

After Mr. Campbell had heard the plan to entrap and betray his friend, he told Whiteside, in substance, "Do not rely on your own evidence to prove the charges." Thus Campbell and Whiteside became united in a common cause in December, 1898. And from that time Whiteside had the benefit of Campbell's advice. And Whiteside, if you credit his account of himself, acted well and naturally the part of spy and traitor and did "explode a bomb."

After the legislature adjourned, Mr. Campbell, with Marcus Daly's money, went into the business of buying newspapers and hiring editors, and set them to work. He also became actively engaged in the business of hiring detectives with Daly's money. Among other hard cases he employed one Benjamin Hill and set him to hunting up evidence against his friend. And Mr. Campbell gives a graphic account of how Hill brought to his office a sealed letter from Bickford to Roote, and how he caused Hill to open the letter for Campbell to read. And, after reading, it was interesting to hear Mr. Campbell describe how the letter was carefully resealed and sent on by Hill to its destination.

Mr. Campbell sent his man Hill, with his clerk, Mr. Little, to get certain affidavits. The affidavits were obtained, and the men who made them received about $100 each for their pay from Mr. Little and about $150 more for each out of checks drawn by Little on Campbell and paid by him out of Daly's money. Mr. Campbell stated this matter composedly, and, though he did not justify what was done, as he did the opening and reading of a sealed letter, he stated that he assumed the responsibility for the transaction. The man Hill, for hunting up witnesses and buying and making affidavits, received from Mr. Campbell about $1,500 out of Daly's money, according to the evidence.

Mr. Campbell became Daly's agent to disburse money without limit as to amount, and he disbursed it in that way. And in 1899 Mr. Campbell was employed by a corporation controlled by Mr. Daly at a salary of $5,000 per annum.

When last heard from Mr. Campbell had disbursed about $40,000 of Daly's money in this case, and had incurred liabilities for fees to eminent counsel, amounts not named, and still had power to go on spending without limit as to amount. He conducted this case as leading counsel, and became also one of the principal witnesses, but other counsel made the argument.

Mr. Campbell employed many detectives or spies, and paid them most liberally with Daly's money; and he wrote divers letters to his professional detective, L. D. McLean. In one of them he says:

"It is hinted this morning that there were some matters being investigated by the grand jury which might implicate myself, Fred Whiteside, or perhaps W. A. Clark, of Virginia City. It is a mere rumor, and I don't believe there is anything in it at all. It may be it has something to do with elections last fall, which will probably not implicate me, but might implicate some of the so-called Daly people. * * * Perhaps you had better get a list of the grand jury and find some fellow that you can 'jolly' a little."

Attorney-General Nolan claimed and received the combined assistance of Messrs. Campbell and Whiteside. He attended before the grand jury and examined witnesses concerning this case and took notes of the testimony in shorthand and afterwards wrote out his notes—not in the words of the witnesses, but the substance in narrative form—and afterwards he attached this so-called evidence before the grand jury to the information which he filed in the supreme court against Wellcome; and to aid Campbell and Whiteside in their search after evidence, the attorney-general wrote a formal letter to Mr. A. J. Campbell promising immunity from prosecution and the governor's pardon to any and all witnesses who would testify about bribery of legislators.

This so-called evidence before the grand jury was much used in this case, and Attorney-General Nolan was examined as a witness before the committee as to matters relevant and irrelevant. He could not be induced to see the slightest impropriety in his disclosure of the secrets of the grand jury, or in this wholesale promise of pardons specially given for the use of Mr. Campbell in the work in which he was then engaged. This attorney-general came to Washington, took an active part in the prosecution and in suggesting witnesses, and on the witness stand could not conceal his bias.

A large part of the evidence taken by the committee and submitted to the Senate is irrelevant to the matter of inquiry. Take as a sample the matter of what is called the attempt to bribe the supreme court and the attorney-general. This transaction, so far as we are informed, occurred six or seven months after the Senatorial election; no fact proved connects Mr. Clark with any part of that transaction. Dr. Treacy had no sort of connection, directly or indirectly, with Mr. Clark; and if he had, there was no connection between the election in January and the supreme judges in the fall of that year.

You can not lawfully charge a man with one crime and prove that he committed that crime by proving that he did commit another crime. The Constitution provides that the accused must "be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation." No mention of the judges of the supreme court of Montana was made in the charges against Mr. Clark. All of that evidence was nothing more than what lawyers call "coloring matter." And it was admitted against the protest of the Senator from Maryland and others.

And in the conduct of this case much other mere "coloring matter" was received as evidence.

In the report made for the committee there are several curious statements of a part of the evidence as to the thing stated. For example, it is stated that Senator Clark, in June, 1899, destroyed the checks which he had drawn on his bank. But the report fails to state that for years past it was his habit to destroy his checks when his account was rendered by the bank and examined. And the report failed to state that the committee had the bank account of Mr. Clark during all the time in which it was charged that money had been illegally used.

And there is another feature of that report which should be noticed. Statements are made as facts which are based only on the testimony of a witness of doubtful credit, and that testimony plainly contradicted.

The only proposition for which we contend is, that this is a judicial case, and a committee of the Senate ought to consider and report it as judges.

W. A. HARRIS.

(See Cong. Rec., vol. 34, pp. 3429–3435.)

The report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections as hereinbefore set forth was called up in the Senate May 3, 1900 (Cong. Rec., vol. 33, pp. 5021, 5022), and was the subject of remarks by Mr. Clark May 15, 1900 (Cong. Rec., vol. 33, pp. 5531–5536). At the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Clark submitted a copy of a letter written by him and addressed to the chief executive of the State of Montana, resigning his seat in the Senate.

TUESDAY, June 5, 1900.

Mr. Chandler, from the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a supplemental report to accompany the resolution reported from the committee, declaring that William A. Clark was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States.

The report was ordered to be printed under the rule.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

Supplemental report (to accompany Senate Res. No. 284).

The Committee on Privileges and Elections on April 23, 1900, made a report to the Senate (No. 1052) unanimously recommending the adoption by the Senate of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That William A. Clark was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Montana."

The committee also reported the findings and reasons leading to their recommendation. Two members of the committee submitted on the same day certain views of the minority which, while agreeing to the resolution reported by the committee, condemned some alleged methods adopted by the committee and criticised some alleged acts of the chairman. These views of the minority were not seen by the majority until after the report was printed, but the text of the principal report had been seen by the two members of the committee and some changes had been made therein in deference to their suggestions. On the 15th day of May Senator Clark addressed the Senate on a question of privilege, and, after making a lengthy statement, informed the Senate that on the 11th day of May he had notified the governor of Montana that he resigned as Senator; and after making his address Mr. Clark retired from the Senate. His statement contained various criticisms of the report which had been made by the committee.

Upon an examination of the criticisms made by Senator Clark and those made in the additional views of the two members, a majority of the committee make a supplemental report, as follows:

The distinct criticisms made by Mr. Clark on May 15 of the report of the committee are not serious in their character, and it is fortunate that they were made, because they may be taken as being all the criticisms which the party most at interest can claim can justly be made. The correctness of all other statements made by the committee not criticised by Senator Clark may be taken to be admitted by him. All his statements will not be now reviewed, but some of them should be noticed by the committee.

He complains that the method of procedure of the committee was unfair and nonjudicial, and that testimony was received contrary to the established rules of evidence, hearsay and irrelevant testimony; and that the case was like the Dreyfus case, where there was a constant presumption of guilt instead of innocence.

The answers to this complaint are simple.

(1) That no such testimony was received except after deliberate decision by the committee for the purpose of ascertaining what additional witnesses it might be necessary to summon, as stated by the chairman on page 432 of the testimony, as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. It would only be admissible as laying the foundation for sending for other witnesses."

(2) That no single finding of the committee has been based upon hearsay testimony.

The finding of the whole committee that the election was null and void was based upon the admitted or undisputed facts with their attendant circumstances, and no facts are recited in the report of the committee beyond the admitted and undisputed facts except in those cases where any denial of those facts is distinctly recited.

The methods of procedure were in no case unfair, but were such as ordinarily prevail in investigations like this.

The presumption of innocence was at no time disregarded, and findings unfavorable to Mr. Clark were made as a court or jury would have made them upon a full and fair consideration of all the facts in the case.

He denies the conclusion of the committee that a sufficient number of legislators were corrupted to change the result of the election.

This criticism is merely the complaint that the committee differed in opinion from him and his eminent counsel and made findings contrary to their desires.

He complains that stress was laid by the committee upon the comparative financial condition of two or three legislators before and after the Senatorial contest, and asserts that their explanations of the circumstances would have been received, the presumption being that if their financial condition was better that result happened honestly.

The answer to this complaint is that while such is the ordinary presumption, the many facts in this case overcome that presumption, in the opinion of the committee, and that there were not, as Mr. Clark now asserts, satisfactory explanations of the circumstances.

Speaking particularly of the facts which the committee claim are "admitted or undisputed," he refers to the statement made by the committee that he had been constantly a candidate for office. He does not deny the fact stated by the committee, but proceeds to distinctly admit it. The statement was not made as the "leading part" of the third subdivision of the committee's report, but only as preliminary to the statement in such third subdivision that Senator Clark, being a candidate for Senator, organized a Clark committee and gave that committee unlimited authority to make political expenditures from money which he agreed to furnish and which was estimated at not less than $110,000.

He continues to claim that he was not a candidate for Senator until December, 1898, and defies anyone to show the contrary. The contrary is easily shown by statements of his own committee. Mr. Hauser states that he was a candidate and Mr. Davidson states that he was a candidate. The whole sum and substance of the movement of himself and friends were only to make Mr. Clark a United States Senator, and his money was furnished and expended for that purpose.

He complains that testimony was excluded concerning the character of Mr. Daly's efforts to defeat him when he was a candidate for Senator in 1893, and he read in the Senate a long ex parte affidavit of George E McGrath. It appears that this affidavit was made February 19, 1900, concerning transactions which Mr. McGrath said he knew about in 1893, and which were never previously put on paper. The committee properly declined to retry the contest of 1893.

He also complains that testimony was excluded of Folk and wife as to an attempt by Mr. Whiteside to bribe Mr. Folk with an offer af $1,000 to give him access to the ballots connected with Mr. Whiteside's own election to the State senate. The committee, on due consideration, twice decided to reject this evidence as raising a collateral issue, the trial and decision of which might lead to an interminable investigation. It may be added, however, that the chairman of the committee on both occasions was in favor of receiving the evidence, however much the incidental inquiry might delay the case.

He denies the averment that he early began negotiations with Mr. Hobson, the Republican leader, saying of this averment: "Not one statement of which is sustained by the testimony."

The statement of the committee was based partly upon the fact that the so-called "Whiteside exposure" took place January 10, and that on January 15 Senator Clark wrote a letter to Senator Hobson declaring himself to be a protectionist, and there was no dispute that this letter was written in order to secure through Senator Hobson Republican votes for Mr. Clark for Senator.

He also denies that he bought the $48,000 of Mr. Powers's stock in Mr. Hobson's bank on account of the Senatorial controversy. By his own testimony (p. 1891) it appears that he bought the stock for the following reason:

"Mr. CAMPBELL. Where is the stock now?

"Senator CLARK. It is in my bank now, in the bank of W. A. Clark & Co., Butte, Mont. I was going to say, if the committee will allow me, that I would like to give, briefly, a little narrative of that transaction.

"After the election was over Senator Phillips spoke to me about the bank stock, the stock owned by Mr. Powers in the Fergus County Bank, and said that Mr. Powers was somewhat indignant as to the action of Mr. Hobson in voting for me, and that he might give him trouble in some way. He was a little concerned about it. I asked him some questions about it, what stock Mr. Powers owned, and what he thought about the value of the stock. He said he was certain that the stock was first-class and would return good dividends. So I said, 'If it is a good investment, if I am assured that it is a good investment, and Mr. Powers should give any trouble to Mr. Hobson about this stock, I would be very willing to buy it,' as I was seeking good investments.

"I went, I think I went, to Mr. Hobson, or met him. I am not sure that I went for that purpose.

"Mr. CAMPBELL. You went to whom? To Mr. Hobson?

"Senator CLARK. Mr. Hobson. I spoke to Mr. Hobson about the stock and mentioned something about the conversation with Mr. Phillips, and asked him about the stock, and if there was any danger of his getting into trouble with his partner, Mr. Powers, who was interested with him. He said he did not know that there was, but there might be; it might be possible that something might arise that would put him in bad shape, so far as his financial interest was concerned there. I think he said something about his telling him to sell or to buy his stock. That conversation is not very clear in my mind, but it was something of that nature."

As to the statements of Senator Clark that the result of the admission of perjured testimony was "damaging in the extreme" to his case, the attention of the Senate should be distinctly called to the statement made by the committee on page 13, that all the witnesses whose conduct has occasioned comment had been originally employed by Senator Clark, or his committee, or his friends.

He complains of the committee for giving any weight to those parts of the Montana laws against bribery, which limit expenditures by candidates and require candidates and their committees to make returns.

The expressed view of the committee was that the disobedience of those laws, which rendered Mr. Clark and his committee liable to criminal prosecutions, furnished "strong additional reasons for believing the other evidence which seems to them to establish the corruption charged." Those laws were specially made by the legislature of Montana on February 25, 1895, in order to redeem the State from its bad condition and repute, and should not have been defied by Mr. Clark, Mr. McDermott, Mr. Davidson, and his other assistants.

He states that no proof was adduced that he had any knowledge of corruption on the part of his agents, and that no charge of complicity had been made in the report. His language in his letter of May 11 to the governor of Montana is as follows:

"None of the charges affecting my personal honor or which allege that I had personally been guilty of corrupt practices have been sustained by the finding of the committee."

Against this assertion there should be placed the explicit and unequivocal statement of the committee in their report, on page 12, in the following words:

"It is also a reasonable conclusion upon the whole case that Senator Clark is fairly to be charged with knowledge of the acts done in his behalf by his committee and his agents conducting his canvass. He arrived in Helena from Butte on January 4, and was in constant conference with his committee and agents.

In view of the issue thus made, it is important to reexamine some of the facts showing exactly what Senator Clark's personal connection has been with the circumstances which have resulted in his resignation from the Senate.

It is not intended to reiterate at any length facts stated in the report to prove the correctness of what is asserted in the foregoing extract.

The preliminary arrangements for so influencing the nominations and elections to the legislature that he could be chosen Senator were made by Mr. Clark personally, as appears under the third head of the report. Nothing since the hearing closed has tended to impair the facts stated concerning Senator Clark's own personal connection with the course of his canvass for election as Senator.

In the case of Mr. E. C. Day, recited under the fourteenth head of the report, it appears that the transactions originated with Mr. Clark himself, who, on February 13, in writing, personally directed that the $5,000 should be given to Mr. Day for his services in the legislature and as a retainer as counsel in the future. Mr. Clark says that he wishes to correct a misstatement. He says, "I never wrote a letter couched in such language," but he then proceeds to say that the amount was paid to Mr. Day as a testimonial of friendship. The gloss which Mr. Clark now tries to put upon a very serious transaction of his own is not consistent with the language of Mr. Day, quoted in the report. In opposition to Mr. Clark's statement in the Senate may be put his testimony before the committee as follows:

"Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Day voted for you during the canvass?

"Senator CLARK. Mr. Day voted for me.

"Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; he was one of the leaders of your force?

"Senator CLARK. Yes, sir.

"Mr. CAMPBELL. And was the recognized leader for what was called the Clark faction of the Democratic party?

"Senator CLARK. He ran as speaker of the house of representatives, I believe, representing our forces.

"Mr. CAMPBELL. And upon the floor of the house he was the recognized leader for the Clark forces, was he not?

"Senator CLARK. I am not sure of that. I think he was. I never was in the house of representatives or in the joint assembly.

"Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that he was the man who made the motion to take a second ballot upon the day on which your election occurred?

"Senator CLARK. Yes; I believe he was. I think he was recognized as the leader of the Clark forces in the house of representatives.

"Mr. CAMPBELL. And four days after your election you made him a present of $5,000?

"Senator CLARK. Yes, sir.

"Mr. CAMPBELL. What was that for?

"Senator CLARK. It was in consideration of my friendship for Mr. Day, and for the work performed by him in trying to organize the legislature—to be elected speaker and in order to control our forces, in which, however, we failed. I recognized that he was worthy of this consideration. We expected to have, from the talk that was going around, more or less trouble or litigation, and Mr. Day was to take charge of everything of that kind, and has done so."

In the case of Mr. McLaughlin, stated under the sixth head of the report, Mr. Clark says of the statement of the committee that "In December, 1898, Senator Clark began negotiations with one H. W. McLaughlin, a member of the legislature, for the purchase of his wood lots and sawmills." "This statement, Mr. President, is not correct;" and he proceeds to justify this charge by stating that the negotiations were begun by Mr. Bickford and not by himself in the month of September before Mr. McLaughlin was ever nominated for the legislature. The fact was that Mr. McLaughlin and Mr. Bickford did enter into preliminary negotiations, without doubt growing out of Mr. McLaughlin's expected nomination and election to the legislature. The committee regarded all the excuses given for the purchase by Mr. Clark directly and personally of all Mr. McLaughlin's property at an extravagant price as a very clear case of improper arrangement with a member of the legislature. Although Mr. Clark calls the McLaughlin incident a "weak case" and a "flimsy expedient," the facts are convincing as to the character and purpose of the so-called "purely business enterprise."

As to the Woods case, stated under the seventh head of the report, Mr. Clark says that the statement of the report that he knew of Mr. Bickford's attempt to purchase the indebtedness which Woods owed is absolutely unfounded, and that he never heard of the transaction until it was disclosed in the testimony during the investigation. It is true that the scheme for controlling Mr. Woods by buying up his indebtedness originated with Mr. Bickford and that Mr. Bickford on December 31, 1898, went to Missoula with five $1,000 bills and four $500 bills, which he had obtained from C. W. Clark for that purpose. But it also appears that Senator Clark in response to letters from Dr. Ector took up the case of Mr. Woods and came to comprehend what was intended. Mr. Ector's letter to Mr. Clark of December 7, 1898, and Mr. Clark's letters to Mr. Ector of December 10, 1898, and January 4, 1899, leave little doubt that Senator Clark knew what Mr. Bickford was engaged in doing, especially in view of the fact that Mr. Ector's letters of November 17, 1898, and January 3, 1899, are not produced.

In the case of Mr. B. F. Fine, stated under the twelfth head of the report, it is not denied that the arrangement with him to work for Mr. Clark, for which he received $5,000 for nominal or useless services, was made by Mr. Clark personally during the session of the legislature after Mr. Clark's election. The criticism made by Senator Clark is "that there was no agreement, but merely a statement made by me to him after my election." This different form of putting the case is not material. The committee did not claim that Mr. Fine would not have voted for Mr. Clark had it not been for this arrangement, but that it was like the case of Mr. E. C. Day, a payment afterwards for services as a member of the legislature under circumstances which at least aroused suspicion that there was an understanding to that effect before the election.

In the case of Mr. Z. T. Cason, who gives an account of Mr. Bickford's efforts to induce him to endeavor to corrupt Mr. Marcyes, it appears from Mr. Clark's own testimony that he had interviews with Mr. Cason, and at last, on the 3d day of February, 1899, sent to Mr. Cason $500 in a letter giving thanks for his services. The personal activity of Senator Clark in conducting the details of his canvass is thus very clearly indicated. The testimony of Mr. Cason was not credited by the committee because he wrote a recantation at the instigation of Mr. Jesse B. Root, Mr. Wellcome's law partner, upon receiving $1,500 from Mr. Root for copying and signing the recantation and going into hiding in Baker City, Oreg., as stated on page 13 of the report. But Senator Clark's own testimony as to his relation with Cason and his letter to him inclosing the $500 stand as undisputed facts.

As to the approach to Mr. Justice William H. Hunt, of the supreme court of Montana, stated on page 14 of the report, while it does not directly appear that Senator Clark had knowledge of this approach made by Dr. Treacy, who also in a similar way approached Attorney-General Nolan, yet there stands against Senator Clark the significant fact, proved by Mr. Clark's letter to Rev. A. B. Martin, that he urged Mr. Martin to approach Chief Justice Brantley in order to prevent the disbarment of "that splendid man, John B. Wellcome." This admitted fact certainly justifies a strong suspicion that the other attempts to reach the court made by Dr. Treacy, under the circumstances narrated in the report, were known to Senator Clark.

Reference will now be made in this report to the criticisms of the chairman made by the minority of the committee in their addendum to the report, by annexing the following memorandum by the chairman.

MEMORANDUM BY THE CHAIRMAN.

The statement that the chairman left the committee little to do is unjust. The chairman did nothing except what such an officer is expected to do. Every important ruling was made either by decision of the committee or by the chairman in the first instance after an order of the committee was made prescribing that course of proceeding, with the understanding that any member of the committee might dissent on any point and have it decided by the vote of the committee.

The minority say that the committee made an order at the beginning appointing the chairman and another member to determine what witnesses should be summoned and it was determined that way at first, but the chairman kindly relieved the other member of that labor and determined that matter for the committee. The Senator from Alabama and the chairman were appointed to consider in the first instance applications for subpœnas for witnesses. Forty-four witnesses were summoned and heard for the prosecution; 41 witnesses summoned and heard for the defense, and 7 witnesses summoned directly by the committee. As to witnesses for the prosecution and defense, the lists which were submitted in the first instance by the two sides were deliberately considered by the chairman and the Senator from Alabama, and every question arising was passed upon.

Those lists covered three-quarters of the witnesses summoned. Subsequently in some few cases the chairman summoned witnesses where previous decisions to summon had established a principle which covered the new requests, and there the formality of consulting the Senator from Alabama may have been omitted. Such cases probably did not exceed a dozen. Various witnesses are upon the list who came to Washington without being summoned, and were called to the stand by the respective parties. The question of summoning witnesses to prove the attempt upon the supreme court of Montana was decided by the whole committee; and it may be further and finally added that, so far as Senator Clark was concerned, there was no refusal to summon any witness whom his counsel insisted upon obtaining.

While the chairman was sick at his house he received an important communication, which seemed to him to require the instantaneous summoning of two witnesses. For those witnesses he telegraphed immediately, and at once sent to the committee a report of what he had done, in the following words, on the 3d of March, 1900:

"There are two more witnesses whom I have taken the responsibility of summoning, and do not wish to state the facts and reasons until I am sure that I shall get them here. The principal witness claims to be sick."

The circumstances connected with the summoning of this principal witness are detailed in memorandum which is in the hands of the committee. His name is J. A. Largent, of Greatfalls, Mont.

Another statement, on page 24, of the two Senators is that the report fails to state in connection with the destruction by Senator Clark, in June, 1889, of his checks, that it was his habit to destroy such checks. The two Senators are mistaken. The report distinctly states that fact on page 11, where it says that the destruction of the checks was "in accordance with what he testified was his custom."

Another statement of the two Senators is that "statements are made as facts which are based only on the testimony of a witness of doubtful credit, and that testimony plainly contradicted." This is an error. The report from beginning to end shows no statement made as a fact unless it is an undisputed fact, and no conclusion appears to be reached by the majority of the committee on contradicted testimony without the contradiction being plainly noted; and one important statement appearing on page 8 should be constantly borne in mind, that, laying aside substantially all the controverted facts, "there would still remain sufficient evidence in the case to lead the committee to find, as they do, that Mr. Clark's election is void.

WM. E. CHANDLER.

At the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress Mr. Chandler submitted a resolution in the Senate on Saturday, the 2d day of March, 1901, declaring Mr. Clark to be personally responsible for the offenses set forth in the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted April 23, 1900.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 34, pp. 3420, 3421.)

Upon this resolution Mr. Chandler addressed the Senate March 2, 1901, his remarks being found in the Congressional Record, volume 34, pages 3421 to 3435.

REED SMOOT, Of Utah.

On Monday, February 23, 1903, the credentials of Reed Smoot, elected a Senator by the Legislature of Utah for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1903, were presented to the Senate of the United States and placed on file. On the same day a memorial, signed by 18 citizens of Utah, was also presented protesting against his being "permitted to qualify by taking the oath of office or to sit as a Member of the United States Senate." On the following Thursday another protest, signed by John L. Leilich, also one of the signers of the original memorial, was filed, charging that Reed Smoot was a polygamist and that as an apostle of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—commonly called the Mormon Church—he had taken an oath "of such a nature and character as that he is thereby disqualified from taking the oath of office required of a United States Senator." The original memorial was a document of considerable length and is set forth in full in the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which forms a part of this history of the case.

On the first day of a special session of Congress, which convened on the 5th of March, 1903, following a statement by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections with reference to cases involving the question of the qualification of persons submitting proper credentials, Reed Smoot was allowed to be sworn in as a Senator without objection. Subsequently, on January 25, 1904, at the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, a resolution was reported by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections authorizing an investigation by that committee of the right and title of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate. On January 27, 1904, this resolution was reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which it was referred, and agreed to by the Senate.

After an investigation and consideration of the case of more than two years' duration, it was not until the last month of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, or, to be exact, until June 11, 1906, that the committee submitted a report, accompanied by a resolution, declaring Reed Smoot not to be entitled to a seat in the Senate. A minority report, signed by five members of the committee, was also presented and made a part of the record. There was a division among the members of the committee with reference to the question of whether or not the case should be handled as one of expulsion, and one member of the committee, who joined in the committee report, stated on the floor of the Senate that it was his view that Reed Smoot could not be deprived of his seat, under the Constitution, except by expulsion. In the proceedings by the committee no evidence was produced tending to substantiate the charge that Reed Smoot was a polygamist and no such charge was made on the floor of the Senate; neither was his personal character assailed by Senators for or against the resolution.

The debate in the Senate on the above-mentioned resolution did not commence until the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress had convened, but it continued at various times during the months of December, 1906, January, 1907, and February of the same year, the final vote on the resolution being taken on February 20, four years almost to a day after the filing of his credentials. The Senate amended the committee resolution in such a manner as to require a two-thirds vote to declare Reed Smoot not entitled to a seat in the Senate. This amendment, offered by Mr. Hopkins, was adopted by a vote of 49 to 22. A substitute amendment to the resolution, offered by Mr. Carmack, that Reed Smoot "be expelled" from the Senate, failed of adoption by a vote of 27 to 43. The final vote on the resolution declaring Reed Smoot not entitled to a seat in the Senate, as amended by Mr. Hopkins, failed of adoption by a vote of 28 to 42.

The history of the case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings of the Senate in the case as published in the Congressional Record, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the views of the minority of the committee, a statement of the days on which the question was debated in the Senate with reference to the record of the same as published in the Congressional Record, references to the speeches by different Senators for and against the committee resolution as found in the Congressional Record, the result of the vote on the "two-thirds" amendment to the resolution, the vote on the "expulsion" amendment to the resolution, and the final vote on the resolution as amended.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1903.

Mr. Kearns presented the credentials of Reed Smoot, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Utah for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1903, which were read and placed on file.

Mr. Burrows presented a memorial of citizens of Utah, remonstrating against the admission of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah; which was placed on file. (Cong. Rec., vol. 36, p. 2496.)

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1903.

Mr. Burrows presented a memorial of John L. Leilich, of Utah, remonstrating against the admission of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah; which was placed on file. (Cong. Rec., vol. 36, p. 2689.)

[Fifty-eighth Congress, first session.]

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1903.

Mr. Hoar, for the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, made a statement to the effect that he (the chairman) understood the orderly and constitutional method of procedure in regard to administering the oath to newly elected Senators to be that when any gentleman brings with him or presents a credential consisting of the certificate of his due election from the executive of his State he is entitled to be sworn in, and that all questions relating to his qualification should be postponed and acted upon by the Senate afterwards.

His reasons for this procedure are here set forth as follows:

"If there were any other procedure the result would be that a third of the Senate might be kept out of their seats for an indefinite time on the presenting of objection without responsibility, and never established before the Senate by any judicial inquiry. The result of that might be that a change in the political power of this Government which the people desired to accomplish would be indefinitely postponed."

The same day Mr. Smoot took the oath of office as Senator from Utah. (Cong. Rec., vol. 37, p. 1.)

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 1904.

Mr. Burrows, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate the right and title of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah; and said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during the recess of Congress, to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and that the expense of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee." (Cong. Rec., vol. 38, p. 1100.)

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1904.

Mr. Kean, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Burrows on the 25th instant, authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, to investigate the right and title of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah, reported it with an amendment striking out "and during the recess of Congress;". The Senate proceeded by unanimous consent to consider the resolution, and agreed to it as amended. (Cong. Rec., vol. 38, p. 1239.)

TUESDAY, APRIL 26, 1904.

Mr. Burrows, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported a resolution authorizing the committee in the Smoot case to sit during the recess of the Senate. The resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, subsequently reported by Mr. Kean from that committee, and agreed to. (Cong. Rec., vol. 38, p. 5628.)

[Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1906.

Mr. Burrows, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by the resolution of the Senate of January 27, 1904, to investigate the right and title of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah, reported that in the opinion of the committee he was not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States. He stated that a formal report would be made later. He stated that the committee was divided on the question of the nature of the resolution which should follow the acceptance by the Senate of the committee report; whether it should be one to expel the Senator, or whether a declaration that he was not entitled to his seat would be sufficient. (Cong. Rec., vol. 40, p. 7715.)

MONDAY, JUNE 11, 1906.

Mr. Burrows, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report No. 4253), accompanied by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Reed Smoot is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah."

Mr. Foraker asked and obtained leave to submit the views of a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who dissented from the resolution reported by the majority.

Both reports were ordered printed. (Cong. Rec., vol. 40, p. 8218.)

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Burrows (chairman), Foraker, Depew, Beveridge, Dillingham, Hopkins, Knox, Dolliver, Pettus, Dubois, Bailey, Overman, and Frazier.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JUNE 11, 1906—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Burrows, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report (Rept. 4253, pt. 1):

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were charged by the Senate with the duty of investigating the right and title of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah, respectfully submit the following report:

On the 23d day of February, 1903, the credentials of Reed Smoot as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah were presented to the Senate. On the same day and at the same hour there was also presented and placed on file a protest from certain citizens of Utah, praying for an investigation into the right of Mr. Smoot to the seat to which he claimed to have been elected.

Subsequently, and on the 5th day of March, 1903, Mr. Smoot took the oath of office as Senator from Utah. At the same time the attention of the Senate was, in behalf of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, called to the method of procedure in cases like that of Mr. Smoot. It was then stated, without question on the part of any member of the Senate, that in cases where the credentials of a Senator consist of "a certificate of his due election from the executive of his State he is entitled to be sworn in, and that all questions relating to his qualifications should be postponed and acted upon by the Senate afterwards." Under this rule the credentials of Mr. Smoot, with the protest against his right to a seat in the Senate, were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections under a resolution adopted by the Senate January 27, 1904, directing the committee to investigate the right and title of Mr. Smoot to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Utah.

The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate the right and title of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Utah; and said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and that the expense of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee."

The protest against the seating of Mr. Smoot.

The protest before referred to against the seating of Mr. Smoot as a Senator from the State of Utah is stated in such protest to be "upon the ground and for the reason that he is one of a self-perpetuating body of fifteen men, who, constituting the ruling authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, or 'Mormon Church,' claim, and by their followers are accorded the right to claim, supreme authority, divinely sanctioned, to shape the belief and control the conduct of those under them in all matters whatsoever, civil and religious, temporal and spiritual, and who thus uniting in themselves authority in church and state do so exercise the same as to inculcate and encourage a belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation; who countenance and connive at violations of the State law prohibiting the same, regardless of pledges made for the purpose of obtaining statehood, and of covenants made with the people of the United States, and who by all the means in their power protect and honor those who, with themselves, violate the laws of the land and are guilty of practices destructive of the family and of the home."

In support of this protest the protestants make certain charges and assertions, the substance of which is as follows:

1. The Mormon priesthood, according to the doctrines of that church, is vested with supreme authority in all things spiritual and temporal.

2. The first presidency and twelve apostles (said Reed Smoot being one of said twelve apostles) are supreme in the exercise of the authority of the Mormon Church in all things temporal and spiritual. In support of this second proposition instances are given of the interference of the first presidency and twelve apostles in the political affairs of the State of Utah, and quotations at length are given from the declarations of officials in the Mormon Church regarding the authority of the leaders in said church to dictate to the membership thereof concerning the political action of said members.

3 and 4. That the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church have not abandoned the principles and practice of political dictation; neither have they abandoned their belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation.

5. That the first presidency and twelve apostles (of whom Reed Smoot is one) also practice or connive at and encourage the practice of polygamy, and have without protest or objection permitted those who held legislative offices by their will and consent to attempt to nullify enactments against polygamous cohabitation.

6. That the supreme authorities of the Mormon Church, namely, the first presidency and twelve apostles (of whom Mr. Smoot is one), not only connive at violations of the law against polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, but protect and honor the violators of such laws.

The protest further asserts that the leaders of the Mormon Church (of whom Mr. Smoot is one) are solemnly banded together against the people of the United States in the endeavor of said leaders to baffle the designs and frustrate the attempts of the Government to eradicate polygamy and polygamous cohabitation.

The protest further charges that the conduct and practices of the first presidency and twelve apostles (of whom Mr. Smoot is one) are well known to be, first, contrary to the public sentiment of the civilized world; second, contrary to express pledges which were given by the leaders of the Mormon Church in procuring amnesty; third, contrary to the express conditions upon which the escheated property of the Mormon Church was returned; fourth, contrary to the pledges given by the representatives of that church in their plea for statehood; fifth, contrary to the pledges required in the enabling act and given in the State constitution of Utah; sixth, contrary to a provision in the constitution of Utah providing that "there shall be no union of church and state, nor shall any church dominate the State or interfere with its functions," and seventh, contrary to law. The protest concludes by asking that the Senate make inquiry touching the matters stated in said protest.

This protest is followed by certain charges made by one John L. Leilich under oath, which are in the main of the same tenor and effect as the charges made in the protest with the additional charge that Mr. Smoot is a polygamist, having a legal wife and a plural wife, and the further charge that Mr. Smoot has, as an apostle of the Mormon Church, taken an oath "of such a nature and character as that he is thereby disqualified from taking the oath of office required of a United States Senator."

Answer of Mr. Smoot.

To the statements made in the protest and the charges by Mr. Leilich Mr. Smoot made answer, which answer is in the nature of a demurrer to all the charges contained in the protest and to the charges made by Mr. Leilich, except two, namely, that Mr. Smoot is a polygamist and that he is bound by some oath or obligation which is inconsistent with the oath taken by him as a Senator. Both these charges he denies, and further denies, specifically and categorically, the charges made in the protest and by Mr. Leilich.

Authority of the Senate and nature of the investigation.

Before proceeding to an examination of the protest and answer, and the testimony taken by the committee, it may be well to examine, briefly, the authority of the Senate in the premises and the nature and scope of the investigation.

The Constitution provides (Art. 1, sec. V, par. 1) that "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members." It is now well established by the decisions of the Senate in a number of cases that in order to be a fit representative of a sovereign State of the Union in the Senate of the United States one must be in all respects obedient to the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State from which he comes, and must also be desirous of the welfare of his country and in hearty accord and sympathy with its Government and institutions. If he does not possess these qualifications, if his conduct has been such as to be prejudicial to the welfare of society, of the nation or its Government, he is regarded as being unfit to perform the important and confidential duties of a Senator, and may be deprived of a seat in the Senate, although he may have done no act of which a court of justice could take cognizance. Thus William Blount, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, was, in the year 1797, deprived of his seat in the Senate for conduct "inconsistent with his public trust and duty as a Senator." His offense consisted in the writing of a letter to one Carey, an official interpreter to the Cherokee Nation, the conduct of Mr. Blount in writing said letter being characterized by the committee of investigation in that case as follows:

"The plan hinted at in this extraordinary letter to be executed under the auspices of the British is so capable of different constructions and conjectures that your committee at present forbear giving any decided opinion respecting it, except that to Mr. Blount's own mind it appeared to be inconsistent with the interests of the United States and of Spain, and he was therefore anxious to conceal it from both. But when they consider his attempts to seduce Carey from his duty as a faithful interpreter and to employ him as an engine to alienate the affections and confidence of the Indians from the public officers of the United States residing among them; the measures he has proposed to excite a temper which must produce the recall or expulsion of our superintendent from the Creek Nation; his insidious advice tending to the advancement of his own popularity and consequence, at the expense and hazard of the good opinion which the Indians entertain of this Government and of the treaties subsisting between us and them, your committee have no doubt that Mr. Blount's conduct has been inconsistent with his public duty, renders him unworthy of a further continuance of his present public trust in this body, and amounts to a high misdemeanor."

The vote on the expulsion of Mr. Blount resulted as follows: Yeas 25, nays 1. (Senate Election Cases, pp. 1165–1170.)

In the year 1807, John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, was accused of being associated with Aaron Burr in a conspiracy "against the peace and prosperity" of the United States. In the report of the committee—of which John Quincy Adams was chairman—appointed to investigate the case the committee say:

"In examining the question whether these forms of judicial proceedings or the rules of judicial evidence ought to be applied to the exercise of that censorial authority which the Senate of the United States possesses over the conduct of its members, let us assume as the test of their application either the dictates of unfettered reason, the letter and spirit of the Constitution, or precedents, domestic or foreign, and your committee believe that the result will be the same—that the power of expelling a member must, in its nature, be discretionary, and in its exercise always more summary than the tardy process of judicial tribunals.

"The power of expelling a member for misconduct results on the principles of common sense, from the interest of the Nation that the high trust of legislation should be invested in pure hands. When the trust is elective it is not to be presumed that the constituent body will commit the deposit to the keeping of worthless characters. But when a man whom his fellow-citizens have honored with their confidence on the pledge of his spotless reputation has degraded himself by commission of infamous crimes, which become suddenly and unexpectedly revealed to the world, defective indeed would be that institution which should be impotent to discard from its bosom the contagion of such a member, which should have no remedy of amputation to apply until the poison had reached the heart.

"The question upon the trial of a criminal cause before the courts of common law is not between guilt and innocence, but between guilt and the possibility of innocence. If a doubt can possibly be raised, either by the ingenuity of the party or of his counsel, or by the operation of general rules in their unforeseen application to particular cases, that doubt must be decisive for acquittal, and the verdict of not guilty perhaps in nine cases out of ten means no more than that the guilt of the party has not been demonstrated in the precise, specific, and narrow forms prescribed by law. The humane spirit of the laws multiplies the barriers for the protection of innocence and freely admits that these barriers may be abused for the shelter of guilt. It avows a strong partiality favorable to the person upon trial and acknowledges the preference that ten guilty should escape rather than that one innocent should suffer. The interest of the public that a particular crime should be punished is but as one to ten compared with the interest of the party that innocence should be spared. Acquittal only restores the party to the common rights of every other citizen; it restores him to no public trust; it invests him with no public confidence; it substitutes the sentence of mercy for the doom of justice, and to the eyes of impartial reason in the great majority of cases must be considered rather as a pardon than a justification.

"But when a member of a legislative body lies under the imputation of aggravated offenses and the determination upon his cause can operate only to remove him from a station of extensive powers and important trust, this disproportion between the interest of the public and the interest of the individual disappears; if any disproportion exists, it is of an opposite kind. It is not better that ten traitors should be members of this Senate than that one innocent man should suffer expulsion. In either case, do doubt, the evil would be great. But in the former it would strike at the vitals of the nations; in the latter it might, though deeply to be lamented, only be the calamity of an individual."

The resolution reported by the said committee declaring "That John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, by his participation in the conspiracy of Aaron Burr against the peace, union, and liberties of the people of the United States, has been guilty of conduct incompatible with his duty and station as a Senator of the United States, and that he be therefore, and hereby is, expelled from the Senate of the United States," received 19 affimative votes to 10 in the negative. (Senate Election Cases, pp. 1170–1184.)

In 1862 Jesse D. Bright was expelled from the Senate for writing a letter to Jefferson Davis, "president of the Confederation of States," in March, 1861, introducing one Thomas B. Lincoln, who wished to dispose of an improvement in firearms. Some at least of the Senators who voted for Mr. Bright's expulsion asserted in effect that they did not claim that Mr. Bright had been guilty of treason, misprision of treason, or any other offense against the laws of this country. He was deprived of his seat in the Senate because it was believed that his desires and conduct were opposed to the welfare and interests of the nation.

In the course of the debate upon the question of expelling Mr. Bright Mr. Sumner used the following language:

"* * * But the question may be properly asked if this inquiry is to be conducted as in a court of justice, under all the restrictions and technical rules of judicial proceedings? Clearly not. Under the Constitution, the Senate, in a case like the present, is the absolute judge, free to exercise its power according to its own enlightened discretion. It may justly declare a Senator unworthy of a seat in this body on evidence defective in form, or on evidence even which does not constitute positive crime. * * * It is obvious that the Senate may act on any evidence which shall be satisfactory to show that one of its members is unworthy of his seat without bringing it to the test of any rules of law. It is true that the good name of the individual is in question; but so also is the good name of the Senate, not forgetting also the welfare of the country; and if there are generous presumptions of personal innocence, so also are there irresistible instincts of self-defense which compel us to act vigorously, not only to preserve the good name of the Senate, but also to preserve the country." (Congressional Globe, 2d sess. 37th Cong., pt. 1, pp. 412, 413, 414.)

In the same debate Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, said:

"* * * But what is the law? We are not sitting as a court trying the honorable Senator. There are some gentlemen, able men, very able men, men of enlarged patriotism, of eminent public and private virtue that have pursued the profession of the law so long, either as practitioners, counselors and solicitors, or as judges, that their minds have become too contracted for enlarged statesmanship and the great principles of policy and moral justice, upon which governments ought to be administered, and upon which alone they can be wisely administered. They have dwarfed their minds to such an extent that they can not reason upon the expansive principle and sentiment and consideration that ought to guide and control the largest and wisest statesmanship.

"There is no law which defines any particular class of offenses that shall be sufficient to expel a Senator from his seat. The common law does not. There is no statute law that does. There are no rules of evidence establishing technical rules of testimony that are to guide and control and govern this body in getting its lights and reaching its conclusions when a Senator is thus on trial. The general rule and principle of law and of reason and common sense is that whatever disqualifies a member of the Senate from the proper discharge of his duties, whatever it may be, is sufficient, and ought to be held sufficient, for his expulsion, and whatever evidence satisfies the mind reasonably and according to moral certainty and truth of the existence of that cause is sufficient evidence without resorting to the technical rules of testimony upon which to convict him. That is the law of this country. It is the law of England. It is the law of Parliament. I will read from Story's Commentaries on the Constitution, section 836, a short paragraph:

"'* * * * In July, 1797, William Blount was expelled from the Senate for a high misdemeanor entirely inconsistent with his public trust and duty as a Senator. The offense charged against him was an attempt to seduce an American agent among the Indians from his duty and to alienate the affections and confidence of the Indians from the public authorities of the United States, and a negotiation for services in behalf of the British Government among the Indians. It was not a statutable offense; nor was it committed in his official character; nor was it committed during the session of Congress, nor at the seat of government. Yet, by an almost unanimous vote [25 yeas to 1 nay] he was expelled from that body and he was afterwards impeached (as has already been stated) for this, among other charges. It seems, therefore, to be settled by the Senate, upon full deliberation, that expulsion may be for any misdemeanor which, though not punished by any statute, is inconsistent with the trust and duty of a Senator.'

"There is the touchstone. Any conduct, any opinions, any line of action as a Senator which is inconsistent with the duty of a Senator, is a sufficient cause for his expulsion and ought to be the rule of reason and of common sense. * * * The principle deduced from the authorities is this: There is no common law, no statutory law, there is no parliamentary law that binds the Senate to any particular definition of crime or offense in acting in this or any other case of the kind. On the contrary, as these authorities establish, it is a matter coming within the discretion of the tribunal trying the Senator." (Congressional Globe, 2d sess. 37th Cong., pt. 1, pp. 434, 435.)

In the progress of the debate Mr. McDougall said:

"* * * It is no question of law. We have not asked whether the Senator from Indiana is guilty or not guilty. We have to judge him in our best judgment, and by that we try him; and we say yea or nay, as we think, whether he be a true man or not to sit in the Federal councils to conduct the affairs of the United States." (Congressional Globe, 2d sess. 37th Cong., pt. 1, p. 655.)

To the same effect were the remarks made in the course of the same debate by Mr. Lane, Mr. Howe, Mr. Johnson, and Mr. Browning. (Congressional Globe, 2d sess. 37th Cong., pt. 1, pp. 417, 418, 560, 584, 623, 624.)

In the year 1867 Philip F. Thomas was denied a seat in the Senate of the United States, to which he had been duly elected, for the reason that he had resigned his seat in the cabinet of President Buchanan on account of his disagreement with the policy of the President in endeavoring to relieve the garrison of the forts in Charleston Harbor, and also because Mr. Thomas had given to his son, who was about to enter the service of the Confederate States, a sum of money, not to assist the son in going to the camp of the Confederate forces, but "that in case he was imprisoned or suffering he might have a sum of money with him." There was no well-founded claim that Mr. Thomas had been guilty of any act or conduct of which any court would take cognizance; the most that was claimed was that his conduct was such as to give "aid, countenance, and encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States." (Senate Election Cases pp. 333–339.)

In the British Parliament the same principle has been recognized in a number of cases and is now fully established.

In the year 1812 Benjamin Walsh was expelled from the House of Commons as "unworthy and unfit to continue a member of this House," on account of said Walsh having been guilty of "gross fraud and notorious breach of trust," although his offense was one "not amounting to felony." (67 Commons Journal, 175–176.) In that case the chancellor of the exchequer said:

"He could not think that because an act of Parliament did not make a moral crime a legal one the House of Commons should be prevented from taking cognizance of it." (Hansard's Parliamentary Debates, first series, vol. 21, p. 1199.)

In the year 1814 Sir Thomas Cochrane was expelled from the House of Commons for being concerned in a conspiracy to spread the false report that the French army had been defeated, Napoleon killed, and that the allied sovereigns were in Paris, the object to be attained by such false report being "to occasion a temporary rise and increase in the prices of the public Government funds," to the injury of those who should purchase such funds "during such last-mentioned temporary rise and increase in the prices thereof." (69 Commons Journal, 427–433.)

The protestants.

The main protest in this case was signed by 18 reputable citizens of the State of Utah. One of the signers, Dr. W. M. Paden, is the pastor of one of the leading Protestant churches of Salt Lake City and a graduate of Princeton University; another, Mr. P. L. Williams, is the general counsel of a railroad in Utah and the Western States; another, Mr. E. W. Wilson, is the cashier of a national bank in Salt Lake City; another, Mr. C. C. Goodwin, the editor of one of the leading papers of that city; another, Mr. W. S. Neldin, the president of a wholesale drug company doing business not only in Utah, but in other of the Western States; another, Mr. Ezra Thompson, a gentleman who has held the office of mayor of Salt Lake City for two terms; another, Mr. J. J. Corwin, a man engaged in real estate, who has been a resident of Utah for about sixteen years; five others, Mr. George R. Hancock, Mr. W. M. Ferry, Mr. Harry C. Hill, Hon. C. E. Allen, and Mr. H. G. McMillan, are men holding positions in the mining industry of Utah. Mr. Allen was the first Representative in Congress from the State of Utah. Another of the signers of the protest, Mr. G. H. Lewis, was formerly assistant United States attorney and is now master in chancery of the United States circuit court.

Rev. Abiel Leonard was, up to the time of his death, which occurred in November, 1903, the Bishop of the Diocese of Utah of the Protestant Episcopal Church. From the standing and character of the signers, it is evident that the protest is not the offspring of suspicion or prejudice, but that such protest emanates from men of such character and respectability as to be entitled to serious and careful consideration and the facts therein stated to be worthy of investigation by the Senate.

As regards the charge that Mr. Smoot has a plural wife, this fact, if proved, is conceded by Mr. Smoot and his counsel to be sufficient to disqualify him from holding a seat in the Senate. But this accusation seems to have been made by Mr. Leilich, unadvisedly and on his own responsibility, and without any sufficient evidence in support of the same. This charge is not made in the main protest, and counsel for the protestants at the outset of the investigation very frankly admitted that they had no proof to offer in support of this allegation.

Encouragement of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation by the Mormon authorities.

The first reason assigned by the protestants why Mr. Smoot is not entitled to a seat in the Senate is in effect that he belongs to a self-perpetuating body of 15 men who constitute the ruling authorities of the Church of Latter-Day Saints, or "Mormon Church," so called; that this ruling body of the church both claims and exercises the right of shaping the belief and controlling the conduct of the members of that church in all matters whatsoever, civil and religious, temporal and spiritual. It is then alleged that this self-perpetuating body of 15 men, of whom Mr. Smoot is one, uniting in themselves authority in both church and state so exercise this authority as to encourage a belief in polygamy as a divine institution and by both precept and example encourage among their followers the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation.

That the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church are a self-perpetuating body of 15 men, seem to be well established by the testimony of the one most competent to speak upon that subject, the president of the Church of Latter-Day Saints, Mr. Joseph F. Smith, who testifies, as will be seen on pages 91 and 92 of volume 1 of the printed copy of the proceedings in the investigation, that vacancies occurring in the number of the twelve apostles are filled by the apostles themselves with the consent and approval of the first presidency.

The testimony of Mr. Smith is as follows:

"Senator McComas. And the twelve apostles were then first named?

"Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

"Senator McComas. When vacancies occurred thereafter, by what body were the vacancies in the twelve apostles filled?

"Mr. Smith. Perhaps I may say in this way: Chosen by the body, the twelve themselves, by and with the consent and approval of the first presidency.

"Senator Hoar. Was there a revelation in regard to each of them?

"Mr. Smith. No, sir; not in regard to each of them. Do you mean in the beginning?

"Senator Hoar. I understand you to say that the original twelve apostles were selected by revelation?

"Mr. Smith. Yes, sir; that is right.

"Senator Hoar. Is there any revelation in regard to the subsequent ones?

"Mr. Smith. No, sir; it has been the choice of the body.

"Senator McComas. Then the apostles are perpetuated in succession by their own act and the approval of the first presidency?

"Mr. Smith. That is right."

To the same effect is the testimony of Francis M. Lyman.

It further appears that any one of the twelve apostles may be removed by his fellow-apostles without consulting the members of the church in general. It is also in proof that the first presidency and twelve apostles govern the church by means of so-called revelations from God, which revelations are given to the membership of the church as emanating from divine authority. It is also shown that those members of the Mormon Church who refuse to obey the revelations so communicated by the priesthood thereby become out of harmony with the church and are thus practically excluded from the blessings, benefits, and privileges of membership in the church.

It is also well established by the testimony that the members of the Mormon Church are governed in all things by the first presidency and twelve apostles. That this authority is extended to the membership through a series and succession of subordinate officials, consisting of presidents of seventies, presiding bishops, elders, presidents of stakes, bishops, and other officials. That one of the chief requirements by the leaders of the church is that members shall take counsel of their religious superiors in all things whatsoever, whether civil or religious, temporal or spiritual. That the failure to receive and obey counsel in any of these matters subjects the one who refuses to the discipline of the church. That this discipline is administered in the first instance by the subordinate officials, subject to the right to appeal to the higher officials of the church, and ultimately to the first president and twelve apostles. These rules, enforced, as they are, by the discipline of the Mormon Church constitute the first president and twelve apostles a hierarchy, a body of men at the head of a religious organization governing their followers with absolute and unquestioned authority in all things relating to temporal and political, as well as to spiritual affairs.

The testimony taken before the committee also shows beyond a reasonable doubt that this authority of the first presidency and 12 apostles is so exercised over the members of the Mormon Church as to inculcate a belief in the divine origin of polygamy and its rightfulness as a practice, and also to encourgae the membership of that church in the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. While this is denied on the part of the officials of the church, the truthfulness of the claim of the protestants in this regard is shown by a great number of facts and circumstances, no one of which is perhaps conclusive in itself, but when taken together form a volume of testimony so cogent and convincing as to leave no reasonable doubt in the mind that the truth is as stated by the protestants. It is proved without denial that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, one of the leading authorities of the Mormon Church, and still circulated by that church as a book equal in authority to the Bible and the Book of Mormon, contains the revelation regarding polygamy, of which the following is a part:

"61. And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood: If any man espouse a virgin and desires to espouse another and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins and have vowed to no other man, then he is justified he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him; for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth to him and to no one else.

"62. And if he have 10 virgins given unto him by this law he can not commit adultery, for they belong to him and they are given unto him; therefore he is justified.

"63. But if one or either of the 10 virgins, after she is espoused, shall be with another man she has committed adultery and shall be destroyed, for they are given unto him to multiply and replenish the earth, according to my commandment, and to fulfill the promise which was given by my Father before the foundation of the world; and for their exaltation in the eternal worlds, that they may bear the souls of men; for herein is the work of my Father continued, that he may be glorified.

"64. And again, verily, verily, I say unto you, if any man hath a wife who holds the keys of this power and he teaches unto her the law of my priesthood, as pertaining these things, then shall she believe and administer unto him or she shall be destroyed, said the Lord your God, for I will destroy her; for I will magnify my name upon all those who receive and abide in my law.

"65. Therefore, it shall be lawful in me, if she receives not this law for him to receive all things whatsoever I, the Lord his God, will give unto him, because she did not minister unto him according to my word; and she then becomes the transgressor; and he is exempt from the law of Sarah who ministered unto Abraham, according to the law, when I commanded Abraham to take Hager to wife."

It is also shown that numerous other publications of the Mormon Church are still circulated among the members of that church with the knowledge and by the authority of the church officials, which contain arguments in favor of polygamy. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants is not only still put forth to the members of the church as authoritative in all respects, but the first presidency and 12 apostles have never incorporated therein the manifesto forbidding the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, nor have they at any time or in any way qualified the reputed revelation to Joseph Smith regarding polygamy. And this Book of Doctrine and Covenants, containing the polygamic revelation, is regarded by Mormons as being of higher authority than the manifesto suspending polygamy.

Bearing in mind the authority of the first presidency and 12 apostles over the whole body of the Mormon Church, it is very evident that if polygamy were discountenanced by the leaders of that church it would very soon be a thing of the past among the members of that church. On the contrary, it appears that since the admission of Utah into the Union as a State the authorities of the Mormon Church have countenanced and encouraged the commission of the crime of polygamy instead of preventing it, as they could easily have done.

A sufficient number of specific instances of the taking of plural wives since the manifesto of 1890, so called, have been shown by the testimony as having taken place among officials of the Mormon Church to demonstrate the fact that the leaders in this church, the first presidency and the 12 apostles, connive at the practice of taking plural wives, and have done so ever since the manifesto was issued which purported to put an end to the practice. It has been shown by the testimony, so clearly as to leave no doubt of the fact, that as late as 1896 one Lillian Hamlin became the plural wife of Abraham H. Cannon, who was then an apostle of the Mormon Church. This is shown by the proof of these facts:

Down to the year 1895 Lillian Hamlin was a single woman. In 1896 she received attentions from Abraham H. Cannon, these attentions being of a character to indicate that there was more than a friendly relation existing between the two. In June, 1896, Abraham H. Cannon informed his plural wife that he was going to California with Joseph F. Smith and Lillian Hamlin to be married to Lillian Hamlin at some place outside the United States. While in California Joseph F. Smith went with Abraham H. Cannon and Lillian Hamlin from Los Angeles to Catalina Island. After the return of the party to Los Angeles, Abraham H. Cannon and Lillian Hamlin lived together as husband and wife. Returning to Salt Lake City, Abraham H. Cannon told his plural wife that he had been married to Lillian Hamlin. From that time it was generally reputed in the community and understood by the families of both Abraham H. Cannon and Lillian Hamlin that a marriage had taken place between them; that they had been married on the high seas by Joseph F. Smith. Lillian Hamlin assumed the name of Cannon, and a child to which she afterwards gave birth bears the name of Cannon and inherited a share of the estate of Abraham H. Cannon. The prominence of Abraham H. Cannon in the church, the publicity given to the fact of his taking Lillian Hamlin as a plural wife, render it practically impossible that this should have been done without the knowledge, the consent, and the connivance of the headship of that church.

George Teasdale, another apostle of the Mormon Church, contracted a plural marriage with Marion Scholes since the manifesto of 1890. The President of the Mormon Church endeavors to excuse this act upon the pretext that the first marriage of George Teasdale was not a legal marriage, but the testimony taken from the divorce proceedings which separated George Teasdale from his lawful wife, wholly controverts this assertion on the part of President Smith.

It is also in evidence that Walter Steed, a prominent Mormon, contracted a plural marriage after the manifesto of 1890. Charles E. Merrill, a bishop of the Mormon Church, took a plural wife in 1891, more than a year after the issuing of the manifesto. The ceremony uniting said Merrill to his plural wife was performed by his father, who was then and until the time of his death an apostle in the Mormon Church. It is also shown that John W. Taylor, another apostle of the Mormon Church, has been married to two plural wives since the issuing of the so-called manifesto.

Matthias F. Cowley, another of the 12 apostles, has also taken one or more plural wives since the manifesto. While the proof that Apostles Taylor and Cowley have married plural wives since the manifesto may not be so free from all possible doubt as is the proof in the case of Abraham Cannon, the fact that the proofs presented to the committee showing such marriages by Taylor and Cannon stand wholly uncontroverted, and the further fact that Apostles Taylor and Cowley, instead of appearing before the committee and denying the allegation, evade service of process issued by the committee for their appearance, and refuse to appear after being requested to do so, warrant the conclusion that the allegation is true and that said Taylor and Cowley have taken plural wives since the manifesto.

While the fact does not appear from any sworn testimony in the case, it is a matter of common report that Taylor and Cowley have recently been dropped from the list of apostles. But this fact in no way counteracts the influence of the Mormon leaders in their encouragement of polygamy. When Taylor and Cowley took their more recent plural wives they were numbered among the apostles in good standing. The fact that they had taken plural wives since the manifesto was well known to their associates for months and years. But they were continued as apostles, and no action was taken in the case of either until the facts were revealed to the world by this investigation. And it is worthy of note that these apostles have not been complained of or brought to trial before the church courts for disobeying the manifesto, nor have they been deprived of their offices or honors in the church (as was done in the case of Moses Thatcher for a political offense), but they are still members of the church in good standing, each still holds the office of an elder in the church, and each is still a member of the high priesthood of the church.

The dropping of Taylor and Cowley from the quorum of the 12 apostles was so evidently done for popular effect that the act merits no consideration whatever, except as an admission by the first presidency and 12 apostles that Apostles Taylor and Cowley have each taken one or more plural wives since the manifesto.

It is also proved that about the year 1896 James Francis Johnson was married to a plural wife, Clara Mabel Barber, the ceremony in this instance being performed by an apostle of the Mormon Church. To these cases must be added that of Marriner W. Merrill, another apostle; J. M. Tanner, superintendent of church schools; Benjamin Cluff, jr., president of Brigham Young University; Thomas Chamberlain, counselor to the president of a stake; Bishop Rathall, John Silver, Winslow Farr, Heber Benion, Samuel S. Newton, a man named Okey, who contracted a plural marriage with Ovena Jorgensen in the year 1897, and Morris Michelson about the year 1902. In the case of Benjamin Cluff, jr., before referred to, the polygamous marriage was tacitly sanctioned by President Joseph F. Smith when he "referred to Sister Cluff and the work she had been doing among the children in Colonia Diaz, Mexico."

It is morally impossible that all these violations of the laws of the State of Utah by the contracting of plural marriages could have been committed without the knowledge of the first presidency and the 12 apostles of the Mormon Church. In two of the above cases, that of George Teasdale and that of Benjamin Cluff, jr., the fact of the plural marriage was directly communicated to the president of the church, Joseph F. Smith, and in the other cases, with the possible exception of James Francis Johnson, the fact of a plural marriage having been celebrated was so well known throughout the community that it is not conceivable that such marriages would not have been called to the attention of the leaders of the church. Indeed, there was no denial on the part of the first president or any one of the 12 apostles that they learned of the fact that plural marriages were being contracted by officials of the Mormon Church and that no attention was paid to the matter. The excuse given by them was that it was not their duty to interfere in such matters; that the law furnished a remedy. Furthermore, it was shown by the testimony of one of the 12 apostles and of other witnesses that "under the established law of the church no person could secure a plural wife except by consent of the president of the church."

Suppression of testimony by Mormon leaders.

It is a fact of no little significance in itself, bearing on the question whether polygamous marriages have been recently contracted in Utah by the connivance of the first presidency and 12 apostles of the Mormon Church, that the authorities of said church have endeavored to suppress, and have succeeded in suppressing, a great deal of testimony by which the fact of plural marriages contracted by those who were high in the councils of the church might have been established beyond the shadow of a doubt. Before the investigation had begun it was well known in Salt Lake City that it was expected to show on the part of the protestants that Apostles George Teasdale, John W. Taylor, and M. F. Cowley, and also Prof. J. M. Tanner, Samuel Newton and others who were all high officials of the Mormon Church had recently taken plural wives, and that in 1896 Lillian Hamlin was sealed to Apostle Abraham H. Cannon as a plural wife by one of the first presidency and 12 apostles of the Mormon Church. All, or nearly all, of these persons except Abraham H. Cannon, who was deceased, were then within reach of service of process from the committee. But shortly before the investigation began all these witnesses went out of the country.

Subpœnas were issued for each one of the witnesses named, but in the case of Samuel Newton only could the process of the committee be served. Mr. Newton refused to obey the order of the committee, alleging no reason or excuse for not appearing. It is shown that John W. Taylor was sent out of the country by Joseph F. Smith on a real or pretended mission for the church. And it is undeniably true that not only the apostles, but also all other officials of the Mormon Church, are at all times subject to the orders of the governing authorities of the church.

It would be nothing short of self-stultification for one to believe that all these most important witnesses chanced to leave the United States at about the same time and without reference to the investigation. All the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction point to the conclusion that every one of the witnesses named left the country at the instance of the rulers of the Morman Church and to avoid testifying before the committee. It is, furthermore, a fact which can not be questioned that every one of these witnesses is under the direction and control of the first presidency and 12 apostles of the Mormon Church. Had those officials seen fit to direct the witnesses named to return to the United States and give their testimony before the committee, they would have been obliged to do so. The reason why the said witnesses left the country and have refused to come before the committee is easy to understand, in view of the testimony showing the contracting of plural marriages by prominent officials of the Mormon Church within the past few years.

It was claimed by the protestants that the records kept in the Mormon temple at Salt Lake City and Logan would disclose the fact that plural marriages have been contracted in Utah since the manifesto with the sanction of the officials of the church. A witness who was required to bring the records in the temple at Salt Lake City refused to do so after consulting with President Smith. It is claimed by counsel for Mr. Smoot that this witness was not mentally competent to testify; but his testimony may be searched in vain for any internal evidence of such incompetency, and there was nothing in the appearance of the witness when testifying to suggest to the committee that he was not as competent to testify as any witness who was examined during the course of the investigation.

The witness who was required to bring the records kept in the temple at Logan excused himself from attending on the plea of ill health. But the important part of the mandate of the committee—the production of the records—was not obeyed by sending the records, which could easily have been done.

In the case of other witnesses who were believed to have contracted plural marriages since the year 1890 all sorts of shifts, tricks, and evasions were resorted to in order to avoid service of a subpœna to appear before the committee and testify.

These instances of the suppression of testimony by the direct order or tacit consent of the ruling authorities of the Mormon Church warrant the committee in believing that the suppressed testimony would, if produced, strongly corroborate the testimony which was given, showing that those who direct the affairs of the Mormon Church countenance and encourage polygamous marriages, as well as polygamous cohabitation, and that the allegations of the protestants in that regard are true.

Mormon Officials Living in Polygamous Cohabitation.

Aside from this it was shown by the testimony, and in such a way that the fact could not possibly be controverted, that a majority of those who give the law to the Mormon Church are now, and have been for years, living in open, notorious, and shameless polygamous cohabitation. The list of those who are thus guilty of violating the laws of the State and the rules of public decency is headed by Joseph F. Smith, the first president, "prophet, seer, and revelator" of the Mormon Church, who testified in regard to that subject as follows:

"Mr. TAYLOR. Is the cohabitation with one who is claimed to be a plural wife a violation of the law of the church as well as of the law of the land?

"Mr. SMITH. That was the case, and is the case even to-day.

"Mr. TAYLOR. What was the case; what you are about to say?

"Mr. SMITH. That it is contrary to the rule of the church, and contrary as well to the law of the land, for a man to cohabit with his wives. * * * I have cohabited with my wives; not openly—that is, not in a manner that I thought would be offensive to my neighbors—but I acknowledged them; I have visited them. They have borne me children since 1890, and I have done it, knowing the responsibility and knowing that I was amenable to the law. * * *

"Mr. TAYLOR. In 1892, Mr. Smith, how many wives did you have?

"Mr. SMITH. In 1892?

"Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

"Mr. SMITH. I had 5. * * *

"Mr. TAYLOR. My question is, How many children have been born to him by these wives since 1890?

"Mr. SMITH. I had 11 children born since 1890.

"Mr. TAYLOR. Those are all the children that have been born to you since 1890?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; those are all.

"Mr. TAYLOR. Were those children by all of your wives; that is, did all of your wives bear children?

"Mr. SMITH. All of my wives bore children.

"Mr. TAYLOR. Since 1890?

"Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

"The CHAIRMAN. I understand since 1890?

"Mr. SMITH. Since 1890. I said that I have had born to me 11 children since 1890, each of my wives being the mother of from 1 to 2 of those children. * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Smith, I will not press it, but I will ask you if you have any objection to stating how many children you have in all.

Mr. SMITH. Altogether?

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

"Mr. SMITH. I have had born to me, sir, 42 children—21 boys and 21 girls—and I am proud of every one of them. * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you obey the law in having 5 wives at this time and having them bear to you 11 children since the manifesto of 1890?

"Mr. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I have not claimed that in that case I have obeyed the law of the land.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

"Mr. SMITH. I do not claim so, and, as I said before, that I prefer to stand my chances against the law." (Vol. 1, pp. 129, 133, 148, 197, 382.)

The list also includes George Teasdale, an apostle; John W. Taylor, an apostle; John Henry Smith, an apostle; Marriner W. Merrill, also an apostle; Heber J. Grant, an apostle; M. F. Cowley, an apostle; Charles W. Penrose, an apostle; and Francis M.

Lyman, who is not only an apostle, but the probable successor of Joseph F. Smith as president of the church. Thus it appears that the first president and 8 of the 12 apostles, a considerable majority of the ruling authorities of the Mormon Church, are noted polygamists.

In addition to these, the list includes Brigham H. Roberts, who is one of the presidents of 70s and a leading official of the church; J. M. Tanner, superintendent of the church schools; Andrew Jenson, assistant historian of the church; Thomas H. Merrill, a bishop of the church; Alma Merrill, one of the presidency of a church stake; Angus M. Cannon, patriarch of the Mormon Church; a man named Greenwald, who is at the head of a church school; George Reynolds, one of the first 7 presidents of 70s and first assistant superintendent of Sunday schools of the world; George H. Brimhall, president of Brigham Young University; and Joseph Hickman, teacher in Brigham Young University. All the officials named were appointed, either directly or indirectly, by the first presidency and 12 apostles; and in the case of J. M. Tanner, his appointment to his present office was made after he had been compelled to resign his position as president of the agricultural college because of the fact that he was a polygamist.

These facts abundantly justify the assertion made in the protest that "the supreme authorities in the church, of whom Senator-elect Reed Smoot is one, to wit, the first presidency and 12 apostles, not only connive at violation of, but protect and honor the violators of the laws against polygamy and polygamous cohabitation."

It will be seen by the foregoing that not only do the first presidency and 12 apostles encourage polygamy by precept and teaching, but that a majority of the members of that body of rulers of the Mormon people give the practice of polygamy still further and greater encouragement by living the lives of polygamists, and this openly and in the sight of all their followers in the Mormon Church. It can not be doubted that this method of encouraging polygamy is much more efficacious than the teaching of that crime by means of the writings and publications of the leaders of the church, and this upon the familiar principle that "actions speak louder than words."

And not only do the president and a majority of the 12 apostles of the Mormon Church practice polygamy, but in the case of each and every one guilty of this crime who testified before the committee, the determination was expressed openly and defiantly to continue the commission of this crime without regard to the mandates of the law or the prohibition contained in the manifesto. And it is in evidence that the said first president, addressing a large concourse of the members of the Mormon Church at the tabernacle in Salt Lake City in the month of June, 1904, declared that if he were to discontinue the polygamous relation with his plural wives he should be forever damned and forever deprived of the companionship of God and those most dear to him throughout eternity. Thus it appears that the "prophet, seer, and revelator" of the Mormon Church pronounces a decree of eternal condemnation throughout all eternity upon all members of the Mormon Church who, having taken plural wives, fail to continue the polygamous relation. So that the testimony upon that subject, taken as a whole, can leave no doubt upon any reasonable mind that the allegations in the protest are true, and that those who are in authority in the Mormon Church, of whom Mr. Smoot is one, are encouraging the practice of polygamy among the members of that church, and that polygamy is being practiced to such an extent as to call for the severest condemnation in all legitimate ways.

The manifesto a deception.

Against these facts the authorities of the Mormon Church urge that in the year 1890 what is generally termed a manifesto was issued by the first presidency of that church, suspending the practice of polygamy among the members of that church. It may be said, in the first place, that this manifesto misstates the facts in regard to the solemnization of plural marriages within a short period preceding the issuing of the manifesto. It now appears that in a number of instances plural marriages had been solemnized in the Mormon Church, and, in the case of those high in authority in that church, within a very few months preceding the issuing of the manifesto.

It is also observable that this manifesto in no way declares the principle of polygamy to be wrong or abrogates it as a doctrine of the Mormon Church, but simply suspends the practice of polygamy to be resumed at some more convenient season, either with or without another revelation. It is now claimed by the first president and other prominent officials of the Mormon Church that the manifesto was not a revelation, but was, at the most, an inspired document, designed "to meet the hard conditions then confronting" those who were practicing polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, leaving what the Mormon leaders are pleased to term "the principle of plural marriage" as much a tenet of their faith and rule of practice when possible, as it was before the manifesto was issued. Upon that subject Joseph F. Smith testified as follows:

"Mr. TAYLOR. The revelation which Wilford Woodruff received in consequence of which the command to take plural wives was suspended did not, as you understand, change the divine view of plural marriage, did it?

"Mr. SMITH. It did not change our belief at all.

"Mr. TAYLOR. It did not change your belief at all?

"Mr. SMITH. Not at all, sir.

"Mr. TAYLOR. You continued to believe that plural marriages were right?

"Mr. SMITH. We did. I did at least. I do not answer for anybody else. I continue to believe as I did before. (Vol. 1, p. 107.)

"Senator HOAR. The apostle says that a bishop must be sober and must be the husband of one wife.

"Mr. SMITH. At least."

And one of the twelve apostles has declared the fact to be that "the manifesto is only a trick to beat the devil at his own game." Further than this, it is conceded by all that this manifesto was intended to prohibit polygamous cohabitation as strongly as it prohibited the solemnization of plural marriages. In the case of polygamous cohabitation the manifesto has been wholly disregarded by the members of the Mormon Church. It is hardly reasonable to expect that the members of that church would have any greater regard for the prohibition of plural marriage.

The contention that the practice of polygamy is rightful as a religious ceremony and therefore protected by that provision of the Constitution of the United States which declares "that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," ought to be forever set at rest by the repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of the Mormon Church v. The United States, Justice Bradley, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"One pretense for this obstinate course is that their belief in the practice of polygamy, or in the right to indulge in it, is a religious belief, and therefore under the protection of the constitutional guaranty of religious freedom. This is altogether a sophistical plea. No doubt the Thuge of India imagined that their belief in the right of assassination was a religious belief; but their thinking so did not make it so. The practice of suttee by the Hindu widows may have sprung from a supposed religious conviction. The offering of human sacrifices by our own ancestors in Britain was no doubt sanctioned by an equally conscientious impulse. But no one on that account would hesitate to brand these practices now as crimes against society, and obnoxious to condemnation and punishment by the civil authority."

In the case of Davis v. Beason, Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Bigamy and polygamy are crimes by the laws of all civilized and Christian countries. They are crimes by the laws of the United States, and they are crimes by the laws of Idaho. They tend to destroy the purity of the marriage relation, to disturb the peace of families, to degrade woman, and to debase man. Few crimes are more pernicious to the best interests of society and receive more general or more deserved punishment. To extend exemption from punishment for such crimes would be to shock the moral judgment of the community. To call their advocacy a tenet of religion is to offend the common sense of mankind."

One living in polygamous cohabitation is in law a polygamist.

The members of the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church claim that there is a distinction between what they term polygamy—that is, the contracting of plural marriages—and polygamous cohabitation with plural wives. But under the circumstances this distinction is little short of ridiculous. As is demonstrated by the testimony, the so-called manifesto was aimed at polygamous cohabitation, as well as against the taking of plural wives, and it is the veriest sophistry to contend that open notorious cohabitation with plural wives is less offensive to public morals than the taking of additional wives. Indeed, it is the testimony of some of those who reside in communities that are cursed by the evils of polygamy that polygamous cohabitation is fully as offensive to the sense of decency of the inhabitants of those communities as would be the taking of plural wives.

And this excuse of the Mormon leaders is as baseless in law as it is in morals. In the case of Murphy v. Ramsay, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States and reported in the United States Supreme Court Reports, volume 114, page 15, it was decided that any man is a polygamist who maintains the relation of husband to a plurality of wives, even though in fact he may cohabit with only one. The court further held in the same case that a man occupying this relation to two or more women can only cease to be a polygamist when he has finally and fully dissolved the relation of husband to several wives. In other words, there is and can be no practical difference in law or in morals between the offense of taking plural wives and the offense of polygamous cohabitation. The same doctrine is affirmed in the case of Cannon v. United States (116 U. S. Supreme Court Reports, p. 55).

Mr. Smoot responsible for the conduct of the organization to which he belongs.

It is urged in behalf of Mr. Smoot that, conceding it to be true that the first president and some of the apostles are living in polygamy and that some of the leaders of the Mormon Church encourage polygamous practices, Mr. Smoot himself is not a polygamist, does not practice polygamy, and that there is no evidence that he has personally and individually encouraged the practice of polygamy by members of the Mormon Church, and that he ought not to be condemned because of the acts of his associates. This position is wholly untenable. Mr. Smoot is an inseparable part of the governing body of the Mormon Church—the first presidency and twelve apostles—and those who compose that organization form a unit, an entirety, and whatever is done by that organization is the act of each and every member thereof, and whatever policy is adopted and pursued by the body which controls the Mormon Church Mr. Smoot must be held to be responsible for as a member of that body. That one may be legally, as well as morally, responsible for unlawful acts which he does not himself commit is a rule of law too elementary to require discussion. "What one does by another he does by himself" is a maxim as old as the common law. And as the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church have authority over the spiritual affairs of the members of that church, it follows that such governing body of said church has supreme authority over the members of that church in respect to the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation.

In England in former years, and under the canon law, matters of marriage, divorce, and legitimacy were under the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts of the Kingdom, in which the punishment was in the nature of a spiritual penalty for the good of the soul of the offender, this penalty in many cases being that of excommunication or expulsion from the church. (1 Blackstone's Commentaries, 431; 3 Blackstone's Commentaries, 92; 4 Blackstone's Commentaries, 153 and note; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S., 145, 164-165.) And in later years, while the civil law now prohibits and punishes bigamy, the authorities of every Christian church in this country take cognizance of matrimonial affairs and by the authority of the church in spiritual matters prevent and punish by censure or expulsion any infraction of the rules of the church regarding marriage.

The testimony taken upon this investigation shows beyond controversy that the authority of the first presidency and the twelve apostles of the Mormon Church over the members of said church is such that were the said first presidency and twelve apostles to prohibit the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation by its members and abandon the practice themselves and expel from the church all who should persist in the practice, those offenses would instantly cease in that church. And the fact that not a single member of the Mormon Church has ever fallen into disfavor on account of polygamous practices is conclusive proof that the ruling authorities of that church countenance and encourage polygamy.

The conduct of Mr. Smoot in this regard can not be separated from that of his associates in the government of the Mormon Church. Whatever his private opinions or his private conduct may be, he stands before the world as an integral part of the organization which encourages, counsels, and approves polygamy, which not only fails to discipline those who break the laws of the country, but, on the contrary, loads with honors and favors those who are among the most noted polygamists within the pale of that church.

It is an elementary principle of law that where two or more persons are associated together in an act, an organization, an enterprise, or a course of conduct, which is in its character or purpose unlawful, the act of any one of those who are thus associated is the act of all, and the act of any number of the associates is the act of each one of the others.

An eminent legal authority says:

"Every person entering into a conspiracy or common design already formed is deemed in law a party to all acts done by any of the other parties, before or afterwards, in furtherance of the common design. The principle on which the acts and declarations of other conspirators, and acts done at different times, are admitted in evidence against the persons prosecuted is that by the act of conspiring together the conspirators have jointly assumed to themselves, as a body, the attribute of individuality so far as regards the prosecution of the common design, thus rendering whatever is done or said by anyone in furtherance of that design a part of the res gestae and therefore the act of all." (2 Greenleaf on Evidence, secs. 93, 94. See also Commonwealth v. Warren, 6 Mass., 74; People v. Mather, 4 Wend., 229, 260; People v. Peckens, 153 N. Y., 576, 586, 593; United States v. Gooding, 12 Wheaton, 459, 469; American Fur Company v. United States, 2 Peters, 358, 365; Nudd et al. v. Burrows, 91 U. S., 426, 438; United States v. Mitchell, 1 Hughes, 439 (Federal cases No. 15790); Stewart v. Johnson, 3 Har. (N. J.), 87; Hinchman v. Ritchie, Brightley's N. P. (Pa.), 143; Freeman v. Stine, 34 Leg. Int. (Pa.), 95; Spies et al. v. People, 122 Illinois, 1.)

The case last cited illustrates this principle more forcibly than any of the others referred to. In that case, which is commonly known as "the anarchists' case," there was, as to some of the defendants, very little evidence, and as to others of the defendants no satisfactory evidence that they were present at the commission of the murder with which they were charged, or advised or intended the murder which was committed by an unknown person. But it was proved that the defendants were members of an organization known as the International Association of Chicago, having for its object the destruction of the law and government and incidentally of the police and militia as the representatives of law and government, and that some of the defendants had, by spoken and printed appeals to workingmen and others, urged the use of force, deadly weapons, and dynamite in resistance to the law and its officers.

In denying the motion for a new trial in the anarchists' case the judge who presided at the trial used the following language:

"Now on the question of the instructions, whether these defendants, or any of them, anticipated or expected the throwing of the bomb on the night of the 4th of May is not a question which I need to consider, because the conviction can not be sustained, if that is necessary to a conviction, however much evidence of it there may be, because the instructions do not go upon that ground. The jury were not instructed to find the defendants guilty if they believed they participated in the throwing of that bomb, or advised or encouraged the throwing of that bomb, or anything of that sort. Conviction has not gone upon the ground that they did have any personal participation in the particular act which caused the death of Degan, but the conviction proceeds upon the ground, under the instructions, that they had generally, by speech and print, advised large classes of the people, not particular individuals, but large classes, to commit murder, and have left the commission, time, and place, to the individual will and whim, or caprice, or whatever it may be, of each individual man who listened to their advice, and influenced by that advice somebody not known did throw the bomb which caused Degan's death." (Century Magazine, April, 1893, p. 835.)

It will be seen by the decision of the court upon the motion for a new trial in the case of Spies et al. v. People that the anarchists were not convicted upon the ground that they had participated in the murder of which they were convicted. Whether they were or were not participants in the commission of this crime was not the main question at issue. They were convicted because they belonged to an organization which, as an organization, advised the commission of acts which would lead to murder.

Of like import is the decision in the case of Davis v. Beason, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1889, the decision being reported in volume 133, United States Supreme Court Reports, page 333. At the time of this decision the revised statutes of the State of Idaho provided that no person "who is a member of any order, organization, or association which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages its members, devotees, or any other persons to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, either as a rite or ceremony of such order, organization, or association or otherwise, is permitted to vote at any election or to hold any position or office of honor, trust, or profit within this Territory."

This provision of law the Supreme Court of the United States held to be constitutional and legal. It will be observed that this act disfranchises certain persons and makes them ineligible to any position or office of honor, trust, or profit, not for committing the crime of polygamy, nor for teaching, advising, counseling, or encouraging others to commit the crime, but because of their membership in an organization which teaches, advises, counsels, and encourages others to commit the crime of polygamy. In Wooley v. Watkins (2 Idaho Rep., 555, 566), the court say:

"Orders, organizations, and associations, by whatever name they may be called, which teach, advise, counsel, or encourage the practice or commission of acts forbidden by law, are criminal organizations. To become and continue to be members of such organizations or associations are such overt acts of recognition and participation as make them particeps criminis and as guilty, in contemplation of criminal law, as though they actually engaged in furthering their unlawful objects and purposes." (See also Innis v. Bolton, 2 Idaho Rep., 407, 414.)

It being a fact that the first presidency and the twelve apostles of the Mormon Church teach, advise, counsel, and encourage the members of that church to practice polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, which are contrary to both law and morals, and Mr. Smoot, being a member of that organization, he must fall under the same condemnation.

And the rule in civil cases is the same as that which obtains in the administration of criminal law. One who is a member of an association of any nature is bound by the action of his associates, whether he favors or disapproves of such action. He can at any time protect himself from the consequences of any future action of his associates by withdrawing from the association, but while he remains a member of the association he is responsible for whatever his associates may do.

Mr. Smoot has countenanced and encouraged polygamy.

But the complicity of Mr. Smoot in the conduct of the leaders of the Mormon Church in encouraging polygamy and polygamous cohabitation does not consist wholly in the fact that he is one of the governing body of that church. By repeated acts, and in a number of instances, Mr. Smoot has, as a member of the quorum of the twelve apostles, given active aid and support to the members of the first presidency and twelve apostles in their defiance of the laws of the State of Utah and of the laws of common decency, and their encouragement of polygamous practices by both precept and example.

It is shown by the testimony of Mr. Smoot himself that he assisted in the elevation of Joseph F. Smith to the presidency of the Mormon Church. That he has since repeatedly voted to sustain said Joseph F. Smith, and that he so voted after full knowledge that said Joseph F. Smith was living in polygamous cohabitation and had asserted his intention to continue in this course in defiance of the laws of God and man. He also assisted in the selection of Heber J. Grant as president of a mission when it was a matter of common notoriety that said Heber J. Grant was a polygamist. He voted for the election of Charles W. Penrose as an apostle of the Mormon Church after testimony had been given in this investigation showing him to be a polygamist. It is difficult to perceive how Mr. Smoot could have given greater encouragement to polygamy and polygamous cohabitation than by thus assisting in conferring one of the highest honors and offices in the Mormon Church on one who had been and was then guilty of these crimes. As trustee of an educational institution he made no protest against the continuance in office of Benjamin Cluff, jr., a noted polygamist, as president of that institution, nor made any effort to discover the truth that said Cluff had taken another plural wife long after the manifesto. Nor did he make any protest, as such trustee, against the election of George H. Brimhall, another polygamist, in the place of Benjamin Cluff, jr.

Since his election as an apostle of the Mormon Church Mr. Smoot has been intimately associated with the first president and with those who—with himself—constitute the council of the twelve apostles. The fact that many of these officials were living in polygamous relations with a number of wives was a matter of such common knowledge in the community that it is incredible that Mr. Smoot should not have had sufficient notice of this condition of affairs to at least have put him on inquiry. If he did not know of these facts, it was because he took pains not to be informed of them. At no time has he uttered a syllable of protest against the conduct of his associates in the leadership of the Mormon Church, but, on the contrary, has sustained them in their encouragement of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, both by his acts (as hereinbefore set forth) and by his silence. In the judgment of the committee, Mr. Smoot is no more entitled to a seat in the Senate than he would be if he were associating in polygamous cohabitation with a plurality of wives.

Domination of Leaders of the Mormon Church in Secular Affairs.

A careful examination and consideration of the testimony taken before the committee in this investigation leads to the conclusion that the allegations in the protest concerning the domination of the leaders of the Mormon Church in secular affairs are true, and that the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints exercise a controlling influence over the action of the members of that church in secular affairs as well as in spiritual matters; and that contrary to the principles of the common law, under which we live, and the constitution of the State of Utah, the said first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church dominate the affairs of the State and constantly interfere in the performance of its functions. The domination by the leaders of the church under their claim to exercise divine authority in all matters is manifested in a general way in innumerable instances.

The right to do so is openly claimed by those who profess to speak in behalf of the church. As late as February 25, 1904, one of the twelve apostles, in a public address, said "that from the viewpoint of the gospel there could be no separation of temporal and spiritual things, and those who object to church people advising and taking part in temporal things have no true conception of the gospel of Christ and the mission of the church."

The method by which the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church direct all the temporal affairs of the members of that church under the claim that such direction is by divine authority, is by requiring the members of the church in all their affairs, both spiritual and temporal, and especially the latter, to "take counsel." This means that they are to be advised by their immediate superiors. These superiors in turn take their instructions from those above them, and so on back to the point whence most, if not all, these directions emanate—that is, the first presidency and twelve apostles.

As was said by Mr. Chief Justice Zane, of Utah, in 1887:

"At the head of this corporate body, according to the faith professed, is a seer and revelator, who receives in revelations the will of the infinite God concerning the duty that man owes to himself, to his fellow-beings, to society, to human government, and to God. In subordination of this head are a vast number of officials of various kinds and descriptions, comprising a most minute and complete organization. The people comprising this organization claim to direct and lead by inspiration which is above all human wisdom, subject to a power above all municipal government, above all man-made law." (Vol. 1, p. 809.)

The phrase "take counsel" does not mean that the members of the church shall inquire of those above them in all cases concerning their action, but that they shall receive counsel—that is, direction—from those above them, and this counsel they are to implicitly obey. If they fail to do so they are excommunicated from the church and deprived, not only of the privileges of membership in the church, but, as they are assured and believe, they thereby forfeit all hope of happiness in a future life. The absolute submission of the great mass of the Mormon Church is illustrated by the fact that is laid down by the leaders of the church as a cardinal principle to the members that, if their file leaders say white is black, "it is their duty to say 'white is black.'"

Instances of the interference of the leaders of the Mormon Church in the secular affairs of their followers could be multiplied almost without number.

In one case a bishop of the church was deposed from his offices in the church because he promised to obey the laws against polygamy.

Another official of the Mormon Church was excommunicated for belonging to an organization for the enforcement of the laws and opposing the interference of the church in public affairs.

Another Mormon official was degraded in the church for refusing to obey his file leader.

In another case the members of a firm doing business in Salt Lake City were expelled from the Mormon Church because they persisted in engaging in mining operations contrary to the command of the authorities of the church.

In another instance the church authorities interfered in the matter of the establishment of an electric-light plant.

In 1903 two members of the Mormon Church who built a dancing pavilion in opposition to the "counsel" of the church authorities were summoned for trial and excommunication, and finally compromised the matter by turning over to the church officials the management of the pavilion and 25 per cent of the net earnings.

In another case there was a general understanding that the church, by its authorities, directed the location of a railroad station. In 1869 four members of the Mormon Church were excommunicated for apostasy in desiring to open up mines against the teachings of the holy priesthood."

In another and recent instance, occurring as late as the early part of 1903, a Mormon official was deposed from his official position for writing a letter to a newspaper criticising Mr. Smoot and his political ambitions.

In another instance, occurring in 1897, a Mormon official was deposed from his official relation to the church for distributing at a school election a ticket different from that prescribed by the church authorities.

In the year 1905 a teacher in the Mormon Church was cut off from the church for apostasy, the ostensible foundation for this charge being a criticism of the head of the church for his polygamous practices; the real ground being that the accused had persisted in engaging in the manufacture of salt, against the interests of the president of the church and some of his associates.

In what is known as the Birdsall case the officials of the Mormon Church assumed jurisdiction of a controversy concerning the title to real estate, and not only directed a conveyance of the title to a tract of land, but went further and enforced its decree by spiritual penalties. As has already been stated, no member of the Mormon Church (with possibly a single exception) has ever been disciplined for polygamy or polygamous cohabitation in defiance of the law and of the manifesto; but an obscure and feeble woman was excommunicated from the church and driven to the verge of insanity for refusing to obey the dictates of the church leaders and relinquish the title to a piece of land in favor of one who had no shadow of legal title thereto. As was testified by one of the witnesses for the protestants:

"Whenever a man disregards the teachings and instructions or counsels of the leaders of the church he has the spirit of apostasy."

A forcible illustration of the domination of the leaders of the Mormon Church over the secular affairs of the people is furnished by the fact that while a majority of these leaders have for years been living in polygamous relations, in defiance of law, no one dares to attempt to bring them to justice for fear of the consequences which would be visited by the church on the one who should make the complaint. And whenever one has been daring enough to make complaint for polygamous cohabitation against any member of the church the officers of the law have refused to prosecute, or those who were prosecuted and convicted have been released after the infliction of a merely nominal punishment.

The control which the governing body of the Mormon Church exercises over the secular affairs of the State of Utah is well illustrated by the fact that for many years past what are known as "religion classes" have been taught in connection with the public schools of that State. In these classes the youth of Utah are instructed in doctrines of the Mormon Church by teachers in the public schools, supported by State taxation, the course of study being prescribed by officials of the church. This course of study includes the lives of noted Mormons whose chief claim to eminence in the church lies in their having taken a multiplicity of wives and in their continuance in the crime of polygamous cohabitation.

The teaching of the doctrines, faith, and practice of the Mormon Church in the public schools of Utah, under the direction of the high priesthood of the church, is not only contrary to the general law governing the use of schoolhouses, as expounded by the courts of this country, but is also expressly forbidden by the constitution of the State of Utah, which provides, in article 1, section 4, as follows:

"No public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercises, or instruction, or for the support of any ecclesiastical establishment." (Schofield v. School Dist., 27 Conn., 499; Spencer v. Joint School Dist., 15 Kans., 259; School District v. Arnold, 21 Wis., 657.)

Such teaching is also prohibited by a statute of the State of Utah, which declares that "No atheistic, infidel, sectarian, religious, or denominational doctrines shall be taught in any of the district schools of this State." (Revised Statutes of Utah, sec. 1848.)

The conduct of the ruling authorities of the Mormon Church in directing the teaching of "religion classes" in the schoolhouses of Utah affords a fair illustration of the contempt with which the rulers of that church treat all laws and restrictions which stand in the way of their desires, or of their own interests or what they conceive to be the interests of the church of which they are the head.

The fact that these religion classes have been discontinued since their existence was revealed by this investigation serves to emphasize the truth that the Mormon Church dominates the affairs of the State of Utah in educational matters as well as in other respects.

Political domination of the Mormon Church.

But it is in political affairs that the domination of the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church is most efficacious and most injurious to the interests of the State. The constitution of the State of Utah provides "There shall be no union of church and state, nor shall any church dominate the State or interfere with its functions." (Vol. 1, p. 25.) Notwithstanding this plain provision of the constitution of Utah, the proof offered on the investigation demonstrates beyond the possibility of doubt that the hierarchy at the head of the Mormon Church has for years past formed a perfect union between the Mormon Church and the State of Utah, and that the church through its head dominates the affairs of the State in things both great and small. Even before statehood was an accomplished fact, and while the State was in process of formation, and afterwards, during the sessions of the first and succeeding legislatures, it was notorious that a committee appointed by the leaders of the Mormon Church was supervising the legislation of the State.

At about the same time, or shortly prior thereto, it became known throughout Utah that the leading officials of the Mormon Church desired that the voters belonging to that church should so divide on political lines that about one-half should belong to one of the great political parties of the nation and the other half to the other party, leaving a considerable number unassigned to either party, so that their votes could be cast for one party or the other, as might be necessary to further the interests of that church.

It is, of course, intended by the leaders of the church that this influence shall be secretly exerted, and this in many cases, if not in most cases, easily accomplished by means of the perfect machinery of the church, which has been adverted to, by which the will of the first presidency and twelve apostles is transmitted through ecclesiastical channels, talked over in prayer circles of the high councils of the church, and then promulgated to the members of the church as "the will of the Lord." Notwithstanding this attempt at secrecy, it has for many years been a matter of common knowledge among the people of those States in which the Mormon Church is strongest that political influence is being continually exerted in the matter of State and lower municipal officials. As was said by one of the witnesses who testified on the investigation: "Whenever they indorse a man, he will be elected. Whenever they put upon him the seal of their disapprobation, he will not be."

It was shown in the investigation that in the State of Idaho candidates for office, in order to have any hope of success, must visit Salt Lake City and arrange for such success with the leaders of the Mormon Church. The result of this is that whatever the Mormon Church desires to have done, either by way of legislation or in the way of administration of the affairs of the State, is done, and whatever the Mormon Church desires shall not be done, is not done. So well recognized is this fact that in a State convention held in Idaho in the year 1904 one of the leading Mormons made the proposition that in case a certain resolution should be withdrawn he would go to Utah and ask the president of the Mormon Church to cease interfering in Idaho politics. Thus it appears that the Mormon Church dominates the affairs of the State of Idaho to an extent only less than it does the affairs of the State of Utah. As an illustration of this fact, it was shown that a bill in which the Mormon Church was vitally interested was passed by the Legislature of Idaho shortly after the visit of one of the apostles of the Mormon Church, who came there for the purpose of procuring such legislation.

A striking illustration of the power of the Mormon Church in Utah in matters of legislation appears in the history of what is known as the Evans bill, which was passed by both houses of the Legislature of Utah in 1901, in order to prevent prosecutions for polygamous cohabitation. This bill was favored by the president of the Mormon Church and by a majority of the apostles and was passed by a Mormon legislature. It was vetoed by a Mormon governor, the principal reason for the veto being that the attempted legislation would bring about an amendment to the Constitution of the United States under which those guilty of the crime of polygamous cohabitation would be prosecuted and punished in the Federal courts.

Perhaps one of the most instructive instances of the exercise of the power of the Mormon Church in political affairs was in the matter referred to in the protest as the case of Moses Thatcher. In that case the testimony taken before the committee leaves no doubt that not far from the time when the leaders of the Mormon Church required their followers to divide between the two parties it was ordered by the Mormon leaders that those officials of the church who desired to engage in politics in behalf of one of the political parties should go out and influence the people of the Mormon Church in favor of that party, while those who were of the contrary opinion should remain at home and not attempt to influence the members of that church to adopt their way of thinking. Mr. Thatcher saw fit to disobey this edict and not only to become a candidate for the United States Senate, but to go out among the people and endeavor to win converts to the party of which he was a member. For this offense against the political dictation of the first presidency and twelve apostles Mr. Thatcher was deposed from his position as an apostle, deprived of all his offices in the Mormon Church, denied the privileges which are accorded to every Mormon in good standing, and the whole influence of the leaders of the Mormon Church was put forth to compass his defeat.

As was well said by Mr. Thatcher at the time of this occurrence, this action on the part of the ruling authorities of the church transformed the Mormon Church into a great political machine, the steering apparatus of which was in the hands of the 12 or 15 men at the head. All this occurred because Mr. Thatcher refused to "take counsel"—that is, to follow the dictates of the Mormon Church as to who should become candidates for office and who should not become such.

Specific directions given by the heads of the Mormon Church to those under them seem to have varied according to circumstances. Several years ago, and before the admission of Utah into the Union as a State, it would appear that the apostles of the Mormon Church would convey to the members of that church instructions concerning their political action openly and in public addresses. The people would be told from the pulpits of the Mormon Church what ticket they ought to support.

As late as 1892 a bishop of the Mormon Church called together a number of the members of that church who belonged to a party opposing the party of the bishop, and told those whom he had thus called together that he had received a message from the first presidency to the effect that the candidate of the party to which the bishop belonged should be elected to Congress. In the same year and at the same election the president of the Mormon Church took occasion to write a letter to the bishops of his church indorsing the candidacy of a certain gentleman for Representative in Congress. In 1898 one of the apostles of the Mormon Church in a letter to one of the first presidents of seventies virtually advocated the election of a certain candidate for a seat in the United States Senate.

In 1902 an apostle of the Mormon Church went through one of the counties of Idaho, telling the Mormon voters that it was the will of the church that they should vote a certain ticket.

In later years the method of domination by the Mormon Church in political affairs has been, to a great extent, by means of a rule requiring those of any prominence in the church to "take counsel" before becoming candidates for public office. This virtually puts into the hands of the Mormon priesthood the filling of the various offices in the State. If the church takes to itself the right to decide who shall be the candidates for offices, there is no other choice left to either candidates or people. Under this rule the people can not vote for anyone who is a prominent member of the Mormon Church unless the ruling authorities of the church permit him to be a candidate. This rule thereby becomes a species of political usurpation, striking at the very foundations of our Government. Our entire political system is based on the theory that every voter has the right to vote for anyone he pleases, and that the people have a right to call upon whomsoever they will to represent them and to administer the affairs of the Nation and of the Commonwealth. But the rule which has been promulgated and enforced by the officials of the Mormon Church precludes any member of that church from serving the Nation or the State unless he has been designated for such service by the hierarchy which governs said church. This means that the State shall subsist in all things in and through the "counsel" of the church.

The pretext under which the leaders of the Mormon Church excuse their selection of candidates for public office is that it is a rule of the church designed to prevent high officials in the church from becoming engaged in public affairs to the neglect of their ecclesiastical functions.

This veil is too thin to conceal the real motives and designs of the Mormon priesthood. Were that the true reason for the adoption of the rule, it would be made to apply to all the higher officials of the Mormon Church under all circumstances, and all would be prohibited from becoming candidates for public offices. And in such case the object of the rule would be attained by requiring of every church officer who becomes a candidate for public office that he resign his church office, and this without favor or distinction.

But the rule is not so framed or administered. Under this rule one may be a candidate for public office or may not be, according to the will of the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church. Under the rule as it is applied one of the twelve apostles may be elected to the Senate (as in the case of Mr. Smoot) or he may be defeated (as in the case of Mr. Thatcher). If one of the higher officials of the Mormon Church becomes a candidate for public office, he may retain his official station in the church, as in the case of Mr. Smoot and Mr. Roberts, or he may be broken of his office and deprived of his privileges in the church, as happened to Mr. Thatcher, these diffreing applications of the rule depending wholly on the will or caprice of the first presidency and the twelve apostles. Under this rule Mr. Roberts was defeated for the office of Representative in Congress, and under the rule he was afterwards elected to the same office.

But the domination of the higher officials in the Mormon Church does not cease with the selection by them of a candidate for public office. It is a fact of no little importance in this case that where the Mormon Church is strong the candidates favored by the ruling authorities of that church are generally elected.

The fact that Gentiles are sometimes elected to office in preference to Mormons in localities where the Mormons are in the ascendancy does not tend to prove the absence of church influence. It is shown by the testimony that the officials of the Mormon Church sometimes prefer one Mormon to another and sometimes prefer a Gentile to a Mormon. So well is it understood in Utah that the power of the Mormon Church in political affairs must be recognized and deferred to that in the election of Senators and of other officials the Mormons must be given what they claim as their share of the offices to be filled.

In order to realize the potency of the influence which the ruling authorities of the Mormon Church exercise in political affairs, it must be kept in mind that this influence proceeds from men who are believed by their followers to be oracles of God; that whatsoever they speak is the word of God; and that the first presidency of the Mormon Church and the council of the twelve apostles are "the mouthpiece of God." In the efforts put forth by the rulers of the church to defeat Moses Thatcher, the Mormon people were told that the first presidency and eleven of the apostles were inspired and that Moses Thatcher, the twelfth apostle, was not inspired.

The committee has not overlooked nor failed to give due consideration to the testimony of witnesses called in behalf of Mr. Smoot, who testified that there was no interference by the Mormon Church in the political affairs of Utah or Idaho. But, leaving out of consideration any political or personal bias for Mr. Smoot which those witnesses may have manifested, there is very little in their testimony aside from and beyond their individual opinion and judgment as regards the political conditions in the States named. The testimony of these witnesses in no way controverts the facts before referred to, from which facts the conclusion is irresistible that the controlling authorities of the Mormon Church do dominate the political affairs of the State of Utah and control to some extent the political affairs of the State of Idaho. Without disproof of these facts, or strong proof of countervailing facts, mere opinions of witnesses, however intelligent and however candid, do not suffice.

Not only is Mr. Smoot one of those by and through whom the political affairs of Utah are dominated, but his election to the Senate was, it is believed, the result of soch domination.

When Mr. Smoot concluded to become a candidate for the Senate, he was careful to obtain the "consent" of the first presidency and twelve apostles to his candidacy. But this so-called "consent" of the rulers of the church was naturally regarded by the people of Utah, who were familiar with the ways of the Mormon high-priesthood, as being, under the circumstances, equivalent to an indorsement, and made it impossible for anyone else to become an aspirant for the same position with any hope of success.

A practical union of church and state.

The fact that the adherents of the Mormon Church hold the balance of power in politics in some of the States enables the first presidency and twelve apostles to control the political affairs of those States to any extent they may desire. Thus, a complete union of church and state is formed. This is in accordance with the teachings of the priesthood of the Mormon Church, as promulgated in the writings of men of high authority in the church, to the effect that the church is supreme in all matters of government, as well as in all things pertaining to the private life of the citizen. In one of a series of pamphlets, "On the Doctrines of the Gospel," by Apostle Orson Pratt, it is affirmed:

"The kingdom of God is an order of government established by divine authority. It is the only legal government that can exist in any part of the universe. All other governments are illegal and unauthorized. God having made all things and worlds has the supreme right to govern them by His own laws and by officers of His own appointment. Any people attempting to govern themselves and by laws of their own making and by officers of their own appointment, are in direct rebellion against the kingdom of God." (Vol. 1, p. 666.)

The union of church and state in those States under the domination of the Mormon leaders is most abhorrent to our free institutions. John Adams declared that the attempt of the Church of England to extend its jurisdiction over the colonies "contributed as much as any other cause to arouse the attention, not only of the inquiring mind but of the common people, and to urge them to close thinking of the constitutional authority of Parliament over the colonies," and to bring on the War of Independence. After the colonies had achieved their independence, the complete enfranchisement of the church from the control of the state and of the state from the control of the church was brought about through the efforts of men like Thomas Jefferson and James Madison in Virginia, and those of almost equal prominence in other States. And thus the natural desire of the people of this Nation for the entire separation of church and state was incorporated in the Constitution of the United States by the first amendment to that instrument.

The right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience is one of the most sacred rights of every American citizen. No less sacred is the right of every citizen to vote according to his conscientious convictions without interference on the part of any church, religious organization, or body of ecclesiastics which seeks to control his political opinions or direct in any way his use of the elective franchise.

In the interest of religious freedom and to protect the State from the influence of the Mormon Church, the framers of the constitution of Utah incorporated in that instrument the provision which has been quoted in a preceding part of this report. That provision of the constitution of Utah has been persistently and contemptuously disregarded by the first presidency and the twelve apostles of the Mormon Church ever since Utah was admitted into the Union. They have paid as little regard to this mandate of the constitution of Utah as they have to the law which prohibits polygamy and the law which forbids polygamous cohabitation.

Oath of vengeance.

In the protest signed and verified by the oath of Mr. Leilich it is claimed that Mr. Smoot has taken an oath as an apostle of the Mormon Church which is of such a nature as to render him incompetent to hold the office of Senator. From the testimony taken it appears that Mr. Smoot has taken an obligation which is prescribed by the Mormon Church and administered to those who go through a ceremony known as "taking the endowments." It was testified by a number of witnesses who were examined during the investigation that one part of this obligation is expressed in substantially these words:

"You and each of you do covenant and promise that you will pray and never cease to pray Almighty God to avenge the blood of the prophets upon this nation, and that you will teach the same to your children and to your children's children unto the third and fourth generation."

An effort was made to destroy the effect of the testimony of three of these witnesses by impeachment of their reputation for veracity. This impeaching testimony was not strengthened by the fact that the witnesses by whom it was given were members of the Mormon Church, and would naturally disparage the truthfulness of one who would give testimony unfavorable to that church. The testimony of the witnesses for the protestants, before referred to, was corroborated by the testimony of Mr. Dougall, a witness sworn in behalf of Mr. Smoot, and no attempt was made to impeach the character of this witness. It is true that a number of witnesses testified that no such obligation is contained in the endowment ceremony; but it is a very suspicious circumstance that every one of the witnesses who made this denial refused to state the obligation imposed on those who take part in the ceremony.

The evidence showing that such an obligation is taken is further supported by proof that during the endowment ceremonies a prayer is offered asking God to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith upon this nation, and certain verses from the Bible are read which are claimed to justify the obligation and the prayer. The fact that such a prayer is offered and that such passages from the Bible are read was not disputed by any witness who was sworn on the investigation. Nor was it questioned that by the term "the prophets" as used in the endowment ceremony, reference is made to Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

That an obligation of vengeance is part of the endowment ceremony is further attested by the fact that shortly after testimony had been given on that subject before the committee, Bishop Daniel Connelly of the Mormon Church denounced the witnesses who had given this testimony as traitors who had broken their oaths to the church.

The fact that an oath of vengeance is part of the endowment ceremonies and the nature and character of such oath was judicially determined in the third judicial court of Utah in the year 1889 in the matter of the application of John Moore and others to become citizens of the United States. In an opinion denying the application, the court say:

"In these applications the usual evidence on behalf of the applicants as to residence, moral character, etc., was introduced at a formal hearing and was deemed sufficient. Objection was made, however, to the admission of John Moore and William J. Edgar upon the ground that they were members of the Mormon Church, and also because they had gone through the endowment house of that church and there had taken an oath or obligation incompatible with the oath of citizenship they would be required to take if admitted. * * *

"Those objecting to the right of these applicants to be admitted to citizenship introduced 11 witnesses who had been members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly called the Mormon Church. Several of these witnesses had held the position of bishop in the church, and all had gone through the endowment house and participated in its ceremonies. The testimony of these witnesses is to the effect that every member of the church is expected to go through the endowment house, and that nearly all do so; that marriages are usually solemnized there, and that those who are married elsewhere go through the endowment ceremonies at as early date thereafter as practicable in order that the marital relations shall continue throughout eternity.

"On behalf of the applicants 14 witnesses testified concerning the endowment ceremonies, but all of them declined to state what oaths are taken or what obligations or covenants are there entered into, or what penalties are attached to their violation; and these witnesses, when asked for their reason for declining to answer, stated that they did so 'on a point of honor,' while several stated they had forgotten what was said about avenging the blood of the prophets. * * *

"The witnesses for the applicants, while refusing to disclose the oaths, promises, and covenants of the endowment ceremonies and the penalties attached thereto, testified generally that there was nothing in the ceremonies inconsistent with loyalty to the Government of the United States, and that the Government was not mentioned. One of the objects of this investigation is to ascertain whether the oaths and obligations of the endowment house are incompatible with good citizenship, and it is not for applicants' witnesses to determine this question. The refusal of applicants' witnesses to state specifically what oath, obligations, or covenants are taken or entered into in the ceremonies renders their testimony of but little value, and tends to confirm rather than contradict the evidence on this point offered by the objectors. The evidence established beyond any reasonable doubt that the endowment ceremonies are inconsistent with the oath an applicant for citizenship is required to take, and that the oaths, obligations, or covenants there made or entered into are incompatible with the obligations and duties of citizens of the United States." (Vol. 4, pp. 340–343.)

The obligation hereinbefore set forth is an oath of disloyalty to the Government which the rules of the Mormon Church require, or at least encourage, every member of that organization to take.

It is in harmony with the views and conduct of the leaders of the Mormon people in former days, when they openly defied the Government of the United States, and is also in harmony with the conduct of those who give the law to the Mormon Church to-day in their defiant disregard of the laws against polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. It may be that many of those who take this obligation do so without realizing its treasonable import; but the fact that the first presidency and twelve apostles retain an obligation of that nature in the ceremonies of the church shows that at heart they are hostile to this nation and disloyal to its Government.

And the same spirit of disloyalty is manifested also in a number of the hymns contained in the collection of hymns put forth by the rulers of the Mormon Church to be sung by Mormon congregations.

There can be no question in regard to the taking of the oath of vengeance by Mr. Smoot. He testified that he went through the ceremony of taking the endowments in the year 1880 and the head of the Mormon Church stated in his testimony that the ceremony is now the same that it has always been.

An obligation of the nature of the one before mentioned would seem to be wholly incompatible with the duty which Mr. Smoot as a member of the United States Senate would owe to the nation. It is difficult to conceive how one could discharge the obligation which rests upon every Senator to so perform his official duties as to promote the welfare of the people of the United States and at the same time be calling down the vengeance of heaven on this nation because of the killing of the founders of the Mormon Church 60 years ago.

Mr. Smoot not entitled to a seat in the Senate.

The more deliberately and carefully the testimony taken on the investigation is considered, the more irresistibly it leads to the conclusion that the facts stated in the protest are true; that Mr. Smoot is one of a self-perpetuating body of men, known as the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church; that these men claim divine authority to control the members of said church in all things, temporal as well as spiritual; that this authority is, and has been for several years past, so exercised by the said first presidency and twelve apostles as to encourage the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in the State of Utah and elsewhere, contrary to the constitution and laws of the State of Utah and the law of the land; that the first presidency and twelve apostles do now control, and for a long time past have controlled, the political affairs of the State of Utah, and have thus brought about in said State a union of church and state, contrary to the constitution of said State of Utah and contrary to the Constitution of the United States, and that said Reed Smoot comes here, not as the accredited representative of the State of Utah in the Senate of the United States, but as the choice of the hierarchy which controlls the church and has usurped the functions of the State in said State of Utah.

It follows, as a necessary conclusion from these facts, that Mr. Smoot is not entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah, and your committee reports the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Reed Smoot is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah."

J. C. BURROWS,
Chairman.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. Foraker, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following as the views of the minority:

The undersigned members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, having had under consideration Senate Resolution No. 205, Fifty-seventh [1] Congress, second session, adopted January 27, 1903,[2] being unable to agree with the majority of the committee, submit the following minority report:

They attach hereto and make a part hereof a full statement of the case, showing all charges affecting or intending to affect the right and title of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah, together with an abstract of all the material, relevant, and competent testimony offered with respect thereto, and their conclusions deduced therefrom.

They ask that the same may be printed for purposes of reference as a part of this report, and respectfully refer to the same as a more complete statement of the following findings and propositions, and the testimony and arguments in support of the same, upon which they base their dissent from the conclusions and report of the majority of the committee:

I. Reed Smoot possesses all the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution to make him eligible to a seat in the Senate, and the regularity of his election by the legislature of the State of Utah is not questioned in any manner.

II. Aside from his connection with the Mormon Church, so far as his private character is concerned, it is, according to all the witnesses, irreproachable, for all who testify on the subject agree or concede that he has led and is leading an upright life, entirely free from immoral practices of any kind. He is not a polygamist; has never had but one wife, and has been noted from early manhood for his opposition to plural marriages, and probably did as much as any other member of the Mormon Church to bring about the prohibition of further plural marriages.

III. So far as mere belief and membership in the Mormon Church are concerned he is fully within his rights and privileges under the guaranty of religious freedom given by the Constitution of the United States, for there is no statutory provision, and could not be, prohibiting either such belief or such membership.

Moreover, having special reference to the Mormons residing in Utah and their peculiar belief, it was provided in the act of Congress, passed July 16, 1894, that the people of Utah should provide in their constitution "by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said States—

"1. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitants of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship: Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited."

In consequence there was embodied in the constitution of the State of Utah a compliance with this requirement, and thereupon the Territory was duly admitted as a State of the Union.

Accordingly, members of the Mormon Church, open and avowed believers in its doctrines and teachings, have been admitted without question to both Houses of Congress as Representatives of the State.

IV. There remain but two grounds on which the right or title of Reed Smoot to his seat in the Senate is contested. They are:

1. That he is shown to have taken what is spoken of in the record as the "endowment oath," by which he obligated himself to make his allegiance to the church paramount to his allegiance to the United States; and

2. That by reason of his official relation to the church, as one of its apostles, he is responsible for polygamous cohabitation which yet continues among the Mormons, notwithstanding it is prohibited by law.

As to the "endowment oath," it is sufficient in this summary to say that the testimony is collated and analyzed in the annexed statement, and thereby shown to be limited in amount, vague and indefinite in character, and utterly unreliable, because of the disreputable and untrustworthy character of the witnesses.

There were but seven witnesses who made any pretense of testifying about any such obligation. One of these was shown by the testimony of two uncontradicted witnesses to be mentally unsound. Another, to have committed perjury in the testimony given before the committee on another point. The third was shown by the uncontradicted testimony of a number of witnesses to have a bad reputation for truth and veracity, and to be thoroughly unreliable. A fourth admitted that he had been for years intemperate, and was shown by indisputable testimony to have lost his position on that account, and thereupon and for that reason to have withdrawn from the church and to have assumed such a hostile and revengeful attitude as to entirely discredit him as a reliable witness. The other three witnesses were so indefinite as to their statements that their testimony amounted at most to nothing more than an attempt to state an imperfect and confessedly uncertain recollection.

[1] This was evidently intended to be Fifty-eighth.

[2] This was evidently intended to be 1904.

All that it is attempted to show as to the character of this oath is positively contradicted by Reed Smoot and a great number of witnesses, whose standing and character and whose reputation for truth and veracity are unquestioned, except only in so far as their credibility may be affected by the fact that they are or have been members of the Mormon Church.

Upon this state of evidence we are of opinion that no ground has been established on which to predicate a finding or belief that Mr. Smoot ever took any obligation involving hostility to the United States, or requiring him to regard his allegiance to the Mormon Church as paramount to his allegiance and duty to the United States.

V. The only remaining question is whether or not by virtue of his official relation to the church as one of its apostles he has any responsibility for the continuation of polygamous cohabitation by members of that church.

The testimony on this point is also carefully collated and analyzed in the annexed statement.

It will be found by an examination of that testimony that he has never at any time, and particularly he has not since the manifesto of 1890, countenanced or encouraged plural marriages; but that on the contrary he has uniformly upheld the policy of the church, as announced by that proclamation, by actively advocating and exerting his influence to effect a complete discontinuance of such marriages, and that in the few instances established by the testimony where plural marriages and polygamous cohabitation, as a result of them, have occurred since 1890 they have been without any encouragement, countenance, or approval whatever on his part.

As to polygamous cohabitation in consequence of plural marriages entered into before the manifesto of 1890, there is no testimony to show that he has ever done more than silently acquiesce in this offense against law. In view of his important and influential position in the church, this acquiescence might be regarded as inexcusable if it were not for the peculiar circumstances attending the commission of this offense.

To understand these circumstances it is necessary to recall some historical facts, among which are some that indicate that the United States Government is not free from responsibility for these violations of the law. Instead of discountenancing and prohibiting polygamy when it was first proclaimed and practiced the Congress remained silent and did nothing in that behalf. While Congress was thus at least manifesting indifference, President Fillmore and the Senate of the United States in September, 1850, gave both recognition and encouragement by the appointment and confirmation of Brigham Young, the then head of the church, and an open and avowed advocate and representative of polygamy, to be governor of the Territory of Utah. When his term of office expired under this appointment he was reappointed by President Pierce and again confirmed by the Senate.

There was no legislation or action of any kind by Congress on this subject until the act of July 1, 1862, which was in language, as well as legal effect, nothing more than a prohibition of bigamy in the Territories and other places over which the United States had jurisdiction.

After this act, for a period of 20 years, plural marriages and polygamous cohabitation continued in the Territory of Utah practically unrestrained and without any serious effort on the part of the United States to restrict the same.

Finally, in response to an aroused public sentiment, Congress passed the act of March 22, 1882, by which it prohibited both plural marriages and polygamous cohabitation, but legitimized the children of all such marriages born prior to the 1st day of January, 1883. Under this act prosecutions were inaugurated to enforce its provisions, but it was soon demonstrated that public sentiment was such that only partial and very unsatisfactory success could be secured.

Then followed what is known as the Edmunds-Tucker Act of March 3, 1887, by which, among other things, the rules of evidence were so changed as to make it less difficult to secure evidence in prosecutions for polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. Again, by the terms of this act, all the children born within 12 months after its passage were legitimized.

This statute was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, and efforts to prosecute such offenses were redoubled with such success that on the 26th day of September, 1890, the then president of the church, Wilford Woodruff, issued what is known as the manifesto of 1890, forbidding further plural marriages. So far as the testimony discloses there have been but few plural marriages since, perhaps not more than the bigamous marriages during the same period among the same number of non-Mormons.

The evidence shows that there were at this time about 2,400 polygamous families in the Territory of Utah. This number was reduced to 500 and some odd families in 1905. A few of these families may have removed out of the State of Utah, but so far as the testimony discloses the great reduction in number has been on account of the deaths of the heads of these families. It will be only a few years at most until all will have passed away. This feature of the situation has had a controlling influence upon public sentiment in the State of Utah with respect to the prosecutions for polygamous cohabitation since the manifesto of 1890.

Whether right or wrong, when plural marriages were stopped and the offense of polygamy was confined to the cohabitation of those who had contracted marriages before 1890, and particularly those who had contracted marriages before the statutes of 1882 and 1887, the disinclination to prosecute for these offenses became so strong, even among the non-Mormons, that such prosecutions were finally practically abandoned.

It was not alone the fact that if no further plural marriages were to be contracted polygamy would necessarily in the course of time die out and pass away, but also the fact that Congress, having by the statutes of 1882 and 1887 specifically legitimized the children of these polygamous marriages, it was inconsistent, if not unwise and impossible, in the opinion of even the non-Mormons, to prohibit the father of such children from living with, supporting, educating, and caring for them; but if the father was thus to live with, support, educate, and care for the children, it seemed harsh and unreasonable to exclude from this relationship the mothers of the children.

Such are some of the reasons assigned for the lack of a public sentiment to uphold successful prosecutions for polygamous cohabitation after 1890. It is unnecessary to recite others, for it is enough to say that whatever the real reason or explanation may be, the fact was that after 1890 it became practically impossible to enforce the law against these offenses, except in flagrant cases.

Such was the situation when the Territory applied for admission to the Union and Congress passed the enabling act of July 16, 1894, by which the people of Utah, in order to entitle them to admission into the Union, on terms prescribed by Congress, were required to incorporate in their constitution a proviso that "polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited;" not polygamous cohabitation, it will be observed, but only polygamous marriages. The testimony shows that there was a common understanding both in Congress and Utah that there were not only to be no more plural marriages, but that prosecutions for polygamous cohabitation had become so difficult that there was a practical suspension of them, and that time was the only certain solution of the perplexing problem.

This sentiment has not only ever since continued, but with the constant diminution of the number of polygamous families and the rapid approach of the time when all will have passed away, there has come a natural strengthening of the sentiment. The testimony in this respect is set forth at length in the annexed statement, but we make the following quotations in order that it may appear in this summary that there is this common disposition, among non-Mormons as well as Mormons.

Judge William McCarthy of the supreme court of Utah, a non-Mormon and an uncompromising opponent of polygamy, who has held many important offices of trust, among others that of Assistant United States Attorney for Utah, and who, as such, was charged with the duty of prosecuting these offenses, testified as follows:

"I prosecuted them (offenses of polygamous cohabitation) before the United States Commissioners up until 1893, when the United States Attorney refused to allow my accounts for services for that kind of work, and then I quit and confined my investigations before the grand jury in those cases."

In explanation of his action he testified—we quote from the annexed statement:

"That he found the press was against the prosecutions; that the public prosecutor, whose attention he invited to the matter, refused to proceed. From this and other facts which came to his knowledge, Judge McCarthy reached the conclusion that the public sentiment was against interfering with men in their polygamous relations, who had married before the manifesto."

E. B. Critchlow, a non-Mormon attorney at law of Salt Lake City, one of the principal managers of this proceeding against Mr. Smoot, who gave the case his personal attention, attending most of the meetings of committee, testified before the committee, again quoting from annexed statement:

"That after the manifesto of 1890 there was no inclination on the part of the prosecuting officer to 'push these matters as to present cohabitation,' 'thinking it was a matter that would immediately die out;' that it was well known that Apostle John Henry Smith was living in unlawful cohabitation; that non-Mormons generally made no objection to it; that they were disposed 'to let things go,' and that that was the general feeling from the time of the manifesto in 1890 'down to very recent times—pretty nearly up to date, or practically up to date.'"

Mr. Critchlow further testified that the non-Mormons were disposed to overlook the continuous polygamous cohabitation of those who had taken plural wives before the manifesto, because they, the non-Mormons, felt satisfied that there would be no more plural marriages; that the thing would work itself out in the future, and that where the polygamists had their wives in separate houses and simply kept up the old relations without the offensive flaunting of them before the public, it had been practically passed over.

Orlando W. Powers, Esq., a leading lawyer of Utah, who was associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory, and who showed by his testimony much hostility to the Mormon Church, testified that there was this general feeling after the manifesto not to interfere with those whose marriages were prior thereto. He then added, "There is a question for statesmen to solve. We have not known what was best to do. It has been discussed and people would say that such and such a man ought to be prosecuted.

"Then they would consider whether anything would be gained; whether we would not delay instead of hastening the time that we hope to live to see; whether the institution would not flourish by reason of what they would term persecution. And so, notwithstanding a protest has been sent down here to you, I will say to you, the people have acquiesced in the condition that exists."

He explained that by "the people" he meant the Gentiles.

The following quotation from a speech by Senator Dubois, reported in the Congressional Record of February 5, 1903, page 1729 et seq., is to the same general effect:

"Mr. DUBOIS. * * * Various causes operated to cause the Mormons to abandon polygamy. There was a feeling among the younger members of the Mormon Church, and a very strong feeling, that polygamy should be done away with. So here was this pressure within the church against polygamy and the pressure by the Government from outside the church against polygamy. In 1891, I think it was, the president of the Mormon Church issued a manifesto declaring that thereafter there should be no polygamous marriages anywhere in the Mormon Church. The Mormons were then called together in one of their great conferences, where they meet by the thousands. This manifesto was issued to them by the first presidency, which is their authority; was submitted to them and all the Mormon people ratified and agreed to this manifesto, doing away with polygamy thereafter.

"The Senator from Maine (Mr. Hale) will recall that I came here as a Senator from Idaho shortly after that, and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Platt) will recall how bitter and almost intemperate I was in my language before his committee and on the floor of the other House in the denunciation of these practices of the Mormon Church. But after that manifesto was issued, in common with all of the Gentiles of that section who had made this fight, we said: 'They have admitted the right of our contention and say now, like children who have been unruly, we will obey our parents and those who have a right to guide us; we will do those things no more.' Therefore we could not maintain our position and continue punishing them unless it was afterwards demonstrated that they would not comply with their promise.

"After a few years in Idaho, where the fight was the hottest and the thickest, we wiped all of those laws from our statute books which aimed directly at the Mormon people, and to-day the laws on the statute books of Idaho against polygamy and kindred crimes are less stringent than in almost any other State in the Union. I live among those people; and, so far as I know, in Idaho there has not been a polygamous marriage celebrated since that manifesto was issued, and I have yet to find a man in Idaho or anywhere else who will say that a polygamous marriage has been celebrated anywhere since the issuance of that manifesto.

"Mr. HALE. Then, it must follow from that, as the years go by and as the older people disappear, polygamy as a practice will be practically removed.

"Mr. DUBOIS. There is no question about it; and I will say to the Senator, owing to the active part which we took in that fierce contest in Idaho, I with others, who had made that fight, thought we were justified in making this promise to the Mormon people.

"We had no authority of law; but we took it upon ourselves to assure them that those older men who were living in the polygamous relation, who had growing families which they had reared and were rearing before the manifesto was issued, and at a time when they thought they had a right under the Constitution to enter into polygamous relations—that those older men and women and their children should not be disturbed; that the polygamous man should be allowed to support his numerous wives and their children.

"The polygamous relations, of course, should not continue, but we would not compel a man to turn his families adrift. We promised that the older ones, who had contracted those relations before the manifesto was issued, would not be persecuted by the Gentiles; that time would be given for them to pass away, but that the law would be strenuously enforced against any polygamous marriage which might be contracted in the future."

Much more testimony might be quoted of the same general character. It is sufficient, however, for the purpose of this summary to say that there is practically no testimony in conflict with that which has been quoted.

In other words, the conditions existing in Utah since Reed Smoot became an official of the Mormon Church in 1900 have been such that non-Mormons and Mormons alike have acquiesced in polygamous cohabitation on the part of those who married before the manifesto of 1890, as an evil that could best be gotten rid of by simply tolerating it until in the natural course of events it shall have passed out of existence.

With this disposition prevailing everywhere in the State of Utah among all classes—the Gentile or non-Mormon population as well as among the Mormons—the undersigned are of the opinion that there is no just ground for expelling Senator Smoot or for finding him disqualified to hold the seat he occupies because of the fact that he, in common with all the people of his State, has not made war upon, but has acquiesced in, a condition for which he had no original responsibility. In doing so he has only conformed to what non-Mormons, hostile to his church, as well as Mormons, have concluded is, under all the circumstances, not only the wisest course to pursue, but probably the only course that promises effective and satisfactory results.

STATEMENT.

The minority respectfully submit the following statement as a part of their foregoing report.

January 27, 1903,[1] the Senate adopted the following Senate Resolution No. 205:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate the right and title of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Utah, and said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and that the expense of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee."

At the time of the adoption of this resolution there were pending in the Senate two formal protests against the admission of Reed Smoot to the Senate, both having been filed before he took his seat. One of these protests is signed by W. M. Paden and 17 others and the other by John L. Leilich alone—Mr. Leilich being also one of the 17 who signed the principal protest.

Shortly before the adoption of the foregoing resolution at a preliminary hearing on the 16th day of January, 1903,[1] of which notice was duly given, counsel appeared before the committee representing Mr. Paden and others who signed the principal protest, and Mr. Smoot also appeared in person and by counsel. At that time statements were made by counsel for the respective parties, stating, in a general way, what they expected to prove and what their claims were as to the legal aspects of the case. Later the taking of testimony commenced.

Numerous witnesses were produced and examined before the committee, both on behalf of the protestants and on behalf of Mr. Smoot. The taking of this evidence was continued from time to time until the 25th day of January, 1905, when the further taking of testimony was closed and counsel were heard in argument. The committee took the case under consideration with a view to making a report. Afterwards, at the present session, the case was reopened for the further taking of testimony, after which the case was again argued by counsel.

In the protest signed by Mr. Leilich alone it was charged that Reed Smoot is a polygamist and that, as an apostle of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—commonly called the Mormon Church—he had taken an oath "of such a nature and character as that he is thereby disqualified from taking the oath of office required of a United States Senator." No one appeared, however, to sustain either of these charges. No evidence has been offered in support of either of them; but, on the contrary, both charges were refuted by a number of witnesses.

[1] This was evidently intended to be 1904.

The investigation made by the committee has been based chiefly upon the charges made in the protest signed by Mr. Paden and others. At the preliminary hearing already referred to counsel for the protestants presented, in a more formal way than had been done in the protest itself, the charges supposed to be embodied in that protest.

The charges thus presented are as follows:

First. The Mormon priesthood, according to the doctrine of that church and the belief and practice of its membership, is vested with, and assumes to exercise, supreme authority in all things temporal and spiritual, civil and political. The head of the church claims to receive divine revelations, and these Reed Smoot, by his covenants and obligations, is bound to accept and obey, whether they affect things spiritual or things temporal.

Second. The first presidency and twelve apostles, of whom Reed Smoot is one, are supreme in the exercise of this authority of the church, and in the transmission of that authority to their successors. Each of them is called prophet, seer, and revelator.

Third. As shown by their teaching and by their own lives, this body of men has not abandoned belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. On the contrary—

(a) As the ruling authorities of the church they promulgate in the most solemn manner the doctrine of polygamy without reservation.

(b) The president of the Mormon Church and a majority of the twelve apostles now practice polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, and some of them have taken polygamous wives since the manifesto of 1890. These thing have been done with the knowledge and countenance of Reed Smoot. Plural-marriage ceremonies have been performed by apostles since the manifesto of 1890, and many bishops and other high officials of the church have taken plural wives since that time. All of the first presidency and twelve apostles encourage, countenance, conceal, and connive at polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, and honor and reward by high office and distinguished preferment those who most persistently and defiantly violate the law of the land.

Fourth. Though pledged by the compact and bound by the law of their Commonwealth, this supreme body, whose voice is law to its people and whose members were individually directly responsible for good faith to the American people, permitted, without protest or objection, their legislators to pass a law nullifying the statute against polygamous cohabitation.

In substance these charges, so far as they seem to be a proper subject of inquiry here, are:

1. That the Mormon Church exacts and receives from its members, including Reed Smoot, absolute obedience in all political matters.

2. That the Mormon Church is promulgating the doctrine of polygamy, and that the first presidency and all the twelve apostles, including Reed Smoot, "encourage, countenance, conceal, and connive at polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, and reward those who practice it."

No evidence has been submitted to the committee or has come to its knowledge in anywise affecting injuriously the general character of Reed Smoot. On the contrary, it has been admitted by the protestants, through their counsel, and a number of witnesses on both sides have testified, that his moral character is unimpeachable in every respect. In the protest of Mr. Paden and others it is explicitly stated that they do not charge him with any offense cognizable by law.

Some historical facts.

To a proper understanding of the voluminous evidence in the case, in so far as it tends to throw any light upon the question whether Reed Smoot is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate, it will be useful to set forth, in a preliminary way, certain indisputable historical facts.

The Mormon people, under the lead of Brigham Young, in their pilgrimage from Nauvoo, Ill., settled at the place now known as Salt Lake City in the summer of 1847. The place where they located was, at that time, Mexican territory. The Mormons, however, hoisted the Stars and Stripes on an eminence near the city, ever since called Ensign Peak.

On the 20th day of September, 1850, Brigham Young, the then head of the Mormon Church, was nominated for governor of the Territory of Utah by President Fillmore, and his appointment was confirmed by the Senate September 28, 1850. During his term of office under that appointment, and in the year 1852, Brigham Young, as the president of the Mormon Church, formally and publicly proclaimed polygamy as a doctrine of that church.

There is some dispute as to whether polygamy had not been proclaimed in 1844 by Joseph Smith, jr., Brigham Young's predecessor as president of the church; but it is not deemed necessary in this statement to consider the merits of that controversy.

The admitted fact is that from the time of Brigham Young's announcement in 1852 polygamy was openly practiced in Utah by many of the Mormon people, including Brigham Young himself.

When his term of office as governor of the Territory expired in 1854 he was appointed for another term of four years by President Pierce, his nomination being again confirmed by the Senate; he served out his second full term of four years. During all of this time he continued to be president of the church and to openly live in polygamous relations with several wives.

Act of 1862.

There seems to have been no attempt by the Government of the United States to interfere with the practice of polygamy in Utah until July 1, 1862, on which date an act of Congress entitled "An act to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah," became a law (12 Stat. L., 501).

The first section of that act is as follows:

"That every person having a husband or wife living, who shall marry any other person, whether married or single, in a Territory of the United States, or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall, except in the cases specified in the proviso to this section, be adjudged guilty of bigamy, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, and by imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years: Provided, nevertheless, That this section shall not extend to any person by reason of any former marriage whose husband or wife by such marriage shall have been absent for five successive years without being known to such person within that time to be living; nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been dissolved by the decree of a competent court; nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been annulled or pronounced void by the sentence or decree of a competent court on the ground of the nullity of the marriage contract."

It will be observed that while this section of the act of 1862 made it a penal offense to take a plural wife or husband it did not punish or in anywise interfere with the continued cohabitation of those who had previously entered into the polygamous relation.

The Edmunds law.

Such cohabitation was not made an offense until March 22, 1882, when the so-called "Edmunds Act" became a law. (22 Stat. L., 30.) This act of 1882 amended the act of July 1, 1862 (which in the meantime had become section 5352 of the Revised Statutes). Section 3 of the amendatory act provided:

"SEC. 3. That if any male person, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

In the seventh section of the same act it was provided as follows:

"SEC. 7. That the issue of bigamous or polygamous marriages, known as Mormon marriages, in cases in which such marriages have been solemnized according to the ceremonies of the Mormon sect, in any Territory of the United States, and such issue shall have been born before the first day of January, anno Domini eighteen hundred and eighty-three, are hereby legitimated."

Soon after the Edmunds Act became a law, prosecutions were instituted in the Territorial courts against persons who were living in polygamy, those prosecutions being nearly all under the third section of the act, which made it an offense for a man to cohabit with more than one woman. From that time until October, 1890, the number of polygamous marriages in Utah decreased, but the practice was not entirely stopped.

The Edmunds-Tucker act.

By what is called the Edmunds-Tucker Act, approved March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. L., 635), the rules of evidence were changed so as to make a lawful husband or wife of a person accused of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation a competent witness.

By section 7 of that act the various acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah incorporating or continuing the corporation known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints were disapproved and annulled, and that corporation dissolved, and it was further made the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to take proper proceedings in the supreme court of the Territory to wind up the affairs of the corporation. Section 11 of this act of 1887 further provided as follows:

"SEC. 11. That the laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah which provide for or recognize the capacity of illegitimate children to inherit or to be entitled to any distributive share in the estate of the father of any such illegitimate child are hereby disapproved and annulled; and no illegitimate child shall hereafter be entitled to inherit from his or her father or to receive any distributive share in the estate of his or her father: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any illegitimate child born within twelve months after the passage of this act, nor to any child made legitimate by the seventh section of the act entitled 'An act to amend section fifty-three hundred and fifty-two of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March twenty-second, eighteen hundred and eighty-two."

Reynolds. v. The United States.

Although the act of 1862, above referred to, made it a criminal offense to marry a plural wife in the Territories of the United States, and although polygamy was openly and publicly practiced, there seems to have been little effort on the part of the Government to suppress it in Utah for many years after that time. Finally, however, one George Reynolds was indicted and charged with bigamy under that act, and his case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The principal question involved was whether since polygmay was a duty under the religious doctrines of the Mormon Church, an act of Congress punishing the taking of a plural wife was an unconstitutional interference with religion. That case was decided at the October term, 1878. (Reynolds v. United States, 97 U. S., 145.) The court held that while it was not competent for Congress to make a mere belief a punishable offense, yet it was entirely competent for it to make criminal an act which the person committing it might consider to be a duty under his religious belief.

It is worthy of note that the belief of the Mormons in the unconstitutionality of the act in question was so strong that Reynolds, a member of the church, voluntarily enabled proof of his offense to be obtained in order that the constitutionality of the act might be tested.

The manifesto of 1890.

On the 26th of September, 1890, Wilford Woodruff, then president of the Mormon Church, issued what is called "The Manifesto," of which the following is a copy:

Official declaration.

To whom it may concern:

Press dispatches having been sent for political purposes from Salt Lake City, which have been widely published, to the effect that the Utah Commission, in their recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, allege that plural marriages are still being solemnized, and that 40 or more such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June or during the past year; also that in public discourses the leaders of the church have taught, encouraged, and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy:

I, therefore, as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that these charges are false. We are not teaching polygamy, or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice, and I deny that either 40 or any other number of plural marriages have, during that period, been solemnized in our temples or in any other place in the Territory.

One case has been reported in which the parties alleged that the marriage was performed in the Endowment House, in Salt Lake City, in the spring of 1889, but I have not been able to learn who performed the ceremony; whatever was done in this matter was without my knowledge. In consequence of this alleged occurrence the Endowment House was, by my instructions, taken down without delay.

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the church or in those of my associates during the time specified which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy, and when any elder of the church has used language which appeared to convey any such teachings he has been promptly reproved. And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

At the semiannual general conference of the members of the Mormon Church, which was held on October 6, 1890, the foregoing declaration was unanimously accepted "as authoritative and binding." Two years later it was again approved by the general conference of the church. Since it was first approved by the general conference, in October, 1890, it has been and still remains a part of the fundamental law of the Mormon Church, which can be repealed or modified only by the action of a similar conference.

As to the effect of the manifesto on the power of the president of the Mormon Church, or any subordinate official, to celebrate a plural marriage we quote a part of the testimony of James E. Talmage. Dr. Talmage prepared and issued, under the auspices of the church authorities, a work called "Articles of Faith," which authoritatively sets forth the doctrines of the church, having been submitted to, approved by, and published by the church itself. (Vol. III, pp. 47 and 48.)

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Doctor, you have used the expression here 'holding the keys' in connection with that revelation involving polygamy, when it was given to Joseph Smith, jr., that he was the only man who held the keys to that power. He only at that time, or some person delegated by him, could make a plural marriage that would be valid according to the laws of the church. Am I right in that?

"Mr. TALMAGE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. From that time on down to the time that President Woodruff issued the manifesto, which the church approved in conference assembled, the same principle obtained?

"Mr. TALMAGE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. That a plural marriage could not be valid according to the law of the church, only when celebrated by the president, or by somebody authorized by him to celebrate it. Is that right?

"Mr. TALMAGE. That is strictly true.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then when this revelation which is called the manifesto came and it was submitted to the people and accepted by them, that power was taken away from the president, was it not?

"Mr. TALMAGE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. So that since the 6th of October, 1890, the president of the church had no power to solemnize a plural marriage according to the law of the church, even?

"Mr. TALMAGE. That is true.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. And no power to authorize anybody else to celebrate one?

"Mr. TALMAGE. That is true.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. So that if any person has undertaken to enter into plural marriage, if any woman has become the plural wife of a husband since the 6th day of October, 1890, she is no more a wife by the law of the church than she is by the law of the land?

"Mr. TALMAGE. That is true.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. And it is not in the power of the president to revive the old system so that he can make a valid plural marriage or authorize one, unless he does it through the general conference of the church?

"Mr. TALMAGE. Certainly. It is now a rule of the church that that power shall not be exercised. The power is there, but the exercise of it is entirely stopped, and a rule of the church thus made and sanctioned is equally binding with the law founded upon revelation, and the president therefore has in one sense, half voluntarily, inasmuch as he was the chief individual to bring it before the conference, but by the action of the conference, properly speaking, has surrendered that power as far as its exercise is concerned.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. It takes the action of the people to restore it, does it not?

"Mr. TALMAGE. Most assuredly——." (3—48, 49.)

The enabling act.

The enabling act, under which Utah in January, 1896, was finally admitted into the Union, was passed by Congress on July 16, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 107). By section 3 of that act it was required that the State convention, which was authorized to be called to organize the State government, should provide:

"By ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said States—

"First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship: 'Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.'"

It is very important to observe that while this act made it a condition to the admission of the State that polygamous or plural marriages should not be allowed, no provision of any kind was made against polygamous cohabitation. That offense was left to be governed by the constitution and laws of the State as the inhabitants of the State might determine.

The testimony shows that the distinction thus made by Congress in the enabling act between polygamous marriages and polygamous cohabitation was intentional. Polygamous marriages, as we have seen, were not forbidden by any act of Congress until 1862, 10 years after polygamy had become prevalent in Utah. It was 20 years later still, 1882, before Congress prohibited polygamous cohabitation.

From the time polygamy was first promulgated by Brigham Young, as president of the Mormon Church, until about five years thereafter, he was continued in office by the Government as governor of the Territory. Both the Edmunds Act of 1882 and the Edmunds-Tucker Act of 1887 recognized polygamous marriages to the extent of making legitimate all the children born of such marriages prior to the passage of those acts, respectively, who might be born within a period in one case of 9 months and 9 days and in the other 12 months after the passage of the act.

Polygamous cohabitation.

Under these laws families had been created, and children born of polygamous marriages had grown to manhood and womanhood. It is not surprising under such circumstances that there was a feeling on the part both of the Government officials in that Territory and of the people of the Territory that if further polygamous marriages should cease the continuance of polygamous relations theretofore created might be tolerated if they were not openly or flauntingly carried on.

To prohibit such relations would be to deny the parents of legitimate children to dwell together with such children. Some 25 or 30 witnesses have been examined on this subject, most of them non-Mormons and several of them witnesses called on behalf of the protestants. There is a practical unanimity among them that at least from the time of the admission of the State into the Union, which occurred on January 4, 1896, there was practically a universal disinclination to prosecute those who had plural families born of relations established before the manifesto of 1890.

As a sample of the evidence on this subject we refer to the testimony of Judge William M. McCarty, one of the associate justices of the supreme court of Utah. He was assistant United States attorney for the Territory of Utah from 1889 until 1902, when he was elected county attorney of Sevier County, in that Territory. He was reelected in 1894. In 1895 he was elected one of the district judges of the State of Utah.

He was reelected to that office in 1900, and in 1902 was elected to his present office. He is a non-Mormon, and has always been an uncompromising opponent of polygamy. He conducted some of the prosecutions for polygamous cohabitation between the date of the manifesto, in 1890, and the admission of the State into the Union in January, 1896. He testified:

"I prosecuted them before the United States commissioners up until 1893, when the United States attorney refused to allow my accounts for services for that kind of work, and then I quit and confined my investigations before the grand jury in those cases."

And Judge McCarty further testified that the superior to whom he referred as stopping the prosecution for polygamous cohabitation was John W. Judd, a Gentile.

In 1897 some prosecutions for polygamous cohabitations against men who were married before the manifesto came before Judge McCarty as district judge of the State. The accused in those cases admitted their guilt and were punished by a fine only, upon agreeing to cease cohabitation with their plural wives. Judge McCarty testified that it was after these prosecutions he obtained the first emphatic expression he had observed as to the state of public opinion in Utah at that time regarding such prosecutions.

He said that he found the press was against the prosecutions; that the public prosecutor, whose attention he invited to the matter, refused to proceed. From this and other facts which came to his knowledge Judge McCarty reached the conclusion that the public sentiment of the State was against interfering with men in their polygamous relations who had married before the manifesto. (Vol. 2, 882 to 886; 889, 916.)

E. B. Critchlow, a Gentile lawyer, of Salt Lake City, who prepared the principal protests in this case and who, during the early sittings of the committee, assisted Mr. Tayler, counsel for the protestants, in presenting their case, testified as a witness on behalf of the protestants that after the manifesto of 1890 there was no inclination on the part of the prosecuting officer to "push these matters as to present cohabitation," "thinking it was a matter that would immediately die out;" that it was well known that Apostle John Henry Smith was living in unlawful cohabitation; that non-Mormons generally made no objection to it; that they were disposed "to let things go," and that that was the general feeling from the time of the manifesto in 1890 "down to very recent times—pretty nearly up to date or practically up to date."

Mr. Critchlow further testified that the non-Mormons were disposed to overlook the continuous polygamous cohabitation of those who had taken plural wives before the manifesto, because they—the non-Mormons—felt satisfied that there would be no more plural marriages; that the thing would work itself out in the future, and that where the polygamists had their wives in separate houses and simply kept up the old relations without the offensive flaunting of them before the public it had been practically passed over. (Vol. 1, 624, 625.)

Another witness called on behalf of the protestants was Orlando W. Powers, a leading lawyer of Utah, a non-Mormon, who was associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Utah in 1885 and 1886, and whose testimony in general shows his strong feeling against the Mormon Church. He testified that, speaking for those who fought the church party in the days when it was a power, they had felt and still feel that if the church would stop new plural marriages, those who had contracted such marriages before the manifesto would not be interfered with. After stating that the people who lived in the East had no understanding of the situation in this regard in Utah, Judge Powers added:

"That condition exists. There is a question for statesmen to solve. We have not known what was best to do. It has been discussed, and people would say that such and such a man ought to be prosecuted. Then they would consider whether anything would be gained; whether we would not delay instead of hastening the time that we hope to live to see; whether the institution would not flourish by reason of what they would term persecutions. And so, notwithstanding a protest has been sent down here to you, I will say to you the people have acquiesced in the condition that exists."

Then the witness added that by "The people" he meant the Gentiles. (Vol. 1, 884–885.)

William J. McConnell, ex-governor of Idaho and ex-Senator of the United States from that State, when asked whether there was any public sentiment in Idaho in reference to prosecutions for simply unlawful cohabitation, as distinguished from new polygamous marriages, replied:

"It was understood and agreed when we adopted our State constitution and were admitted to statehood, that these old Mormons who had plural families would be allowed to support their wives and children without molestation. It was agreed by all parties, Democrats and Republicans alike, that they should be allowed to drift along. We could, under the law, have prosecuted these people and perhaps have sent them to jail. We could doubtless have broken up these families, but we felt it better that these men should be allowed to support these old women and these children than to further persecute them." (2; 522.)

This witness was sharply cross-examined by Mr. Tayler and by the chairman on this subject, with the result that he made his testimony more emphatic. (2; 524, 526.)

On his redirect examination he further stated that he agreed to the foregoing testimony of Mr. Critchlow and Mr. Powers. (2; 531, 532.)

F. H. Holzheimer, a leading lawyer of Idaho, who was practicing his profession in Utah until November, 1902, testified that the issuing of the manifesto of 1890 brought about a very peculiar state of affairs, and that the question of how to take care of the problem was one which confronted the people of Utah, and which the witness did not think they have really solved.

He added:

"The consensus of opinion at that time was that those who had contracted marriages prior to the manifesto should be left alone. It was not, however, believed that they should openly violate the law and unlawfully cohabit with their numerous wives. I will say this, that where that has occurred it has been mostly in isolated cases. There have been a number of cases where children have been born, but in no case that I know of has it been done openly. It is true it is against the law, but it has not been done in such an open lewd manner as has been intimated nor has it been general. And because of the peculiar state of affairs it was the opinion that the whole thing would die out; that it was only a matter of a short time when the question would be entirely settled, because there would be no new marriages." (2; 575–576.)

Frank Martin, a lawyer of Idaho, testified that he believed those who were living in polygamous cohabitation in his State ought to be punished. But he added:

"A majority of our people seem to think that the best way, as far as concerns those old fellows who contracted these relations before the manifesto, as long as they stop it and do not take any new wives, or as long as no new wives are taken, is to let it go, to let it gradually die out, to let the old ones die." (2; 622.)

James H. Brady, a Gentile of Idaho, who operates several irrigation canals in that State and owns a power plant at the American Falls, when asked what is the sentiment in Idaho regarding disturbing or leaving undisturbed the men who went into polygamy prior to the manifesto of 1890, answered:

"To be absolutely frank in the matter, my judgment is that a majority of the men in Idaho would favor leaving those old men to live out their lives just as they have started in." (2; 649.)

J. W. N. Whitecotton, a lawyer who resides at Provo City, where Senator Smoot lives, and who is intimately acquainted in most of the Mormon counties in Utah, was asked what has been the sentiment among non-Mormons in Utah in regard to the men who had entered into polygamy prior to the manifesto of 1890, and answered:

"Well, that is a pretty hard question to answer. The Gentiles in Utah have recognized that we have a very hard problem to deal with in that respect. It offers many embarrassing things. There has been a good deal said in this testimony—I have read it—about an understanding. I know nothing of any understanding in regard to that. But I do know this, that the people generally feel like they do not want to stir up this thing and set it to smelling any more. It has not a good odor.

"And there is another thing that they have taken into account in the neighborhood where I am, at least. When we get out to punish this man who is living in polygamy, put him in prison, they take into account somewhat the consequences that will come to his family. Now, the women who went into polygamy in Utah went into it because, although I think under a delusion, they thought it was a religious duty, and they are bound by the obligation. They feel that way.

"And under the rules of the church, as I understand them, a plural wife, if she is divorced from her husband, may not become the wife of another man, and those plural wives who have children are in a very precarious condition if they are to be entirely separated from the only protector they have. I think that the condition of these women and the children they have has probably entered as largely into the feeling of 'let the matter slide along and not bother it' as any other factor."

On his further examination on this subject, the following occurred:

"The CHAIRMAN. What is the sentiment in regard to those who contracted plural marriages before 1890 and are now living with their wives and having new children by them up to this time?

"Mr. WHITECOTTON. The sentiment is that it is an awful condition.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is a lawful condition?

"Mr. WHITECOTTON. That is an awful condition.

"The CHAIRMAN. Oh.

"Mr. WHITECOTTON. Leave off the 'l.' And we wish we were out of it. We do not know how to get out of it.

"The CHAIRMAN. What is the sentiment with respect to that class of people—approval or disapproval?

"Mr. WHITECOTTON. They have the disapproval of the people generally, but that does not go to the extent of causing a man to shoulder the responsibility of setting the law in motion against that man.

"The CHAIRMAN. So that that class of men are left without interference?

"Mr. WHITECOTTON. They are left practically without interference. They have our regrets, but we do not know how to get at them.

"Senator FORAKER. You have said that that is largely because of the regard the people have for the condition in which the plural wives and children would be left in case of a successful prosecution.

"Mr. WHITECOTTON. Yes, sir. I think that (regard for plural wives and children) is the chief cause of withholding the hand of prosecution. Those women are human, and so are their children, and they are not much to blame, either, especially the children." (2; 679–680.)

Hiram E. Booth, a practicing lawyer of Salt Lake City and one of the leading managers in the State of the Republican Party, upon being asked to explain why it is that, if the people of Utah, including a large part of the Mormon people, are so opposed to polygamy, those who are living in polygamous relations are not interfered with, said:

"Well, my explanation of that is that the principal fight of the Gentiles has been to do away with polygamous marriages. While during many years there were numerous prosecutions for unlawful cohabitation, it was not for the purpose of punishment so much, those people who lived in unlawful cohabitation, as it was to bring about a cessation of polygamous marriages. That was the principle for which we strove, to stop people from marrying in polygamy. This was finally brought about in 1890 by the manifesto of the president of the church, which was affirmed, or sustained, as they call it, by the conference on October 6, 1890, and again in 1891. We did not accept that in good faith at that time.

"That is, we were somewhat skeptical about it; but later we did. Now, there has been since that time a disinclination to prosecute men and women who live in unlawful cohabitation. One of my own reasons—the way I look at it—was this: My sympathy was with the plural wife and her children. By these prosecutions she suffered more really than the husband did. In nearly all of the cases I may say the plural wife is a pure-minded woman, a woman who believed that it was right according to the law of God for her to accept that relation, and that she can not be released from her obligations when they are once entered upon.

"Mr. BOOTH. I should say, with Judge Powers and Mr. Critchlow, that the general sentiment among the Gentile people in Utah is a disinclination to prosecute those cases.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. If I understand you, when Senator Smoot was a candidate for Senator, and when he became an apostle, which was in April, 1900, things had settled down in Utah by the general acquiescence of the people that if there would be no new polygamous marriages the people who had entered into that relation before the manifesto should not be disturbed?

"Mr. BOOTH. Should not be disturbed; no, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. And that was the state of opinion there when he became an apostle?

"Mr. BOOTH. That was the state of opinion when he became an apostle.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. And if he had gone against that state of opinion he would have been going against the public sentiment of the State, would he not?

"Mr. BOOTH. Yes.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Gentiles and Mormons?

"Mr. BOOTH. Gentiles and Mormons. I would say in that respect that where polygamous relations were carried on in such a way as to outrage public sentiment, in those cases, of course, a prosecution would have been demanded." (2; 714, 715, 723.)

Arthur Pratt, who was deputy United States marshal in Utah from 1874 until 1882, and again from 1886 to 1890, and who probably arrested more Mormons charged with polygamy or polygamous cohabitation than any other man, said that he had heard Mr. Whitecotton and Mr. Booth testify on this subject, and that he agreed with them, for the reasons stated by them—not out of any pity or sympathy for the men, but out of sympathy and out of the suffering that would be entailed on the women and the children. (2; 744.)

E. D. R. Thompson, a non-Mormon, who has lived in Salt Lake City since 1889, never been a Mormon, and who has taken a leading part in Republican politics in that State, testified:

"Well, the general idea has been that this condition of things would gradually die away by the lapse of time. It has been generally repugnant to most people who take any position as against the Mormons in this matter which would imply either prosecution or persecution. In other words, they did not care to be informers." (2; 991.)

Charles De Moisy (a non-Mormon), who is a commissioner of the State bureau of statistics of Utah, and has never been a Mormon, says, in regard to the sentiment among Gentiles in Utah as to the punishment of those who live in polygamous cohabitation where the marriages were celebrated before the manifesto, "I think there is a matter of indifference about it"—that he himself thinks—"the less said about those things the better." (2; 1003.)

Glen Miller, a non-Mormon, who was United States marshal in the Territory of Utah for four and a half years, and had been a member of the State senate for two years after Utah had been admitted into the Union, when asked what it the sentiment of Gentiles in Utah in regard to prosecutions for polygamous cohabitation between persons who were married before the manifesto, answered:

"Well, there has been a sentiment against that, as there has been against any informing against any of the infractions of law generally. They have felt that it was only a question of time that the practice would die out through the death of those who practiced it and the removal of that generation." (3; 160.)

John W. Hughes, who has never been a Mormon, and is the editor of a weekly paper in Salt Lake City, when asked the same question, replied:

"Well, the sentiment has been right along that these old fellows that are in polygamy—to let them alone and they will soon die out. Very soon none of them will be left. The great point with the Gentiles is that there will be no new plural marriages." (3; 163.)

Mrs. Mary G. Coulter, a non-Mormon, whose husband is a physician in Ogden, testified:

"Those of us who have witnessed the old-time antagonisms and who are living and working for the new growth and progress do not believe in inquisitorial methods. We believe that the work of education, the establishment of industries, the developing of the mining regions, the building of railroads especially, and the influx of people, owing to the colonization schemes which are succeeding there, will in time eradicate all of the old and objectionable conditions." (3; 170.)

Polygamy in other countries—how dealt with.

A situation analogous to that existing in Utah after polygamy had been forbidden by the law of the church, as well as by the law of the State, arises in countries where polygamy is lawful, when missionaries have converted polygamists to the Christian faith. The question then frequently arises whether polygamists shall be admitted to the church, and if so whether they shall be required to put away all of their families except one. In the argument of the case, counsel for the respondent has referred to certain publications by various Christian churches, showing the proceedings that have taken place in some such cases and the results. The Presbyterian and Reformed Review, vol. 7, for 1896, contains an article on "The baptism of polygamists in non-Christian lands" from which the following extracts are taken:

"At the regular meeting of the synod of India, held in Ludhiana, November, 1894, among the most important questions which came before the synod was this: Whether in the case of a Mohammedan or Hindoo with more than one wife, applying for baptism, he should in all cases, as a condition of baptism, be required to put away all his wives but one. After a very thorough discussion, lasting between two or three sessions of the synod, it was resolved, by a vote of 36 to 10, to request the general assembly, 'in view of the exceedingly difficult complications which often occur in the cases of polygamists who desire to be received into the church, to leave the ultimate decision of all such cases in India to the synod of India.' The memorialists add: 'It is the almost unanimous opinion of the members of the synod that, under some circumstances, converts who have more than one wife, together with their entire families, should be baptized.'

"Not only is it thus the fact that more than four-fifths of the members of the synod of India believe that it may sometimes be our duty, under the conditions of society in India, to baptize a polygamist without requiring him first to put away all his wives but one, but when the missionary ladies present during the sessions of synod, desirous of ascertaining the state of opinion among themselves on this subject, took a vote thereupon, of these 36 ladies, many of them intimately familiar with the interior of zenana life for years, all feeling no less hatred of polygamous marriage than their sisters in America, all but three signified their agreement with the majority of synod, of which minority of three two had been only a few days in India and were therefore without any experience touching the practical questions involved. Nor is this large majority of our missionaries singular in their belief on this subject.

"When some years ago the question was debated in the Panjab missionary conference, in which a large number of the missionaries and eminent Christian laymen of all denominations took part, 10 out of 12 of the speakers expressed the same opinion as that held by more than four-fifths of the synod of India to-day. So the Rev. Dr. James J. Lucas, of Saharanpur, says that the brethren who maintained the lawfulness of not requiring a polygamist to put away any of his wives as a prerequisite to baptism "are not even in a minority in the missionary body in India.'

"A few years ago the Madura Mission voted in favor of baptizing such, provided they had contracted their marriages in ignorance and there was no equitable way of securing a separation. Their action was disapproved by the American board, but it none the less illustrates again what is the judgment of a large part of those who, living in India, are in most intimate relation to the living facts, and who are thus far better qualified to form a right decision than can be the wisest men at home.

"Again, as bearing on the polygamist's duty, it should be noted that in the great majority of cases among the Hindus the second marriage is contracted because of the first wife having no children. So that when the general assembly requires the polygamist convert to put away all wives but the first, it requires him not only to signalize his conversion by violating a contract held valid alike by his Christian rulers and a large part of his Christian brethren, but to do this in such a way as shall inflict the greatest amount possible of cruel injustice and suffering, by turning out of his house that wife who is the mother of his children (who will naturally in most cases have to go with her) and denying to her conjugal rights of protection and cohabitation which he had pledged her.

"The wrong involved is aggravated under the conditions of life in India, in that it will commonly be practically impossible for the wife turned off, whichever she be, to escape the suspicion of being an unchaste woman, and she will inevitably be placed in a position where, with good name beclouded and no lawful protector, she will be under the strongest temptation to live an immoral life. No doubt polygamy is wrong; but then, is not breach of faith and such injustice and cruelty to an innocent woman and her children also wrong? If there is a law against polygamy, is there not a law also against these things even more explicit and indubitable? In the case supposed both can not be kept. Which shall the man be instructed to break?

"The general assembly of 1875 appears to have imagined that the injustice was done away by enjoining a man to 'make suitable provision for her support that is put away, and for her children, if she have any.' But this utterly fails to meet the case. 'For the breach of faith required remains, since the marriage contract, both according to Scripture and the law of all Christian lands, as well as of India, binds the husband not only to support, but equally to protection and cohabitation. But by the deliverance of 1875 all missionaries in non-Christian lands are directed by the general assembly to instruct the convert that, in order to baptism, he must keep the compact as regards the first particular, but break it as regards the others.

"Moreover, the moral end sought will, even so, not be gained. The wife put away may live in a separate house and at a distance—but then polygamists sometimes keep different wives in different homes—and it will not be easy to persuade a Hindoo or Mohammedan community, especially if the man still continues to give her money as required by the assembly's law, that cohabitation really ceases."

In India and Christian Opportunity, a book published in 1904, the author of which is Harlan P. Beach, M. A., F. R. G. S., in dealing with the general subject of "Problems connected with new converts," the author, at page 222, says:

"1. Polygamy.—One difficulty in the way of receiving a professed convert, though affecting only a small percentage of candidates, is a most perplexing one; it is that of applicants who have more than one wife. As Hindoo or Mohammedan they have entered in good faith into marriage contracts with these wives, and if a man puts away all but one, what provision shall be made for the rejected, and on what principle shall he decide as to the one to be retained?

"While it is a question easily answered in missionary society councils at home, it is a more serious problem at the front. Some good missionaries hold that where the husband is living the Christian life in all sincerity it is better to receive into the church such a candidate—though not eligible to any church office—than to require him to give up all but one wife and thus brand with illegitimacy his children by them, as well as occasion the wives so put away endless reproach and embarrassments."

In India's Problem, Krishna or Christ, which was published in 1903, the author of which is John P. Jones, D. D., of southern India, A. B. C. F. M., the author, in dealing with this question, says, on pages 289 and 290:

"In the consideration of the problem many things must be kept in mind. None more important than the claims to a cordial welcome from the church of any man who, in true faith and Christian earnestness, seeks admittance. If it be demanded of the man that he put away all but one of those wives taken in heathenism, then we ask whether it is Christian, or even just, to cast away one to whom he was solemnly and religiously pledged according to the laws of the land and with whom he has been linked in love and harmony for years and from whom he has gotten children? And if he is to put away one or more of his wives, which one shall it be? Shall it be the first wife?

"Certainly that would not be Christian. Or shall it be the second wife who is the mother of his children and whom he probably married at the request of the first who was childless in order that he might raise seed unto himself? It is not easy on Christian grounds to decide such a problem as this, nor is it very Christian to put a ban upon any woman who, in accordance with their religion and their country's laws, has formed this sacred alliance with a man and has lived with him for years. Nor can it be right to brand with illegitimacy the children born of such a wedlock.

"I would not allow such persons, received into the Christian church, to become officers of the church. But I can not see why there may not be an humble place in the church of God for such and their families."

Whatever may be our personal views as to the propriety of the conduct of the people of Utah, in thus practically overlooking the continuance of polygamous relations where those relations arose out of marriages celebrated before the manifesto of 1890, there can be no doubt that when Reed Smoot, in April, 1900, became an apostle of the Mormon Church, the great majority of the people of the State, non-Mormons as well as Mormons, had practically agreed that it would be unwise to prosecute those who are living in such relations, or to in anywise interfere with them, unless those relations were flagrantly obtruded upon public notice.

Reed Smoot not responsible for polygamy.

The charge of the protestants in this case, in substance, is that Reed Smoot connived at and encouraged, thereby becoming responsible for, the polygamous relations of certain of the officials of the church and of other polygamists. There is no evidence to support this charge except the fact that he acquiesced without protest in what the people of Utah generally accepted as unavoidable. In his answer and in his testimony, on his oath, he has positively denied that he has ever advised any person to violate the law either against polygamy or against polygamous cohabitation.

No witness has been produced who has testified that he ever heard the respondent give any such advice, or in any wise defend such acts. The most anybody has attempted to charge is that he has, like others, both Mormons and non-Mormons, ignored the offense of polygamous cohabitation both in the church and under the laws of the State when such polygamous cohabitation was in consequence of plural marriages solemnized before 1890.

In view of the general situation and the fact that non-Mormons, even the most active opponents of the church, had by common consent adopted the policy of acquiescence as the wisest plan to pursue as to polygamous cohabitation, relying on time and the course of nature to cure the trouble, we do not think such passive acquiescence on the part of Mr. Smoot can be held to amount to such an indorsement and encouragement of polygamous cohabitation as to make him responsible for it.

Polygamous marriages since 1890.

It is further charged that notwithstanding the acts of Congress forbidding them, and in defiance of the manifesto of 1890, polygamous marriages have been celebrated by the authorities of the church since 1890.

We have already shown that since the manifesto forbidding the celebration of plural marriages became the law of the church by being ratified at a semiannual conference of the church, neither the president of the church nor any other officer thereof has the power to celebrate a plural marriage which would be any more binding under the law of the church than it would be under the law of the land.

Evidence relating to such plural marriages since 1890 could, of course, be competent in this case only as it might, with other evidence, tend to show that the respondent has advised such marriages, or in some way connived at or approved them.

On this point there is some evidence tending to show, but not in fact showing, that in the period of over 15 years which has elapsed since the manifesto of 1890 was promulgated there may have been some 15 or 29 cases in which a member of the Mormon Church has cohabited with a woman as his plural wife with whom he sustained no such relation prior to 1890.

In only one instance has the evidence shown the actual performance of the marriage ceremony, and that occurred in Mexico. In that case it appears that a woman named Kennedy, in the year 1896, with her mother, on several occasions appealed to Apostle Teasdale, in Mexico, to marry her to a man who was already married and had a wife living, and that the apostle, whenever appealed to, refused to perform the marriage ceremony on the ground that it was forbidden by the church.

The parties then traveled in a wagon about 75 miles to an out-of-the-way place where, according to the testimony of the woman, Brigham Young, jr., another apostle, did marry her to the man in question. At the time this testimony was given Brigham Young, jr., was dead. No person testified to the ceremony except the woman who was married, and she stated that she did not tell Brigham Young that the man whom she was marrying had a wife living, and that so far as she knew he was not informed of that fact by any person.

There was no evidence offered tending to prove that the respondent had any knowledge of this alleged plural marriage until it came out in the testimony before the committee.

Among the cases of alleged plural marriage since 1890, referred to in the evidence, are those of two of the apostles, John W. Tayler and Mathias F. Cowley.

As to Apostle Taylor, L. E. Abbott gave testimony tending to show that it became public talk in or about 1902 that Tayler had then recently taken two plural wives.

As to Apostle Cowley, the testimony is exceedingly indefinite as to whether he took a plural wife at all since 1890, and if so, when.

The respondent was examined as a witness in his own behalf, after the testimony with reference to the alleged recent plural marriages of these two apostles had been introduced, and on this subject testified that he knew nothing about the alleged marriages until the testimony relating to them was introduced here before the committee. He further said that he would ask that an investigation be made by the church authorities, and if it turned out that the charges were true he would not again vote to sustain them as apostles.

The taking of testimony in this case was closed and the case submitted to the committee after argument by counsel in February, 1905. But at the beginning of the present session, it being made known to the committee that it was desired to introduce further evidence on behalf of the protestants, the case was reopened and further testimony was heard on behalf of both the protestants and the respondent. The testimony was closed the second time on March 27, 1906; but, consulting the convenience of counsel for the protestants, the hearing by the committee of the final arguments of counsel in this case was postponed until April 12, 1906.

On account of these delays, for which neither the respondent nor his counsel are in anywise responsible, the case was not finally submitted to the committee for determination until after the final conference of the Mormon Church, which was held at Salt Lake City on April 6, 1906. At that conference it was made known that Tayler and Cowley had resigned from their positions as apostles in the preceding October, and that the resignations had been accepted. The conference approved this action, and also filled the vacancies thus created by new appointments.

We deem it unnecessary to go at length into the evidence relating to the other alleged plural marriages since 1890, for the reason that there is no evidence whatever in the record which even tends to show, as to any such plural marriage, actual or alleged, that the respondent had any knowledge that it was intended such marriage should be celebrated, or that he ever countenanced it in any way, or that, since it took place, he has at any time or in any way expressed approval of it.

In 1890, when the manifesto was promulgated, there were in the Mormon Church, according to church statistics, in the United States some 2,451 polygamous families. In May, 1902, this number had been reduced to 897. How many are left and how many of them are in Utah it is impossible to say; but probably about 500 would be a fair estimate. Many of the heads of these families are of advanced age. The population of Utah at the present time is about 500,000.

These figures strongly tend to show that, as a matter of fact, new polygamous marriages in Utah, in any considerable numbers, can not have taken place since 1890. In further evidence of this fact, and as showing the state of public sentiment as to polygamous cohabitation, we insert here an extract from the Congressional Record of February 5, 1903, page 1729 et seq., showing a statement made by Senator Dubois, who is well known to have familiar knowledge of this subject:

"Mr. DUBOIS. * * * Various causes operated to cause the Mormons to abandon polygamy. There was a feeling among the younger members of the Mormon Church, and a very strong feeling, that polygamy should be done away with. So here was this pressure within the church against polygamy and the pressure by the Government from outside the church against polygamy.

"In 1891, I think it was, the president of the Mormon Church issued a manifesto declaring that thereafter there should be no polygamous marriages anywhere in the Mormon Church. The Mormons were then called together in one of their great conferences, where they meet by the thousands. This manifesto was issued to them by the first presidency, which is their authority, was submitted to them, and all the Mormon people ratified and agreed to this manifesto, doing away with polygamy thereafter.

"The Senator from Maine (Mr. Hale) will recall that I came here as a Senator from Idaho shortly after that, and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Platt) will recall how bitter and almost intemperate I was in my language before his committee and on the floor of the other House in the denunciation of these practices of the Mormon Church. But after that manifesto was issued, in common with all of the Gentiles of that section who had made this fight, we said:

"'They have admitted the right of our contention and say now, like children who have been unruly, we will obey our parents and those who have a right to guide us; we will do those things no more.' Therefore we could not maintain our position and continue punishing them unless it was afterwards demonstrated that they would not comply with their promise.

people; and to-day the laws on the statute books of Idaho against polygamy and kindred crimes are less stringent than in almost any other State in the Union. I live among those people; and, so far as I know, in Idaho there has not been a polygamous marriage celebrated since that manifesto was issued, and I have yet to find a man in Idaho or anywhere else who will say that a polygamous marriage has been celebrated anywhere since the issuance of that manifesto.

"Mr. HALE. Then it must follow from that, as the years go by and as the older people disappear, polygamy as a practice will be practically removed.

"Mr. DUBOIS. There is no question about it; and I will say to the Senator, owing to the active part which we took in that fierce contest in Idaho, I with others who had made that fight thought we were justified in making this promise to the Mormon people. We had no authority of law, but we took it upon ourselves to assure them that those older men who were living in the polygamous relation, who had growing families which they had reared and were rearing before the manifesto was issued, and at a time when they thought they had a right under the Constitution to enter into polygamous relation—that those older men and women and their children should not be disturbed; that the polygamous man should be allowed to support his numerous wives and their children.

"The polygamous relations, of course, should not continue, but we would not compel a man to turn his families adrift. We promised that the older ones who had contracted those relations before the manifesto was issued would not be persecuted by the Gentile; that time would be given for them to pass away, but that the law would be strenuously enforced against any polygamous marriage which might be contracted in the future."

As further evidence of the same character, we call attention to the testimony of Judge Charles W. Morse, a member of the Methodist Church and one of the judges of the third judicial district of Utah. In May, 1903, by his direction, a special grand jury was convened at Salt Lake City for the purpose of investigating charges that new polygamous marriages were being celebrated. This grand jury was composed of Mormons and non-Mormons. Its report will be found on pages 867 to 870 of volume 3 of the testimony. In their report they say:

"We have investigated thoroughly all such cases brought to our attention by the district attorney and by citizens who have appeared before us, which were reported to have occurred within the jurisdiction of this court, and have not been able to secure evidence that a single case of polygamy has occurred in this district since Utah became a State. The rumors of the commission of this crime seem to have grown out of innocent circumstances, which in ordinary communities would have created no suspicion or scandal, but which here, probably owing to a feature of our territorial history, have been seized upon and the crime assumed without evidence, much to the chagrin and injury of innocent citizens, and greatly to the detriment of our State and its reputation throughout the Nation. Those who prize the fair name of our State and the rights of our neighbors should hereafter be more careful to secure facts and evidence before charging this crime."

Judge McCarty, whose testimony has already been referred to, testified as follows:

"Mr WORTHINGTON. I am coming down to that question next. What is your observation there as to whether, as a matter of fact, the number of people living in polygamy has decreased since 1890 in Utah?

"Mr. MCCARTY. Oh, the change has been phenomenal.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON, Phenomenal?

"Mr. MCCARTY. Yes; phenomenal. There are only a very few. In the little town in which I resided there for over 20 years there were a large number of polygamists. Oh, there must have been in the neighborhood of 20 of them, and I can not call to mind now but three of those old men who are living. They have all died or moved away. Two of them procured divorces, either a church divorce for a plural wife or a divorce in the courts for the legal wife.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. What town is that to which you refer?

"Mr. MCCARTY. That is Monroe.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. So that there polygamy is practically extinct?

"Mr. MCCARTY. Yes; and what can be said of Monroe can be said of most other towns in the State.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Most other towns in the State?

"Mr. MCCARTY. Yes." (Vol. 3, 8 8, 889.)

The Mormon Church and politics.

As to the charge that the Mormon Church interferes in and controls political affairs in Utah, we find the facts established by the evidence to be substantially as follows:

From the time the Mormons reached Utah, in the summer of 1847, until 1891 there were no political parties in that Territory in the sense in which that expression would be used in other parts of the United States. There grew up in the Territory of Utah during that time two parties, one known as the People's Party, which was comprised exclusively of members of the Mormon Church and was controlled by the leaders of that church, and the Liberal Party, which was composed of non-Mormons.

Owing to controversies concerning polygamy and other matters not in issue elsewhere in the United States, these two parties were not only composed, on the one hand of members of a religious sect and on the other hand of those opposing that sect, but the controversy between the two parties was extremely bitter. It seems not to be controverted that until the year 1891 the People's Party was not only dominated by the church, but practically was the church. But after the manifesto of 1890, hereinbefore referred to, which forbade further polygamous marriages, many members both of the Liberal Party and of the People's Party conceived it to be to the interests of the Territory that the people should divide on party lines as they were divided in other parts of the country, and that the Liberal Party and the People's Party should be disbanded.

In the course of a few months this purpose was carried into effect. The great majority of the voters of the Territory of Utah, Mormons and non-Mormons, became either Republicans or Democrats, and political controversies in the Territory till 1896 and after that time in the State have been waged, as a rule, on the lines of the national political parties.

While it is no doubt true that the habit which the church and the members of the church had followed for so many years prior to the breaking up of the old parties of voters receiving counsel from officials of the church in regard to the selection of candidates for office was not at once completely broken off, yet the evidence further establishes that the improvement in this regard has been very rapid and that of late years the Mormon voters of the State adhere more closely to party lines than the non-Mormons do. We think the evidence establishes the fact that since Reed Smoot became an apostle of the Mormon Church on the 6th day of April, 1900, the Mormon Church has not controlled or attempted to control elections in Utah.

It is claimed, however, that the church, by an instrument called the "Political Rule," has required of its members holding office in the church that before they shall become candidates for any political position they shall receive the consent of the church authorities; and that by this device the church has controlled the election of Senators of the United States.

This political rule will be found on pages 168 to 171, Volume I, of the printed report of the testimony before the committee. The meaning and effect of this instrument were very fully considered in the case of Moses Thatcher, who in 1896 was a candidate before the legislature of the State of Utah for election as Senator of the United States. Thatcher, at the time, was one of the twelve apostles of the church, and he did not seek or obtain the consent of the church authorities to this candidacy. For this offense he was tried before a high church tribunal. The decision of this tribunal, the acceptance thereof by Moses Thatcher, and the acquiescence by the church authorities in the terms upon which he accepted the conclusion of the tribunal, will be found upon pages 563 to 573 of the same volume. Mr. Thatcher was a witness before the committee, and his testimony on this subject will be found on pages 1038 to 1040 of that volume.

The upshot of it all is that the political rule, as construed by these proceedings, left Thatcher, to use his own words, absolutely free as an American citizen, to exercise his rights as such, and left all the officers of the church absolutely free. In his acceptance of the decision of the council Thatcher expressly stipulated that in accepting it he violated none of the engagements theretofore entered into by him, "under the requirements of party pledges respecting the political independence of the citizen who remains untrammeled, as contemplated in the guaranties of the State constitution."

Indeed, in the political rule itself, it is expressly stated that if any officer of the church wishes to become a candidate for a political office, or to enter into any other engagement which will interfere with the duties of his church office, he may do so without soliciting or obtaining the consent of the church or its authorities by resigning his ecclesiastical position. The whole purport and effect of the rule seems to be that high church officials, filling positions which require them to give their time to their ecclesiastical duties, shall not enter into any engagements of any kind, political or otherwise, which require them to abandon or neglect such ecclesiastical duties, without first obtaining the consent of the authorities of the church.

Thus construed, the rule seems to be a reasonable one; but whether reasonable or unreasonable it does not seem to us that it is within the province of the General Government to interfere with it or punish in any way the members of the church because of its promulgation.

The evidence in the case clearly establishes that Mr. Smoot, for some time before he became a candidate for the Senate and even before he became an apostle, was one of the leaders of the Republican Party in the State of Utah; that he had been frequently spoken of either as a candidate for the governorship of the State or the Senate of the United States; that when he became a candidate for the Senate he was, in the words of some of the witnesses, the logical candidate for that office, and that he was elected by the votes of the Republicans in the legislature, Mormons and non-Mormons, and was opposed by the Democrats in that body, Mormons and non-Mormons. He says, in his testimony, that before formally becoming a candidate he went to the first president of the church and obtained the consent of the church to his becoming a candidate.

As already intimated, if that consent had been refused, it meant no more than if he became a Senator he must give up his apostleship.

There has been no evidence offered tending to show that any member of the Mormon Church has ever asked consent to become a candidate for any office and been refused.

The endowment oath.

The only other charge made against the respondent which, in our opinion, merits attention was made in the protest signed by John L. Leilich, as follows:

"That the oath of office required of and taken by the said Reed Smoot as an apostle of the said church is of such a nature and character that he is thereby disqualified from taking the oath of office required of a United States Senator." (1; 28.)

This same charge was in effect made in the protest signed by W. M. Paden and 17 others in the following clause as a deduction from previous statements, rather than a specific charge in itself:

"We submit that however formal and regular may be Apostle Smoot's credentials or his qualifications by way of citizenship, whatever his protestations of patriotism and loyalty, it is clear that the obligations of any official oath which he may subscribe are and of necessity must be as threads of tow compared with the covenants which bind his intellect, his will, and his affections, and which hold him forever in accord with and subject to the will of a defiant and lawbreaking apostolate." (1; 25.)

In the sworn answer made by the respondent to these charges on this subject he says:

"As to the charge that the respondent is bound by some oath or obligation controlling his duty and his oath as a Senator, the respondent says that he has never taken any such oath or in any way assumed any such obligations. He holds himself bound to obey and uphold the Constitution and laws of the United States, including the condition in reference to polygamy upon which the State of Utah was admitted into the Union." (1; 31.)

During the examination of the first witness called by the protestants, Joseph F. Smith, a discussion arose in which Senator Hoar stated that he understood that the committee had reached a conclusion that there were two issues in the case—one whether Reed Smoot had practiced polygamy, which the Senator understood had been abandoned, and that the only other one was whether or not as an official of the Mormon Church the respondent took an oath or obligation that was superior, in his estimation and in its requirements upon him, to the oath or obligation which he must take to qualify him as a Senator.

Thereupon Senator Dubois stated that both these contentions were set aside entirely and that it was not contended that they would be attempted to be proved by the attorneys representing the protestants. (1; 114.) In the course of further discussion a member of the committee having stated that he never knew until Mr. Tayler had stated it that he had abandoned the idea of proving that the respondent had taken an obligation that interfered with the obligations of his oath, Mr. Tayler replied:

"I can not abandon that which I never occupied or possessed."

Senator Dubois added, "He never alleged it." (1; 115.)

On a subsequent day, Senator Beveridge, in order, as he stated, to correct what he thought was a mistake in the popular mind as to what were the charges against the respondent which the committee was considering, said that it had been charged that the respondent was a polygamist, which charge had been withdrawn, and that he had been charged with taking an oath inconsistent with his duty as a Senator, which Senator Beveridge understood Mr. Tayler to say was not a charge that had been withdrawn but was such a charge as had never been made, and that, therefore, the issue upon which the committee would proceed from that time on, so far as the protestants were concerned, was whether the respondent was a member of a conspiracy.

Thereupon Senator Dubois again stated that no charge had been made against Mr. Smoot of taking an oath inconsistent with his oath as Senator except the Leilich charge, which had been abandoned and repudiated, and that the attorneys for the respondent "have been trying to force the protestants to issues which they themselves have never raised." (Vol. 1, p. 126.)

This was the state of the record when the testimony of Joseph F. Smith and several other witnesses had been taken, and the examination of Francis M. Lyman, one of the apostles, was progressing.

He was asked by the chairman to state what the "ceremony is in going through the endowment house." This being objected to by the counsel for respondent, the chairman said:

"One of the charges is that Mr. Smoot has taken an oath or obligation incompatible with his obligation as a Senator. The object of this question is to ascertain from this witness, who went through the endowment house—of course, I know nothing about it—whether any such obligation is taken."

Counsel for the respondent having thereupon stated that they understood that that charge had been expressly disclaimed by counsel for the protestants, the chairman replied:

"Counsel stated that they did not propose, as far as they were concerned, to offer any proof upon that question, but the chair did not understand that therefore the committee was precluded from showing it." (1; 436.)

A little later in the same session, Mr. Tayler, counsel for the protestants, again stated:

"It is in respect of those two things around which all of this case gathers—polygamy and the direction of the people by the apostolate—and if those two were eliminated this hearing would not be going on here." (1; 463.)

After the chairman of the committee had ruled as above stated that the witness Lyman was required to answer the question his examination on this subject proceeded as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. Will you please state what the ceremony is in going through the endowment house?

"Mr. LYMAN. I could not do so.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that, Mr. Chairman, on the ground that it is inquiring into a matter prior to 1890, and I understood, or we were informed, that the committee had decided that would not be done.

"The CHAIRMAN. One of the charges is that Mr. Smoot has taken an oath or obligation incompatible with his obligation as a Senator. The object of this question is to ascertain from this witness, who went through the endowment house—of course I know nothing about it—whether any such obligation is taken.

"Mr LYMAN. Is that the question you asked me, Mr. Chairman?

"The CHAIRMAN. No; that was not my question. It was a statement to counsel.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. I had understood, Mr. Chairman, that that was expressly disclaimed by counsel here the other day.

"The CHAIRMAN. Counsel stated that they did not propose, as far as they were concerned, to offer any proof upon that question; but the chairman did not understand that therefore the committee was precluded from showing it. Is there any objection to the question?

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do object to it for the reasons already stated; and, further, because it does not follow at all that because the witness went through certain ceremonies or took certain obligations, if you please, Senator Smoot took them.

"The CHAIRMAN. That would not follow of itself. If nothing further than this can be shown, of course it will have no bearing upon Mr. Smoot at all. Read the question, Mr. Reporter.

"The reporter read as follows:

" 'The CHAIRMAN. Will you please state what the ceremony is in going through the endowment house?'

" 'Mr. LYMAN. I could not do so.'

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do insist upon my objection. I understood the chair to ask me whether I had any further objection.

"The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is permissible; and, as the Chair stated, if nothing appears beyond this to connect Mr. Smoot with it, of course it will have no bearing upon the case. Can you state what that ceremony was?

"Mr. LYMAN. I could not, Mr. Chairman; I could not do so if it was to save my life.

"The CHAIRMAN. You could not?

"Mr. LYMAN. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Can you state any portion of it?

"Mr. LYMAN. I might approximate something of it that I remember.

"The CHAIRMAN. As nearly as you can.

"Mr. LYMAN. I remember that I agreed to be an upright and moral man, pure in my life. I agreed to refrain from sexual commerce with any woman except my wife or wives, as were given to me in the priesthood. The law of purity I subscribed to willingly, of my own choice, and to be true and good to all men. I took no oath nor obligation against any person or any country or government or kingdom or anything of that kind. I remember that distinctly.

"The CHAIRMAN. Of course the charge is made, and I want to know the facts. You would know about it, having gone through the endowment house?

"Mr. LYMAN. Yes.

"The CHAIRMAN. There was nothing of that kind?

"Mr. LYMAN. Nothing of that kind.

"The CHAIRMAN. No obligation or oath?

"Mr. LYMAN. Not at all; no, sir." (1; 436, 437.)

After this had occurred, Joseph F. Smith was recalled, and on this subject was further examined by counsel for the respondent, as follows:

"Mr. TAYLER. I wish to ask two questions. Mr. Smith, something has been said about an endowment oath. I do not want to go into that subject or to inquire of you what it is, but whatever oath or obligation has been taken by those who have been admitted to the church, at whatever stage it is taken, is the same now that it has been for years?

"Mr. SMITH. It is the same that it has always been.

"Mr. TAYLER. It is the same that it has always been?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes; so far as I know.

"Mr. TAYLER. No other oath is taken now than heretofore?

"Mr. SMITH. I should like to say that there is no oath taken; that we abjure oaths. We do not take oaths unless we are forced to take them.

"Mr. TAYLER. I unerstand. You understand what I mean—any obligation——

"Mr. SMITH. Covenant or agreement—we do that.

"Mr. TAYLER. Any obligation of loyalty to the church such as would be proper to be taken?

"Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

"Mr. TAYLER. That is the same now that it has always been?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; that it has always been, so far as I know. I can only say that they are the same as they were revealed to me.

"Mr. TAYLER. Exactly.

"Mr. SMITH. And as they were taught to me.

"Mr. TAYLER. You have known them for 40 years or more?

"Mr. SMITH. I have been more or less acquainted with them for a great many years." (1; 484.)

It will be seen that neither the witness Lyman nor the witness Joseph F. Smith declined to answer any question that was put to him with regard to this alleged covenant or obligation.

The next witness on the subject (who, like the two preceding witnesses, was summoned and examined on behalf of the protestants), was Brigham H. Roberts. After counsel for the protestants had examined this witness and announced that they had no further questions to ask him, the following occurred:

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Roberts, there is another subject upon which I want to ask you a question. It has been stated here that the endowment house was taken down in 1890.

"Mr. ROBERTS. I think earlier than that.

"The CHAIRMAN. Well, at some time it was taken down?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Yes.

"The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever go through the endowment house?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. When?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I think it was in 1877.

"The CHAIRMAN. Have you been present at times when others have passed through the endowment house?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Frequently?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Is the ceremony that used to be performed in what was called the endowment house performed now?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I think so.

"The CHAIRMAN. Where?

"Mr. ROBERTS. When?

"The CHAIRMAN. Where, I say?

"Mr. ROBERTS. In the temples, as I understand it.

"The CHAIRMAN. How many temples are there in Utah?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I believe there are four.

"The CHAIRMAN. And the ceremony that used to be performed in the endowment house is now performed in the temple?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. He says he thinks it is. He does not know.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember the ceremony?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir; I do not remember the ceremonies distinctly.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember any portion of it?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Only in a general way, Senator.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you know, Mr. Roberts, of any change in the ceremony performed in the endowment house and as it is performed to-day in the temple?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. The ceremony is the same. Now, will you state to the committee what that ceremony was, or is, as nearly as you can?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Well, the ceremonies consist of what would be considered a series of ceremonies, I take it, of which I only have a general impression.

"The CHAIRMAN. You have something more than a general impression in your own case?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No; I think not.

"The CHAIRMAN. How many days did it take you to go through the Endowment House?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Well, part of one day.

"The CHAIRMAN. Who were present at the time? Do you remember?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I do not remember.

"The CHAIRMAN. Can you tell the committee any portion of that ceremony?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Why not?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Well, for one reason, I do not feel at liberty to do so.

"The CHAIRMAN. Why not?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Because I consider myself in trust in relation to those matters, and I do not feel at liberty to make any disclosures in relation to them.

"The CHAIRMAN. It was, then, a secret?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Yes.

"The CHAIRMAN. Does this religious denomination have, as one of its ceremonies, secret obligations or covenants?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I think they could not be properly called secrets. Of course, they are common to all worthy members of the church, and generally known by them.

"The CHAIRMAN. Well, secret from the world?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Secret from the world.

"The CHAIRMAN. The obligations and covenants, whatever they are, then, you are not at liberty to disclose?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir; I would be led to regard those obligations as similar to those who perhaps have passed through Masonic fraternities, or are members of Masonic fraternities.

"The CHAIRMAN. Then, your church organization in that particular is a sort of Masonic fraternity?

"Mr. ROBERTS. It is analogous, perhaps, in some of its features.

"The CHAIRMAN. You say you can remember, of course, what occurred, but you do not feel at liberty to disclose it, and for that reason you will not disclose it?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Not specifically. I do not wish, however, Senator, to be understood as being in any sense defiant in that matter.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is not so understood, Mr. Roberts, at all.

"Mr. ROBERTS. I do not wish to put myself in opposition or raise any issue here at all.

"The CHAIRMAN. The reason you have assigned is accepted. The obligation, whatever it is, taken in the Endowment House, is such that you do not feel at liberty to disclose it?

"Mr. ROBERTS. That is right.

"The CHAIRMAN. Should you do so, what would you expect as the result?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I would expect to lose caste with my people as betraying a trust.

"Senator OVERMAN. Do all members of the church have to go through that?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Not all members.

"Senator OVERMAN. What proportion of them, and how is it regulated?

"Mr. ROBERTS. It is governed chiefly by worthiness—moral worthiness.

"Senator BAILEY. And is it somewhat a matter of degrees, as it is in Masonry? I believe they have several degrees.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you recall whether any penalty was imposed upon a person who should disclose the covenants?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. You do not remember?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Beyond the disfavor and distrust of his fellows.

"The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever been present at a marriage ceremony in the temple?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Could you tell what that is?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I could not, only in a general way. The ceremony is of some length. I remember performing the ceremony in the case of my own daughter when she was married, and, not being familiar with the ceremony, a copy of it was placed in my hands, and I read the ceremony, but I could only remember the general terms of it.

"The CHAIRMAN. If the members who have gone through the Endowment House, then, keep faith with the church they will not disclose what occurred?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir.

"Senator BAILEY. Do you feel at liberty, Mr. Roberts, to say whether or not there is anything in that ceremony that permits a man—I will adopt a different expression—that abridges a man's freedom of political action or action in any respect, except in a religious way?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir.

"Senator BAILEY. I do not quite understand whether you mean by your answer to say that you do not feel free to answer that or that there is nothing.

"Mr. ROBERTS. I mean to say that there is nothing. (1; 740, 742.) * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask Mr. Roberts one further question. What is there in these obligations—I will not use the term 'oaths'—that makes it necessary to keep them from the world?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I do not know of anything especially, except it be their general sacredness.

"The CHAIRMAN. Their general sacredness? Ought sacred things to be kept from the world?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I think some sacred things ought to be.

"The CHAIRMAN. Could you name one sacred thing in connection with this ceremony that should be kept from the world?

"Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Why? Because you can not remember?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Well, I could not say that. I would not say that, Senator.

"The CHAIRMAN. You do remember it, then—the sacred thing that you mean?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Some sacred things I do.

"The CHAIRMAN. But you can not state to the committee what they are?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I ask to be excused from stating them.

"The CHAIRMAN. But I can not understand exactly how the church organization has things that the world must not know of. I did not know but you could give some reason why.

"Mr. ROBERTS. I do not think I could throw any light upon that subject.

"The CHAIRMAN. All right; I will not press it. (1–743.)

* * * * * * *

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would like to ask, Mr. Roberts, whether this obligation or ceremony to which you refer in the Endowment House relates entirely to things spiritual or whether it relates to things temporal also?

"The CHAIRMAN. Would it not be better, Mr. Worthington, to let him state what the obligation is?

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, so far as I am concerned, I would very much prefer it, but I understand the suggestion by Senator Pettus was that he was interpreting that which he would state.

"Of course I do not know anything more about this than the members of the committee do, but I think it might very well be that a witness might be allowed to state, and might properly say, that he would answer here as to anything that related to any temporal affairs; but as to things which related to matters between him and his God, or which he conceived to be between him and his God, he would not answer here or anywhere else, and that would not be an interpretation, but would simply be taking the protection which I understand the law gives to every man—that as to things which do relate entirely to religious matters they are matters which he has a right to keep within his own breast.

"The CHAIRMAN. Your question was whether these obligations related to spiritual affairs or temporal affairs.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes; that was my question.

"The CHAIRMAN. The trouble is he interprets a thing which is unknown and unseeable to us, and which he considers spiritual.

"Mr. CARLISLE. What he considers spiritual we might consider temporal, if the matter itself was disclosed.

"The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me that the witness having refused to state what the ceremony is, or what the obligations demand, ought not to be questioned and permitted to state what he thinks it did not convey, or what obligation it imposed, or what it did not impose. The committee can judge of that.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Of course, we are here not representing the witness, but representing only Senator Smoot.

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. And it is the witness pleading a privilege and making the refusal, and not Senator Smoot or his counsel. We would like to have this question answered.

"The CHAIRMAN. What is the question?

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. The question is whether this obligation refers to things spiritual or things temporal.

"Senator BAILEY. I do not think it makes any difference to the committee in the end, or will affect its conclusions, whether that is answered or not. I am partly responsible for that line of questions, and I asked the first question myself because I really intended to insist, if it related in any way to the duties of a citizen, that the committee was entitled to know what that was, and if it did not, then I had no further interest in it.

"The CHAIRMAN. Let the witness answer that question.

"Mr. ROBERTS. May I have the question read?

"The CHAIRMAN. Certainly."

The reporter read as follows:

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would like to ask Mr. Roberts, whether this obligation or ceremony to which you refer in the endowment house relates entirely to things spiritual or whether it relates to things temporal also?

"Mr. ROBERTS. I regard them as relating to things spiritual, absolutely.

"Mr. TAYLER. If we were in a court of justice, and insisted upon it, I think that opens the door so wide that the whole oath would come in.

"The CHAIRMAN. I think so, too.

"Mr. TAYLER. But I do not care to do it." (1; 745, 746.)

The next witness called on behalf of the protestants was A. M. Cannon. After his examination by counsel for the protestants was concluded he was further examined by the chairman of the committee on this subject, and his testimony was as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember the covenant you took when you went through the endowment house?

"Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

"The CHAIRMAN. Could you state the ceremony?

"Mr. CANNON. I would not like to.

"The CHAIRMAN. Why not?

"Mr. CANNON. Because it is of a religious character, and it is simply an obligation that I enter into to be pure before my Maker and worthy of the attainment of my Redeemer and the fellowship and love of my children and their mothers, my departed ancestry, and my coming descendants.

"The CHAIRMAN. What objection is there to making that public?

"Mr. CANNON. Because it is sacred.

"The CHAIRMAN. How sacred?

"Mr. CANNON. It is simply a covenant that I enter into with my Maker in private.

The CHAIRMAN. All the tenets of your religion are sacred, are they not?

"Mr. CANNON. Sir?

"The CHAIRMAN. They are all sacred, are they not—the teachings?

"Mr. CANNON. All of those are sacred; yes, all of those things.

"The CHAIRMAN. I do not quite understand why you should keep them secret.

"Mr. CANNON. It is because it is necessary to keep them secret. If you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, we admit only the purest of our people to enter there.

"The CHAIRMAN. People like you and the president of the church? I suppose the president of the church is admitted?

"Mr. CANNON. The presidency of the church, if he continues in good standing, and our people whoever are in good standing and deemed worthy of the proper recommends are permitted to enter there.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you enter into any obligation not to reveal these ceremonies?

"Mr. CANNON. I feel it would be very improper to reveal them.

"The CHAIRMAN. I say, do you enter into any obligation not to?

"Mr. CANNON. There are sacred obligations connected with all the higher ordinances of the church.

"The CHAIRMAN. In words, do you promise not to reveal?

"Mr. CANNON. I feel that that is the trust reposed in me, that I will not go and——

"The CHAIRMAN. I think you do not understand my question. Do you promise specifically not to reveal what occurs in the endowment house?

"Mr. CANNON. I would rather not tell what occurs there. I say this——

"The CHAIRMAN. I think, Mr. Cannon, you do not understand me. Do you promise not to reveal what occurs in the endowment house when you go through?

"Mr. CANNON. I feel that that is an obligation I take upon me when I do that.

"The CHAIRMAN. When you go through the endowment house do you take that obligation upon you in express terms?

"Mr. CANNON. I think I do.

"The CHAIRMAN. You know, do you not, whether you do or not? Why do you take that obligation not to reveal these things?

"Mr. CANNON. Because we are—I do not want to be disrespectful to this committee.

"The CHAIRMAN. I know you would not be.

"Mr. CANNON. The Lord gave us to understand that we should not make common the sacred things that He committed to His disciples. He told them they must not do that lest they trample them under their feet and rend them.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember whether there was any penalty attached if they should reveal?

"Mr. CANNON. I do not remember that there is any penalty.

"The CHAIRMAN. None whatever?

"Mr. CANNON. I do not remember.

"The CHAIRMAN. Has there been any change in the ceremony of the endowment house since you went through, in 1859, up to the present time, that you are aware of?

"Mr. CANNON. No.

"The CHAIRMAN. No change in the ceremony or obligations?

"Mr. CANNON. No." (1; 791, 792.)

The next witness called by the protestant, was Moses Thatcher. After counsel for the protestants had finished their examination of Mr. Thatcher, the following occurred:

"The CHAIRMAN. One other question: The endowment house, I believe, has been taken down?

"Mr. THATCHER. That is as I understand it. It has been taken down.

"The CHAIRMAN. Has the ceremony of the endowment house been wiped out also, or is that performed now?

"Mr. THATCHER. I am just trying to think whether I have been through the temple, in the light in which I went through the endowment house, to give you a correct answer on that, but my impressions are that the ceremony has not been changed.

"The CHAIRMAN. You have seen the ceremony in the temple? You have witnessed it?

"Mr. THATCHER. I think I have heard it.

"The CHAIRMAN. And you think there is no change in it?

"Mr. THATCHER. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. When did you go through the endowment house?

"Mr. THATCHER. My impressions are when I married the wife of my youth—in 1861.

"The CHAIRMAN. Will you state to the committee the ceremony in the endowment house? I do not mean the ceremony of marriage; but did you go through the endowment house when you became an apostle?

"Mr. THATCHER. No, sir; it was not necessary.

"The CHAIRMAN. You have been through the endowment house, then, but once?

"Mr. THATCHER. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Will you state to the committee the ceremony of the endowment house?

"Mr. THATCHER. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I might be excused on that.

"The CHAIRMAN. Why?

"Mr. THATCHER. For the reason that those were held to be sacred matters and only pertaining to religious vows.

"The CHAIRMAN. Are you obligated not to reveal them?

"Mr. THATCHER. Yes; I think I am.

"The CHAIRMAN. What would be the effect if you should disclose them? That is, is there any penalty attached?

"Mr. THATCHER. There would be no effect except upon my own conscience.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is all?

"Mr. THATCHER. That is all.

"The CHAIRMAN. But you are under obligation as a part of the ceremony not to reveal it?

"Mr. THATCHER. Yes, sir; I feel myself under such obligation." (1; 1048, 1049.)

This was all the testimony on the subject of the alleged oath or obligation taken during the sessions of the committee held in the spring of 1904. The last session when testimony was taken during that spring occurred on the 2d of May, 1904. When the taking of testimony was resumed in December, 1904, counsel for the protestants produced and examined certain witnesses on this subject, the substance of whose testimony will now be stated.

J. H. Wallis, sr., who had been a Mormon but who had formally notified the bishop of his ward, seven or eight months before he was examined, that he no longer considered himself a member of the church, testified that on several occasions he had taken his endowments in the temple at Salt Lake City. When first examined he said that he did not know whether he had it exactly right; but that the substance of the so-called "oath of vengeance" is that those who took it promised and vowed that they "will never cease to importune high Heaven to avenge the blood of the prophets on the nations of the earth or the inhabitants of the earth." He added that if his memory served him, he thought that was about right, and that a passage of scripture is quoted from the Revelations, sixth chapter, ninth verse. (2; 79.)

The next day Mr. Wallace was recalled and testified that in repeating the obligation he had made a mistake; and that he should have said "upon this nation" instead of "upon the inhabitants of the earth." (2; 148.)

Two witnesses were called on behalf of the respondent to impeach Wallis. One of them, Moroni Gillespie, who had been a member of the police force in Salt Lake City for 11 or 12 years, testified that he knew Wallis's general reputation for truth and veracity in the community in which he lived; that it was bad; and that he would not believe him under oath. Wallis had testified that he had never been arrested.

This witness testified that he was present in the police court on one occasion when Wallis was under arrest and plead guilty to the charge of drunkenness. Gillespie further testified that he had known Wallis for several years and that, in his opinion, he was not altogether of sound mind. (3; 317, 318.)

The other witness as to the veracity of Wallis was William Langton. (2; 1022; 3; 143, 144.) Neither his testimony nor that of Gillespie was contradicted or impaired in any way. His conclusion, from what he had seen of Wallis, was that the man was crazy. He further testified that, in his opinion, Wallis's general reputation for truth and veracity was such that he would not believe him on oath.

When Langton was asked by counsel for the respondent to give his reasons for thinking that Wallis was of unsound mind, objection was made by the counsel for the protestants and the objection was sustained. (3; 144.) But subsequently he was recalled and allowed to give his reasons, which he did at length. (3; 445.)

August W. Lundstrom, another witness for the protestants, testified that he had taken the endowment six times, and that the obligation in question was:

"We and each of us solemnly promise and covenant that we shall ask God to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith upon this nation." (2; 151–153.)

He subsequently slightly varies this statement by saying that the prayer was: "We ask God, the Eternal Father, to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith upon this nation." (2; 161.)

Three witnesses were called on behalf of the respondent to impeach Lundstrom. One of them, F. S. Fernstrom, testified that he had known Lundstrom for about 14 years, and Lundstrom's general reputation for truth in the community in which he lived was bad, and that he, witness, would not believe him under oath. On cross-examination by counsel for the protestants the fact was brought out that Lumdstrom had borrowed from his bishop part of a fund which the bishop had collected for the support of the poor, and that when asked by the bishop to return the money, Lundstrom refused to do it, saying that the church owed him a living (2; 1012.)

One of these witnesses, C. V. Anderson, testified that he knew Lundstrom's general reputation for veracity in Salt Lake City, where he lived; that it was bad; and that the witness did not think he would believe Lundstrom on oath. (2; 1013.)

J. H. Hayward was the third witness on this subject. He testified that he had known Lundstrom for many years, the latter having been at one time in his employ; that he knew Lundstrom's general reputation for truth and veracity in Salt Lake City, where he lived; that it was bad; and that from his reputation the witness would not believe him under oath.

This evidence as to Lundstrom's reputation for truth and veracity was not rebutted in any way.

The third and last witness called by the protestants, during the sessions of the committee held in December, 1904, on this subject of the alleged obligation was Mrs.

Annie Elliott, who testified that she had taken the endowments several times, and that during the ceremony "they told me to pray and never cease to pray to get revenge for the blood of the prophets on this nation, and also teach it to my children and children's children." (2; 189.)

On cross-examination this witness stated positively that she had never told anybody about this obligation; and that if Mr. Tayler was examining her from a memorandum informing him what her testimony would be she did not know where it came from or how Mr. Tayler came to get it. (2; 194.) On her direct examination Mrs. Elliott stated that she was married in Denmark and that her husband followed her to this country. Her examination by counsel for the protestants then proceeded as follows:

"Mr. TAYLER. Is he living now—that is, the husband whom you married in Denmark.

"Mrs. ELLIOTT. No, sir.

"Mr. TAYLER. You lived with him until he died, did you?

"Mrs. ELLIOTT. Yes, sir.

"Mr. TAYLER. Where did he die?

"Mrs. ELLIOTT. Why, in Elsinore.

"Mr. TAYLER. In Utah?

"Mrs. ELLIOTT. Yes, sir.

"Mr. TAYLER. When?

"Mrs. ELLIOTT. In 1897.

"Mr. TAYLER. Did you, after his death, marry?

"Mrs. ELLIOTT. Yes, sir; I married in 1899." (2; 184.)

On her cross-examination, after she had testified that she had left the church in 1897, the following occurred:

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Was it before or after the death of your first husband?

"Mrs. ELLIOTT. Why, it was after.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. What time in 1897 did he die?

"Mrs. ELLIOTT. He died in October." (2; 191.)

The value of the testimony of this witness may be judged by the fact that the husband who followed her to this country not only did not die in October, 1897, but was living at the time Mrs. Elliott gave the testimony in question; and was subsequently called as a witness on behalf of the respondent. (2; 1015.) He testified that she had obtained a divorce from him about six years before he gave his testimony, which was in January, 1905. His testimony showed clearly that she knew he was living when she said he was dead.

On behalf of the respondent a number of witnesses were examined on this subject. and the substance of their testimony is as follows:

Hugh M. Dougall, who is a farmer and cattle grower, and is postmaster at the town of Springville, in Utah, was expelled from the Mormon Church about 1874, and since then has not been in any way connected with it. He took his endowments when he was about 25 years old.

He testified that according to his recollection the obligation was, in substance, that those who took it importuned heaven to avenge the blood of the prophets and the martyrs on this generation, and that he did not remember the name of Joseph Smith being mentioned at all. (2; 759.)

Mr. Dougall was subsequently recalled, and asked by Senator Knox this question:

"Are you willing to say whether the vow obligated you to anything incompatible with your giving full and supreme allegiance to the United States or the State of Utah, or which obligated you to anything incompatible with your fully performing your duty as a citizen of the United States and that State?"

He answered: "Not one thing." (2; 781.)

Alonzo A. Noon left the Mormon Church voluntarily about 1870, when he was 32 years of age, having taken his endowments when he was 28 or 30 years old. He stated that there was nothing in the ceremony about promising or vowing to importune heaven to avenge the blood of the prophets on this nation, and that there was nothing in the ceremony which in any way imported hostility to the United States or to the Government thereof. That he was perfectly clear about that.

He also said he did not remember that the name of Joseph Smith was used in the ceremony. He did recollect that there was in the ceremony a quotation from the Scriptures, and upon hearing read verses 9 and 10, chapter 6, of the Revelations, he said that it was something like that; that that was about the intent.

One of these verses, it will be remembered, was referred to by the witness Wallis.

The two verses are as follows:

"Nine. And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held.

"Ten. And they cried with a loud voice saying: How long, Oh Lord, holy and true, dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth." (774.)

Being asked whether there was anything in the obligation which indicated hostility to the Government, Mr. Noon said:

"The very reverse. I have never heard any people taught only loyalty to the Government of the United States." (2; 775.)

Mr. Noon was recalled and asked the same question that had been propounded by Senator Knox to Mr. Dougall, and he answered the question in the same way. (2; 781.)

William Hatfield, who was a Mormon until he was 23 years of age, after which he drifted away from that church, when he was not quite 21 years of age took his endowments as a preliminary to his marriage. (2; 785.)

He said that neither he nor any others in his hearing took the obligation which Wallis had testified to, and that he did not at that time take any obligation or enter into any covenant, vow, or agreement of any kind inconsistent with his duties as a citizen of the Territory of Utah or of the United States. He was not cross-examined. (2; 796.)

John P. Meakin, who was a Mormon until he was 23 or 24 years of age, left the church because he did not believe in polygamy. (2; 796.)

He went through the Endowment House when he was 18 years old. He stated that he had no recollection at all of any obligation of vengeance or retribution, and that nothing took place at the time with reference to promising or vowing to importune heaven to avenge the blood of the prophets on this nation, or to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith on anybody; that there was nothing took place which imported any obligation in opposition to his duty as a citizen either of the Territory of Utah or of the United States; that he was very clear about this. (799.)

He also said that there was nothing in the endowment ceremony about praying the Almighty to avenge the blood of the prophets on this generation. (2; 801.)

Elias A. Smith, cashier of the Deseret Savings Bank, in Salt Lake City, in answer to a question by the chairman, stated that he had conscientious scruples against divulging any part of the endowment ceremony (2; 854); but in answer to a question by Senator Foraker he said there was nothing in any obligation of the church which it imposed upon its members, in connection with marriage or at any other occasion, inconsistent with fidelity as citizens of the National Government or to the State Government. Mr. Smith persisted that while he had stated what was not in the obligation he did not feel at liberty to state what was in it. (2; 855).

Richard W. Young, who was a graduate of West Point and of the law school of Columbia College, New York City, and who had served in the Volunteer Army in the Spanish war, in the Philippines, and elsewhere, is a member of the Mormon Church, and is not a polygamist. (2; 950–952.) He was asked by the chairman if he had any objection to disclosing what took place during the endowment ceremony, and he replied that he considered himself under an obligation not to do so. (2; 969.)

He was asked later by counsel for the respondent if he had any objection to stating whether the ceremony included, in any form or shape, any invocation of vengeance or retribution against this nation. Senator McComas suggested that the witness should state the whole ceremony or nothing. Thereupon an extended argument was made, at the end of which the witness was asked by counsel for the respondent:

"In that ceremony is there anything which relates to your duties or obligations to your Government or to this nation?"

The chairman ruled that if the witness should answer this question he would be required to state the whole ceremony, and thereupon the witness declined to answer it. (2; 981–985.)

Reed Smoot testified positively that there is nothing in the endowment ceremony about avenging the blood of the prophets or avenging anything else on this nation or on this Government. (3; 183, 184.)

As already stated, the case was reopened during the present session of Congress for the purpose of allowing the introduction of further testimony on behalf of the protestants, and four additional witnesses were roduced with preference to the matter of the alleged obligation. No further testimony on the subject was taken on behalf of the respondent.

The four witnesses referred to were W. J. Thomas, J. P. Holmgren, H. W. Lawrence, and W. M. Wolfe.

The witness Thomas testified that he passed the endowment house in 1869. His examination on this subject was as follows:

"Mr. CARLISLE. I have asked you about whether any ceremonies took place before the oath or obligation took place? If so, state what it was.

"Mr. THOMAS. There were washings and anointings there.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Describe to the committee what you mean by anointing. Was your whole body anointed or your arm anointed; and, if so, was anything said when that was done?

"Mr. THOMAS. My head was anointed and my right arm. I do not remember anything else.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Was anything said by the person who conducted these ceremonies at the time he anointed your right arm? Were you told what it was for?

"Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir; he spoke very quick and I couldn't catch it all, but I remember when he anointed my arm to make it strong, and the substance of it was that I would avenge the blood of the prophets—prophet or prophets. I believe it was the plural. (4; 69.)

* * * * * * *

"Senator KNOX. You took this vow in what year?

"Mr. THOMAS. In 1869.

"Senator KNOX. How long did you remain in the church after that?

"Mr. THOMAS. I remained in the church up until 1880.

"Senator KNOX. That was eleven years; and you vowed to avenge the blood of the martyrs upon this nation, did you?

"Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

"Senator KNOX. And your right arm was anointed to give you strength that you might do so. Is that correct?

"Mr. THOMAS. That is the way I understood it.

Senator KNOX. What did you ever do in the line of keeping that vow? Did you ever avenge the blood of the martyrs upon this nation?

"Mr. THOMAS. No, sir. I have enlisted twice to try and defend the nation.

"Senator KNOX. Were you ever stirred up by the authorities of the church to get busy in that direction of avenging the blood of the martyrs upon this nation?

"Mr. THOMAS. No.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Do you know of any member of the church who did do anything in the way of using his right arm to avenge the blood of the prophets on this nation?

"Mr. THOMAS. No, sir." (4; 71, 72.)

The witness Holmgren on this subject testified that he passed through the endowment house in 1889. His further examination on this subject is as follows:

"Mr. CARLISLE. Do you remember the ceremonies that took place at that time?

"Mr. HOLMGREN. Part of it.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Are you willing to state the oath that was taken, or not? If you are not, I shall not press you.

"Mr. HOLMGREN. What I understood and heard of it—sure.

"Mr. CARLISLE. In the first place, what occurred?

"Mr. HOLMGREN. In the endowment house?

"Mr. CARLISLE. Yes.

"Mr. HOLMGREN. There were a number of oaths and performances that were insignificant, I would say, until we came to the anointing room, and in that anointing room there was some language used that I am sorry I ever heard.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Can you state what it was?

"Mr. HOLMGREN. In anointing my arms, the gentleman used this language: 'That your arms might be strong to avenge the blood of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.'" (4; 76, 77.)

The witness Lawrence, who was 70 years old at the time he testified, stated that he was a member of the Mormon church until 1869, and that he had taken or administered the alleged obligation in question a number of times. The following are the substantial parts of his testimony on this point:

"M. CARLISLE. Mr. Lawrence, would you object to stating whether there is any oath, commonly called here the oath of vengeance, taken in the endowment house, and what it is?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes; there is.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Can you state it in terms or in substance?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. 'You covenant and agree before God and angels and these witnesses that you will avenge the blood of the prophets, the prophet Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, Parley P. Pratt, David Patton'—their names are mentioned.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Was that the case when you took the endowment?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir. I do not know whether they were all mentioned when I was there or not, but they have been mentioned when I have been there.

"Mr. CARLISLE. You have passed through the endowment a number of times?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes; I have been there a number of times.

"Mr. CARLISLE. You mean these names have been mentioned some of the times when you passed through? That is what you mean?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. CARLISLE. You do not know whether they were all mentioned at the same time or not?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. No, sir.

"Senator DILLINGHAM. Do I understand the witness has given the whole of the obligation?

"Mr. CARLISLE. I will ask him. Do you remember now whether there was anything said about vengeance upon the people or vengeance upon the nation, or what was said of that sort, if you remember?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I say it has been stated. I can not state it only as I understand it. The word 'nation' was not mentioned where I was in regard to that vengeance, but the feeling has always been against the nation and the State for allowing that deed to be perpetrated. The word 'nation' was not mentioned. It is a little ambiguous in regard to that.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. You say you are ambiguous or it was ambiguous?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. It was a little ambiguous there who it should be executed on. The supposition is it should be executed on the perpetrators of the deed.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Lawrence, I will get you to state, if you can, whether this covenant, or oath, or whatever it may be called, is always administered by the same person and in the same terms, or whether it is administered at different times by different persons, and whether it is in writing or merely oral.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. It is administered orally by different persons at different times.

"Mr. CARLISLE. It may be, then, that there is a different form of the oath?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. It may be administered a little different. Of course the substance is about the same, but there may be some men who administer it a little different from others. I have no doubt that it is, from what I have heard.

"Mr. CARLISLE. You may take the witness.

"Senator KNOX. Was this vengeance to be executed by the person taking the oath, or vow, or were you to implore the Almighty to avenge the blood of the prophets?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. As I say, it was a little ambiguous in regard to that. Of course you take an oath to avenge the blood of the prophets and teach the principle to your children and children's children.

"Senator KNOX. I think you do not understand me. You stated a moment ago that there was some ambiguity in the oath as to whom the vengeance is directed against.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes.

"Senator KNOX. Now, I am asking you who was to execute the vengeance. Was the person taking the vow or oath to execute it or were they to implore by prayer that God should take this vengeance?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Well, that was not inserted in it for the Lord to do it. They simply took upon themselves the oath to do it; but I say it is almost impossible for them to wreak vengeance, because those men that committed the deed have probably gone years ago.

"Senator KNOX. My question was based on the exact language used by Prof. Wolfe yesterday. He said that he heard the oath taken very recently, and that they vowed or promised that they would pray to Almighty God to avenge the blood of the prophets. I think it is quite material, and I want to know what your recollection is about it.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. That was not inserted in my day—that is, in regard to asking God to wreak this vengeance. (4; 108, 109.)

* * * * * * *

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Tell us about how many times you were present when this oath was administered.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I could not say. It would go into the hundreds, probably.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Several hundred times?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes; or dozens. I would say from one to three years, probably.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. And on each occasion to a great many people, I suppose.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. On all the occasions when you heard it administered to others, or when it was administered to you, did you ever hear any reference to the nation of the United States as the object of vengeance?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. During my administration the word 'nation' was not used.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Do you mean you administered the oath?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. No, sir; yes, sir. I mean I officiated there with the rest of them.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then you both administered the covenent and you heard others administer it?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. You administered it hundreds of times and you heard it administered hundreds of times; is that right?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I was there off and on for one or two years.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Did you administer it hundreds of times?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I will say yes. (4; 110, 111.)

* * * * * * *

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Now, I come back. During all the time you administered the oath, or heard it administered by others, did you ever hear the 'nation' or the 'United States,' or the 'Government of the United States' referred to in any way as the object of vengeance that was the subject of that covenant?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I will say that at that time it was not connected with the obligation. I will say this, that the Government has always been blamed for allowing that deed to be perpetrated.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Don't let us depart from the ceremony. I want to find out what took place at the ceremony when you administered the covenant. Did you administer it always in the same language?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I tried to, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Where did you learn it?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I learned it from the church ritual, I suppose. It was what was given to me.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Was it something that was in writing or was it in print?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. No, sir; not in writing.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. It was communicated to you orally and you committed it to memory, did you?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. You do not remember who gave it to you?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not remember just now.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. It was given to you as the traditional oath of the temple, was it not?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. It was given to me to use.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. You have said to Mr. Carlisle that there is no doubt that the language of the covenant was varied from time to time. Did you ever hear it given in any other form than that you have told us about?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes. I will explain that. I have said that there were different parties that officiated at different times, and from what I had heard they had changed it a little. Inasmuch as it was orally given, one man would administer it a little different from others.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. You know that by hearsay?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I know that by hearsay only. (4; 111, 112.)

* * * * * * *

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Referring to this ceremony, and the covenant of vengeance, as it is called, do you remember in that connection whether there was any passage in the Book of Revelations of the Bible?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. What is that?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. That is used in connection with this as a justification for it.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Can you give us the verse and chapter of Revelations?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I think it is a chapter from Revelations. It is probably chapter six. It is taken from Revelations. It is simply referred to. I will answer that that quotation is referred to.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. Was it not a part of the teaching of the church, when you were connected with it, that the Constitution of the United States is an inspired document?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir. Do you want an answer to that?

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have all the answer I care to have, sir. If there is anything you wish to add to take away from the effect of your testimony, you have that privilege, provided it is not a speech. Let me read the ninth and tenth verses of the sixth chapter of Revelations, and see if those——

"Mr. LAWRENCE. 'How long, Oh Lord?' It is just a quotation.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will read the two, and see if those two verses, or either of them, are the ones to which you refer:

" 'And when he had opened the fifth seal I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain by the Word of God, and by the testimony which they held.

"'And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, Oh Lord, Holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?'

"Mr. LAWRENCE. That is part of it in connection with this?

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. We would like to have the whole of it. Just show us all that was referred to in your ceremony there.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. 'How long, Oh Lord, Holy and true.'

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. 'Dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?'

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I think that was the part connected with it—just that part.

"Mr. WORTHINGTON. You say that was used as a justification of the covenant, in connection with it?

"Mr. LAWRENCE. That was used as a justification of the obligation.

"The CHAIRMAN. He did not say as a justification of the covenant.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. I said that was used as a justification of the obligation." (4; 116, 117.)

It will be seen that all three of these witnesses flatly contradicted what seems to be the theory of the protestants, that the obligation in question involved a promise on the part of the party going through the ceremony hostile to the United States or an appeal to the Almighty to inflict punishment on the nation.

The other witness on the point now under consideration is W. M. Wolfe. He testified that he had passed through the endowment house no less than 12 times, the first time being in May, 1894, and the last time in October, 1902. His examination on this subject then proceeded as follows:

"Mr. CARLISLE. Will you state to the committee whether there is, as part of the ceremonies in the temple, any oath administered?

"Mr. WOLFE. There are several oaths administered.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Can you state what they are?

"Mr. WOLFE. There is an oath of chastity, or, I might say, a covenant or law—a law of sacrifice and a law of vengeance.

"Mr. CARLISLE. When you say a law of vengeance, what do you mean? Do you mean that there is any promise or pledge to avenge a wrong, or do you mean simply that there is some law read to you, or some rule read to you?

"Mr. WOLFE. There is no covenant or agreement on the part of any individual to avenge anything.

"Mr. CARLISLE. Just state to the committee what it is.

"Mr. WOLFE. The law of vengeance is this: 'You and each of you do covenant and promise that you will pray, and never cease to pray, Almighty God to avenge the blood of the prophets upon this nation, and that you will teach the same to your children and your children's children unto the third and fourth generations.' At the conclusion the speaker says: 'All bow your heads and say' "Yes."

"Mr. CARLISLE. Was that done?

"Mr. WOLFE. It was done.

"Senator OVERMAN. Was that done every time, or just one time?

"Mr. WOLFE. It was done every time I went through." (4; 7.)

Mr. Wolfe, for several years, and up to January last, was one of the professors in the Brigham Young College, at Logan, a Mormon institution. When asked on cross-examination whether charges of drunkenness had not been preferred against him in the institution, he said that no such charges had been made, to his knowledge, but that such charges might have been preferred against him. Upon being asked what he meant by saying that such charges might have been preferred against him, he answered that he meant that he had made himself liable to such charges for a period of possibly 20 years. (4; 24.)

He admitted that certain officers of the institution had had conversations with him in regard to his habit of drinking (4—25). He admitted that he had been required to resign his position in January last; but claimed that this was done because about that time he had given notice that he would no longer pay tithing. He admitted that officers of the institution had made objection to his habits of drinking, but said that they had never suggested his removal, or the desirability of his resignation until he had refused to pay tithes. (4; 26.)

As to Wolfe's testimony, the respondent offered considerable testimony in rebuttal. One of the witnesses on this subject was James H. Linford, the president of Brigham Young College. He testified fully as to Wolfe's habit of drinking for a considerable period prior to the time he was compelled to resign; and testified, in substance, that Wolfe's resignation was not demanded on account of his refusing to pay tithes, but because his habits of drinking had grown on him so that it was no longer possible to allow him to retain his position. (4; 261, 271.)

There was also filed on behalf of the respondent the affidavit of Joseph E. Cardon, the bishop of the ward at Logan, in which Wolfe lived. This affidavit was admitted as evidence by consent of counsel for the protestants and by leave of the committee. In this affidavit the witness contradicts what Wolfe stated in his testimony with reference to a conversation with the witness on the subject of tithing.

Wolfe was also contradicted, in a very material part of his evidence, by four witnesses. He had preferred charges against one Benjamin Kluff, in connection with a certain expedition that had been made to Mexico, of which expedition Kluff was in charge, and Wolfe was a member. Wolfe testified that on that expedition he had seen Kluff living in marital relations with one Florence Reynolds, who is alleged to have been Kluff's plural wife, taken since the manifesto. Wolfe testified that, at the hearing of these charges before a church council, he had stated that he had seen Kluff and Florence Reynolds living in that relation.

By consent of counsel for the protestants, and by leave of the committee, there were filed the affidavit of the stenographer who took down Wolfe's statement, and the joint affidavit of the three members of the committee before whom he made his statement, all of them saying that he had not in any way referred to the fact that he had seen Kluff and Florence Reynolds living together, and that he did not in any way refer to the relations between those two people. (4; 302, 408, 409.)

Taking all of the testimony on this subject together, the overwhelming weight of it is against the contention that the respondent ever took any obligation of hostility to the United States. Seven witnesses have in an indefinite way testified that the obligation included some kind of a promise or prayer indicating hostility to the Nation, while 13 witnesses, about one-half of whom were called on behalf of the protestants, have testified positively and unqualifiedly to the contrary. All of the witnesses who have testified that the word "nation" was used in the obligation have been impeached as to their credibility, and no evidence has been introduced tending to sustain the veracity of any one of them. [Fifty-eighth Congress Second Session.]

of Nebraska.

On March 28, 1901, Charles H. Dietrich was elected by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska a Senator of the United States from that State. December 2, 1901, at the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, he was sworn in as a Senator and took his seat.

On February 1, 1904, Mr. Dietrich rose to a question of personal privilege and submitted a resolution directing an investigtion by a special committee of the Senate of the facts connected with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings Nebr., the leasing of the post-office building in that town, and the action of Mr. Dietrich in connection with such appointment and leasing. Mr. Dietrich had been indicted by a Federal grand jury for alleged violation of the laws of the United States but had been discharged by the judge upon a trial of the indictments without the cause being heard on its merits, it having been admitted by the prosecuting attorney that the date of the offenses charged against Mr. Dietrich as a Senator was prior to the taking of the oath of office by the said Dietrich.

After a short discussion of the question as to whether the case properly belonged to the Committee on Privileges and Elections or to a special committee, the resolution was adopted as introduced, and a committee of five Senators was subsequently appointed.

On April 14, 1904, the committee submitted its report to the Senate, in which the opinion was expressed that Senator Dietrich had not been guilty of any violation of the Statutes or of any corrupt or unworthy conduct relating either to the appointment of the postmaster in question or the leasing of the building for a post office. No charges were ever made on the Senate floor against Senator Dietrich's conduct, and, following the submission of the report, no further action was taken in the case. The report sets out in full the nature of the charges made against Senator Dietrich in the indictments and the statutes upon which they were based.

The record of the case here presented consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate, as published in the Congressional Record, and the report of the special committee.

[Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

MONDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1901.

Mr. Allison presented the credentials of Charles H. Dietrich, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska a Senator from that State, to fill the vacancy in the term ending March 3, 1905; which were read and ordered to be filed.

On the same day the oath prescribed by law was administered.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1904.

Mr. Dietrich rose to a question of personal privilege and, after a brief statement, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the President pro tempore shall appoint a committee of five to investigate and report to the Senate all the facts connected with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebraska, and the leasing of the building used at this time for a post office in that city, and particularly to investigate and report as to the action of Charles H. Dietrich, a Senator from Nebraska, in connection with such appointment and leasing."

The President pro tempore appointed, in pursuance of the foregoing resolution, Mr. Hoar, Mr. Platt of Connecticut, Mr. Spooner, Mr. Cockrell, and Mr. Pettus members of the committee. Mr. Hoar submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the special committee appointed to inquire into certain charges affecting the Hon. Charles H. Dietrich, a Senator from the State of Nebraska, be authorized to employ a clerk and stenographer and, by themselves or any subcommittee of their number, to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths."

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1904.

Mr. Kean, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted the day before by Mr. Hoar, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1904.

Mr. Hoar submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the expenses to be incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate and report to the Senate all the facts connected with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebr., and the leasing of the building used at this time for a post office in that city, and particularly to investigate and report as to the action of Charles H. Dietrich, a Senator from Nebraska, in connection with such appointment and leasing, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee."

Dietrich, a Senator from Nebraska, in connection with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebr., and the leasing of the post-office building thereat, reported it without amendment. It was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

THURSDAY, APRIL 14, 1904.

Mr. Platt of Connecticut, from the special committee appointed to investigate certain charges preferred against Senator Dietrich, submitted the following report (No. 2152), to accompany Senate resolution 117:

The special committee appointed under the following resolution, viz,

"Resolved, That the President pro tempore shall appoint a committee of five to investigate and report to the Senate all the facts connected with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebraska, and the leasing of the building used at this time for a post office in that city, and particularly to investigate and report as to the action of Charles H. Dietrich, a Senator from Nebraska, in connection with such appointment and leasing," having made the investigation required by such resolution, report herewith all the facts regarding which they were directed to make inquiry, and as to the action of Senator Charles H. Dietrich in connection therewith:

Senator Dietrich was elected a Senator from the State of Nebraska on the 28th day of March, 1901. He took the oath of office on the 2d day of December, 1901, at the opening of the regular session of the Senate. At the time of his election to the Senate he was governor of the State of Nebraska, having been elected at the November election in the year 1900. He took the oath of office as governor on the 3d day of January, 1901, and resigned on the 1st day of May of the same year.

While governor, and on or about March 4, 1901, he called upon the Postmaster General, at Washington, and made to him a proposition to lease to the Government, for the term of 10 years, a room for a post office in a building he was then constructing in the city of Hastings, Nebr., at a rental of $1,800 per annum, the fixtures, heat, light, and water to be furnished by him, he to keep the same in repair and to furnish all additional fixtures deemed necessary during the term of the lease. This proposition was accepted by the department, and on March 12, 1901, Senator Dietrich signed a lease for the same, forwarded it to Washington, and on March 21 the proposition was formally accepted by the First Assistant Postmaster General.

At this time the post office was and had for some years been kept in a building owned by a Grand Army post about 40 feet from the building which was being erected by Senator Dietrich. The postmaster was notified by the department of the lease of the new premises, immediately after which numerous protests against the proposed change of location of the office were sent to the department at Washington. These protests seem to have emanated from two sources—one the Grand Army post in whose building the post office was then situated and the other from a different locality in the city, between which and the locality where the new building was being erected there had been for years an intense rivalry. These protests were of a character which induced the Postmaster General to notify Senator Dietrich that he thought it inadvisable to carry out the arrangement for leasing quarters from him unless he could secure more favorable terms. As a result of this notice Senator Dietrich, about April 23, 1901, and while still acting as governor of the State of Nebraska, called upon the Postmaster General in Washington, and, after discussion of the matter, made a verbal proposition to lease the room in question as a post office for the sum of $1,300 per annum, with the understanding that the Government would provide, at its own expense, fixtures, heat, light, water, and make all other necessary expenditures.

On April 24, 1901, a written notice was sent to Senator Dietrich, signed by the First Assistant Postmaster General, accepting this proposition "for a term of 10 years from July 1, 1901, at a rental of $1,300 per annum, with the understanding that the present equipment in the post office at Hastings will be used in the new room and the department is to defray the expense of removing the equipment and placing the same in position in the new quarters."

While the first contract for leasing the premises, which required Senator Dietrich to fit the same up at his own expense, was in force he made an agreement with the officers of the Grand Army post to purchase from said post all the furniture and fixtures belonging to the same and used for the post office in their building for the sum of $500 to be paid whenever Senator Dietrich took possession of the same or the post office was removed to the Dietrich building. The date of this agreement was April 9, 1901.

On June 9, 1901, Mr. Jacob Fisher was, upon the recommendation of Senator Dietrich, appointed postmaster at Hastings, and took possession of the office soon after, in the building of the Grand Army post where it was then located. The office was removed to the room in the Dietrich building on the 21st day of July, 1901, and the fixtures were then removed from the old to the new post-office room.

Senator Dietrich owned the land upon which the building was erected where the new post office was located. He began the construction of the building in the summer of 1900, and before making the proposition to the Postmaster General to lease a room in it for the post office.

In October, 1900, Gertrude Dietrich, the Senator's daughter and only child, inherited from her grandfather the sum of $3,300. Senator Dietrich was the president of the German National Bank at Hastings, and his brother-in-law, Mr. John Slaker, was cashier. When his daughter inherited the money referred to, Senator Dietrich consulted with her uncle, Mr. Slaker, as to how it should be invested, and decided, with the consent of the daughter, who was at the time, by the laws of Nebraska, of age to make contracts, that the money should be used in the erection of the building which had been commenced by Senator Dietrich, who stated at the time to his daughter, to Slaker, and to others, that when the building should be completed he intended to convey the land and building to his daughter as her own absolute property. Accordingly, this sum of $3,300 was used and expended in the construction of the building referred to. The property is valued at about $9,000, including the cost of the building and the land upon which it is located.

Senator Deitrich went with his daughter to the Philippine Islands, starting about the middle of June, 1901, and returning about the 1st of October that year. During his absence, as before stated, about the 21st of July, 1901, the Government took possession of the post office in the Dietrich Building and removed the fixtures from the Grand Army Post Building thereto at its own expense. Mr. Slaker had been directed by Senator Dietrich, before his departure, to collect the rent and to deposit it to the credit of Gertrude Dietrich in the bank, and this was done from the date of the Government occupation.

Senator Dietrich instructed Mr. Slaker to prepare a deed conveying the property to his daughter Gertrude, and the deed was prepared by Mr. Slaker according to directions, but its execution was overlooked for some time, and when that fact was discovered by Mr. Slaker he forwarded the deed to Senator Dietrich, who was then in Washington, where the same was executed and returned by him and then it was placed on record.

All rents for the building were, from the beginning, as they accrued, collected by Mr. Slaker and deposited in the bank to the credit of Gertrude Dietrich, and checked against by her for her own personal use.

Senator Dietrich is a widower, a man of independent fortune, and quite able to present to his daughter his interest in the property in question, and the committee finds in the record no reason to doubt that the transfer to the daughter was in pursuance of his intention, announced when he invested her money in the building, and was in perfect good faith, and not in the slightest degree colorable.

After the building was occupied as a post office the premises were inspected by an inspector of the Post Office Department, who suggested to Mr. Fisher, the postmaster, that the room was too large for post-office purposes, and that its heating would be too expensive, and further suggested that a room be partitioned off from the rear. When Senator Deitrich returned from the Philippines in October, he visited Washington and arranged with the Post Office Department to put up a partition at his own expense, the department agreeing that it would relinquish the portion of room so to be partitioned off, which proposition was accepted by the department.

When this arrangement had been made, the postmaster, Mr. Fisher, proposed to Senator Dietrich that he would rent said room, intending at first to start a restaurant in the same, to be conducted by his son, and it was agreed between Senator Dietrich and Mr. Fisher that he (Fisher) should take the room and pay rent for it, commencing August 1, 1901, at the rate of $200 per annum. This arrangement was made some time in November, 1901. Senator Dietrich soon after came to Washington and did not return to Hastings until the latter part of March, 1902, when he found that the restaurant had not been started and that the room was vacant. He was told by Mr. Fisher that as the Burlington depot had not been completed as soon as he supposed it would be he had given up the idea of establishing a restaurant in the room; that he had negotiated with the Western Union Telegraph Co. to put an office therein, but that that plan had not materialized. Thereupon Senator Dietrich told Mr. Fisher that he was willing to take the room off his hands and repay the rent which Fisher had paid for same from August 1, which he did, and soon thereafter Senator Dietrich leased the room for $300 per year to another party, which lease still continues. The money paid by Mr. Fisher for the rent of the room was paid to Mr. Slaker and deposited to the credit of Gertrude Dietrich, and the subsequent rents have been so collected and deposited. The entire amount paid by Mr. Fisher for the room was $83.30.

Soon after making the arrangenent to lease the same, it was agreed between Mr. Fisher and his deputy postmaster, Edwin A. Francis, that they should be jointly interested in the lease of the room, each paying one-half, and sharing equally in any rents that might be derived therefrom. Francis paid to Fisher one-half of the rent while the arrangement lasted, which was repaid by Fisher when Senator Dietrich took the room off his hands.

APPOINTMENT OF JACOB FISHER AS POSTMASTER.

Fisher was a director in the bank of which Senator Dietrich was president, and his friends had made application to Senator Dietrich while he was governor to appoint Fisher to the office of oil inspector of the State. Mr. Fisher, in company with Mr. John D. Mines, visited the city of Lincoln, where the legislature was in session, in February, 1901, and Mr. Mines asked Mr. Dietrich to appoint Mr. Fisher to such position, but the governor informed Mr. Mines, in the presence of Mr. Fisher, that he did not see his way clear to make such appointment; that if he should appoint him Fisher would have to live at the capital, and that the expense of doing so would be so great that he would not receive much benefit from the office, but that he would use his influence to have Fisher appointed postmaster at Hastings.

After the election of Mr. Dietrich as Senator Messrs. Fisher and Mines again visited him, and Senator Dietrich assured them that he would recommend Fisher as postmaster. Soon after his election as Senator, Mr. Dietrich took a trip to the Big Horn Mountains, and when he returned therefrom to Hastings he sent for Mr. Fisher, who went to see him, and was told by Senator Dietrich that he would soon recommend him for postmaster. A conversation thereupon took place with regard to the fixtures in the old post office, which Senator Dietrich had, as before stated, agreed to pay for when he should take possession of the same, or when the post office should be removed to the Dietrich Building. Senator Dietrich asked Fisher if he did not think that he could raise among the people who were interested in property in that section of the city the $500 necessary to purchase the fixtures. Fisher replied that he did not think he could, as the property owners there had recently contributed the sum of $3,000 to secure the location of the Burlington depot in that vicinity, and that he would rather buy the fixtures himself than go around with a subscription list to raise the money necessary; that other postmasters, when appointed, had purchased fixtures, and that he was willing to do the same. Soon after this Mr. Fisher was recommended by Senator Dietrich, and on June 8, 1901, received notice that his appointment as postmaster had been made.

Senator Dietrich and Mr. Fisher both testify positively and unequivocally that the purchase of the fixtures was in no way made a condition of the appointment of Fisher as postmaster, and that the transaction was only such as had been customary upon the appointment of former postmasters, and the committee is satisfied from the evidence that such is the fact.

When the post office was about to be removed into the Dietrich Building, Mr. Fisher paid to the agent of the Grand Army post the sum of $500 for the fixtures, and they were removed and installed in the new building.

THE PROSECUTION OF SENATOR DIETRICH.

Senator Dietrich was indicted in the district court of Nebraska in five different cases, afterwards remitted to the circuit court, the record in two of which is printed with the testimony taken by the committee in this case, which record, as the committee thinks, fairly presents all the charges against him, so that the printing of the record in the other three cases is unnecessary.

In the first of the cases, the record of which is printed, Senator Dietrich is charged in effect that while a Senator in Congress from the State of Nebraska he took, received, and agreed to receive a bribe from Jacob Fisher for procuring and aiding to procure for said Fisher the office of postmaster at Hastings, Nebr. To this indictment Mr. Dietrich pleaded not guilty, and a jury was impaneled to try the case. After the opening statement of the United States district attorney, in which he admitted that the date of the offenses charged was prior to the taking of the oath of office of Senator by Mr. Dietrich, a verdict of acquittal was directed by Circuit Judge Van Devanter, who held that the statute in question did not apply to a Senator-elect, and a verdict of acquittal was accordingly rendered.

In the second case, the record of which is printed, it is charged that Mr. Dietrich, while a Senator in Congress from the State of Nebraska, did hold and enjoy a contract theretofore entered into between himself and the United States for the use and occupation, for the purposes of a United States post office at Hastings, Nebr., of a lot and building owned by the defendant. In this case a demurrer was entered, argued, and overruled, but subsequently, on the motion of the district attorney, a nolle prosequi was entered, and Senator Dietrich was discharged.

One of the other cases against Senator Dietrich differs from the first, the record of which is printed, only in the manner of charging the same offenses alleged in the first case, and in this case a nolle prosequi was also entered, upon the motion of the district attorney, and Senator Dietrich was discharged.

In the other two cases Senator Dietrich and Mr. Fisher were indicted jointly for a conspiracy to violate section 1781 of the Revised Statutes, the ground of such conspiracy being the alleged agreement between Messrs. Dietrich and Fisher, which was set up as a separate offense in the first case referred to. In these two cases demurrers were entered and sustained, upon the ground that the indictment did not charge a conspiracy, but only separate offenses against Dietrich and Fisher.

So that, eliminating technicalities, the offenses charged against Senator Dietrich were:

"First. That as Senator he received from Fisher either the sum of $1,300 or $500, or the equivalent of the same in property, for procuring for said Fisher the office of postmaster at Hastings; and

"Second. That as Senator he held and enjoyed a contract with the Government."

The statute which Senator Dietrich was alleged to have violated in the first case referred to is section 1781 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

"Every Member of Congress, or any officer or agent of the Government who, directly or indirectly, takes, receives, or agrees to receive from any person for procuring, or aiding to procure, any contract, office, or place from the Government or any department thereof, or from any officer of the United States, for any person whatever, or for giving any such contract, office, or place to any person whomsoever, * * * shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than two years and fined not more than ten thousand dollars. * * * And any Member of Congress or officer convicted of a violation of this section shall, moreover, be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the Government of the United States."

The statute which he was alleged to have violated in the second case is section 3739 of the Revised Statutes, which is here quoted, together with the pertinent sections, 3740 and 3741.

"SEC. 3739. No Member of or Delegate to Congress shall directly or indirectly, himself, or by any other person in trust for him, or for his use of benefit, or on his account, undertake, execute, hold, or enjoy, in whole or in part, any contract or agreement made or entered into in behalf of the United States by any officer or person authorized to make contracts on behalf of the United States. Every person who violates this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined three thousand dollars. All contracts or agreements made in violation of this section shall be void; and whenever any sum of money is advanced on the part of the United States in consideration of any such contract or agreement it shall be forthwith repaid; and in case of refusal or delay to repay the same, when demanded by the proper officer of the department under whose authority such contract or agreement shall have been made or entered into, every person so refusing or delaying, together with his surety or sureties, shall be forthwith prosecuted at law for the recovery of any such sum of money so advanced.

"SEC. 3740. Nothing contained in the preceding section shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any contract or agreement made or entered into or accepted by any incorporated company where such contract or agreement is made for the general benefit of such incorporation or company, nor to the purchase or sale of bills of exchange or other property by any Member of (or Delegate to) Congress where the same are ready for delivery and payment thereof is made at the time of making or entering into the contract or agreement.

"SEC. 3741. In every such contract or agreement to be made or entered into or accepted by or on behalf of the United States there shall be inserted an express condition that no Member of (or Delegate to) Congress shall be admitted to any share or part of such contract or agreement or to any benefit to arise thereupon."

The committee, desiring to make the fullest possible investigation of all the matters embraced in the resolution, through the Attorney General of the United States called upon the district attorney of Nebraska for the complete court record in all of the cases against Senator Dietrich and Mr. Fisher, and also a list of all witnesses by whom the district attorney expected to prove the allegations in the several indictments, together with a summary of what he expected to prove by each witness. Receiving such list and summary, all of the witnesses whose names were furnished by the district attorney, and other witnesses whose names were brought by the district attorney to the attention of the committee pending the investigation, were summoned, and all appeared before the committee except two, one of whom is dead and the other of whom was so ill as to be unable to appear. Affidavits of each of these witnesses, both separate and joint, had been secured and are printed in the testimony.

In all of the indictments the prosecution relied upon the same facts to prove the offenses charged.

The committee, with the consent of Senator Dietrich, in order that no possible fact bearing upon the matter might be overlooked, received the statements of all of the witnesses in full, not regarding strictly the rules of eivdence in that respect.

It will appear that the committee, with such consent of Senator Dietrich, admitted not only such evidence against him as would have been competent in a court of justice, but also a good deal of hearsay testimony—being all that was brought to their attention—as a possible clue to further information. The committee did not determine how far this proceeding would have been justified for any reason without such consent, even if they had carefully refrained from attaching any weight to it in their final decision. But it, in fact, did not in the least tend to shake or affect the conviction they have reached.

The committee submits herewith the testimony taken, but deems it unnecessary to set forth in full a summary of the same. Many of the witnesses examined, by whom the district attorney apparently expected to prove the charges against Senator Dietrich testified only to matters which, in the opinion of the committee, could not have been accepted in court as legal evidence, relating principally to statements alleged to have been made by Fisher and others, in the absence of Senator Dietrich, to the effect that Fisher had been required to pay a sum of money in order to secure the appointment of postmaster at Hastings.

The statements of the witnesses thus testifying are positively and unequivocally denied by the parties with whom it is alleged such conversations were had, and an examination of the testimony will, the committee thinks, lead to the conclusion that such alleged conversations are improbable, and never took place.

Upon full consideration of all of the evidence, the committee is of opinion that Senator Dietrich has not been guilty of any violation of the statutes of the United States or of any corrupt or unworthy conduct relating either to the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebr., or the leasing of the building in question to the United States for the purposes of a post office.

[Fifty-eighth Congress, third session.]

JAMES A. HEMENWAY, of Indiana.

In February, 1905, the credentials of James A. Hemenway were presented in the Senate, certifying to his election by the Legislature of Indiana in the month of January, 1905, as a Senator of the United States from that State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Hon. Charles W. Fairbanks, the latter having been elected Vice President of the United States for the term commencing March 4, 1905. The question as to the right of a legislature to fill a vacancy upon a resignation to take effect at a future date was discussed in the Senate, following which the credentials were placed on file. Subsequently at the organization of the next Congress, Mr. Hemenway was sworn and took his seat. The history of the case here presented consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate, as published in the Congressional Record, and extracts from the remarks of several Senators.

[Fifty-eighth Congress, third session.]

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1905.

Mr. Beveridge presented the credentials of James A. Hemenway, chosen by the Legislature of Indiana a Senator from that State for the unexpired term of six years from the 4th day of March, 1903.

The credentials were read, as follows:

In the name and by the authority of the State of Indiana. Executive department.

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

This is to certify that on the 17th day of January, 1905, James A. Hemenway was duly chosen by the Legislature of the State of Indiana a Senator to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired portion of the term of six years from the 4th day of March, 1903, and to fill the vacancy occasioned therein by the resignation of the Hon. Charles W. Fairbanks.

Witness his excellency our governor, J. Frank Hanly, and our seal hereto affixed at the city of Indianapolis, Ind., this 18th day of February, A. D. 1905.

By the governor:

J. FRANK HANLY,
Governor.

[SEAL.]

DANIEL E. STORMS,
Secretary of State.

[Extract from the remarks of Mr. Bailey.]

Mr. PRESIDENT: Before the credentials are placed on file, I want to call the attention of the Senate to what I think is a fatal objection to this certificate of election and to the election itself.

The certificate shows that that election occurred in the Legislature of Indiana during the month of January and that Mr. Hemenway was chosen to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Senator Fairbanks, to take effect on the 4th of March. Thus the Legislature of Indiana has asserted its right to fill a vacancy not only when no vacancy exists, but when it was possible under the law that no vacancy ever would exist. The courts have more than once held—and no court has held it more distinctly than the Supreme Court of Indiana—that a resignation to take effect at a future day is not a resignation at all, but simply a notice of an intention to resign, such resignation becoming effective if it remains with the officer authorized to receive it up to the time it was to take effect. But all the courts that have discussed the matter—possibly that is too broad—I will say a large majority of the courts that have discussed the matter hold that until the date indicated in the resignation the officer may withdraw it, and may thus prevent a vacancy.

Of course, nobody believes that the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. Fairbanks] will withdraw his resignation in order to remain amongst us instead of accepting the call to preside over us, but the probability or the improbability of the withdrawal of a resignation does not affect the law of the case.

I do not, however, intend to insist upon any reference of this particular credential, because the Senate seems to have considered and decided the very question in the Chilton case. There a Senator from my own State was appointed in April to fill a vacancy which, by the terms of the resignation, was to occur in June. His credentials were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and that committee reported unanimously that he was entitled to his seat. But the remarkable thing is that, although that report was prepared and presented by so great and so accurate a lawyer as the late Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, it does not appear to have taken into consideration at all the very vital question in the case. The report devotes itself almost entirely to a line of reasoning upon the right of executives and legislatures to fill a vacancy which is certain to occur, in advance of its occurrence. But the report in no part of it as I now recall—it has been some time since I examined it; I did examine it closely at the time, and I remember distinctly to have believed, although I had no interest in it, that the Senate was wrong—the report, so far as I can now recall, does not consider the question as to whether a resignation may be withdrawn or not, and yet the courts have held over and over again that it may be.

I venture to say that the records of Congress will verify my statement that Senators have telegraphed their resignations to the governors of their States and afterwards withdrawn them. But recognizing that—although it did not seem to consider the vital point in the case—the report and the action of the Senate in the Chilton case are on all fours with the present case, I am not going to ask that the credentials be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but content myself with simply saying that if it were a question that might effect the political complexion of the Senate, I should not want it to be understood as concluded by the action of the Senate here.

[Extract from remarks of Mr. Burrows.]

Mr. PRESIDENT: As the Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey] has well said, this very question raised by the Senator has been repeatedly presented to the Senate and repeatedly decided, notably in the case of Henry Clay, of Kentucky, who resigned his seat in the Senate to take effect at a future date. The legislature, in anticipation of such vacancy, and before the vacancy actually occurred, proceeded to elect a Senator to fill the prospective vacancy. Archibald Dixon was chosen by the legislature to fill such vacancy, and his right to take his seat under and by virtue of such election having been questioned upon the ground that the legislature could not fill a prospective vacancy, the Senate, after full debate, decided that the action of the legislature was regular, and that Dixon was duly elected and was entitled to the seat.

I know of no case in the history of the Senate that will bear out the contention of the Senator from Texas. But be that as it may, the question before the Senate now is simply upon receiving and placing on file the credentials of the Senator-elect from Indiana. If, at the opening of the next session, objection is made to the holder of the certificate taking the oath of office under it, then it would be the appropriate time to consider such objection.

[Extract from remarks of Mr. Teller.]

Mr. PRESIDENT: I was chairman of the committee when the report (the Chilton case) was made. This matter was referred more particularly to Senator Hoar, who made the report. I was somewhat embarrassed at the time by the question from the fact that in 1882 I had resigned my seat in the Senate to take another place, and I had resigned to take effect when my successor should be elected or appointed. I had remained in the Senate until the governor of the State had appointed and sent here my successor to be sworn in, and then I took the other place.

When the question came before the Committee on Privileges and Elections it was a new question to me, although I knew that some Senators had raised the question, but not until after I had gone out of the Senate, and I did not take any part in that discussion or in the report except pro forma.

The credentials were placed on file.

[Fifty-ninth Congress, special session.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1905.

Mr. Hemenway having been sworn, took his seat.

JOSEPH R. BURTON, of Kansas.

The credentials of Joseph R. Burton, certifying to his election by the Legislature of Kansas as a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1901, were submitted to the Senate on January 25, 1901. He took his seat in the Senate on March 4, 1901. On May 22, 1906, a resolution directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to examine into the legal effect of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Joseph R. Burton was adopted in the Senate. (For decision see 202 U. S., 344). Subsequently, on June 5, 1906, a telegram from the governor of Kansas, was laid before the Senate notifying the Senate of the resignation of Mr. Burton. No report was ever made to the Senate on the resolution above referred to.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1901.

Mr. Baker presented the credentials of Joseph Ralph Burton, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Kansas a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1901; which were read, and ordered to be filed. (Cong. Rec., vol. 35, p. 1591.)

[Fifty-seventh Congress, special session.]

MONDAY, MARCH 4, 1901.

Swearing in of Senators:

In the list, Joseph R. Burton of the State of Kansas. (Cong. Rec., vol. 35, p. 1.)

[Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.]

TUESDAY, MAY 22, 1906.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I offer the following resolve. I had intended to ask the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to present the resolve. As he is not here, I send it now to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and are hereby, directed to examine into the legal effect of the late decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Joseph R. Burton, a Senator from the State of Kansas, and, as soon as may be, to report their recommendation as to what action, if any, shall be taken by the Senate."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine desire the present consideration of the resolution just read?

Mr. HALE. It is simply directing the committee to investigate. There is no objection, I suppose, to the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to. (Cong. Rec., vol. 40, p. 7211.)

TUESDAY, JUNE 5, 1906.

The Vice President laid before the Senate the following telegram; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

[Telegram.]

TOPEKA, KANS., June 4, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

Hon. J. R. Burton has this day tendered his resignation as United States Senator from Kansas, and I have accepted the same.

E. W. HOCH, Governor of Kansas.

[Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

JOHN W. SMITH,

of Maryland.

On Thursday, March 26, 1908, the credentials of John Walter Smith were presented to the Senate, certifying to the election by the Legislature of Maryland, on the 25th day of March, of the said John Walter Smith as a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William P. Whyte.

After the reading of the credentials, a motion was made that he be sworn. Objection was made to the oath of office being administered to Mr. Smith upon the expression of opinion that the election was not according to the Constitution and laws of the United States. There was no contest in this case, the ground taken for this objection being that the credentials showed that Mr. Smith was elected on March 25 and the records of the Senate showed that Mr. Whyte died the previous Tuesday, March 17, which, it was contended, was in violation of the Federal act of 1866 providing that in case of a vacancy occurring during a session of the legislature the proceedings to fill such vacancy "shall be had on the second Tuesday after the legislature has organized and has notice of such vacancy." The second Tuesday in this case, it was contended, would have been March 31.

On the other hand, it was contended that the credentials were regular and that the regular custom should be observed and Mr. Smith be allowed to take the oath on the face of his credentials, without regard for what the records of the Senate showed with reference to the date of Mr. Whyte's death, that being a question for consideration by the Committee of Privileges and Elections after the oath had been administered and the credentials had been ordered referred to that committee. An extended debate followed on the question of the interpretation of the section of the Federal act above referred to, as to whether "the second Tuesday" applied to the date after organization of the legislature when an election could be had or to the date after notice of vacancy when an election should be proceeded with.

A substitute resolution, to refer the credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was offered for the motion that the oath be administered to Mr. Smith. This substitute failed of adoption by a vote of 28 to 34. The original motion was then adopted, and Mr. Smith, having been sworn, took his seat. No further action was taken in the case.

The history of this case as here presented includes portions of the remarks of certain Senators as presented in the Record, an extract from the debate in the same volume, and the vote on the resolution to refer the credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1908.

Mr. Rayner presented the credentials of John Walter Smith, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Maryland to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. William Pinkney Whyte; which were read and placed on file.

Mr. Kean raised a question as to the presence of a quorum,

Whereupon,

The Vice President directed the roll to be called,

When,

Fifty-six Senators answered to their names,

A quorum being present.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE STATE OF MARYLAND,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 25th day of March, 1908, John Walter Smith was, in accordance with law, duly chosen by the Legislature of the State of Maryland a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired portion of the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1903, to fill the vacancy caused by the decease of Hon. William Pinkney Whyte.

Witness his excellency our governor and our seal hereto affixed at Annapolis this 25th day of March, in year of our Lord 1908.

AUSTIN L. CROTHERS.

By the Governor:
[SEAL.]

N. WINSLOW WILLIAMS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. Rayner made a motion that the oath prescribed by law be administered to Mr. Smith. (Cong. Rec., vol. 42, p. 3938.)

[Extracts from remarks of Mr. Burrows, of Michigan, in objection to the oath of office being administered. Found in the proceedings of March 26, 1908, in the Congressional Record, vol. 42, pp. 3938 3 39, 3946, 3947, 3948.]

Mr. President, it will be observed that this act (act of 1866) prescribes the method of procedure for the election of a Senator under three different conditions: First, at the beginning of a full term; second, for filling a vacancy which happens during a recess of the legislature; and, third, for filling a vacancy happening when the legislature is in session.

The case now before the Senate arises under section 17 of this act, which is as follows:

"SEC. 17. Whenever, during the session of the legislature of any State, a vacancy occurs in the representation of such State in the Senate, similar proceedings to fill such vacancy shall be had on the second Tuesday after the legislature has organized and has notice of such vacancy."

The Senate will observe that the proceedings for the election of a Senator at the beginning of a term are as follows:

"The legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress."

Section 17 modifies the general course of procedure only in providing that the legislature shall proceed on the second Tuesday after the legislature has organized and has notice of such vacancy.

It appears from the certificate presented and the records of the Senate that this election on the 25th day of March was not the second Tuesday after the organization of the legislature and notification of the vacancy.

* * * * * * *

It is conceded that Senator Whyte died on the 17th day of March, and that Mr. Smith's election took place on the 25th. It is admitted that the vacancy happened on Tuesday, March 17. The second Tuesday thereafter would be March 31. The Legislature of Maryland proceeded to the election of a Senator on Tuesday, March 24, and consummated it in joint assembly March 25.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, as to the credentials presented in this case, I think there can be no question but that they are in due form and are not subject, on their face, to criticism. But, in determining the right of Mr. Smith under these credentilas to a seat in the Senate, the Senate will take cognizance of its own records and its journal entries. The credentials presented showing that Mr. Smith was elected on Wednesday, the 25th of March, and the journal of the Senate disclosing that the vacancy occurred on Tuesday, the 17th of March, the Senate has knowledge of these facts, and it seems to me that the validity of his title is thereby impeached, and that instead of a prima facie case being established in favor of the party holding such credentials, a prima facie case is made out against such right.

I think it will throw some light upon this question by alluding to the history of this legislation. The occasion for the enactment of the statute of 1866 every Senator will recall. Congress exercised its power under that provision of the Constitution referred to first in 1842 by directing the manner in which the Members of the House of Representatives should be elected. Previous to that time the whole membership of the House was elected upon a general ticket, so that whatever divisions there might have been in a State politically the dominant party in the State carried the the entire representation. So, in 1842, Congress passed an act under this right to regulate the method of electing Representatives in Congress, declaring that the State should be divided into districts. Then subsequently another act was passed requiring that the election of Members of the House should occur on the same day throughout the United States, so that the practice of colonizing from one State into another on election day should be prevented.

Then came 1866, when this provision was made as to the manner of electing Senators. Previous to that time the legislatures had failed to elect Senators in many instances. One house would act and then the other, and there was no system and no method by which the election could be certainly secured. So Congress sought to regulate the manner of the election of Senators by this provision.

If we turn back to the history of this legislation it throws a flood of light upon the meaning of its provisions, and I think disposes of the contention of Senators on the other side that it was unnecessary to have two weeks elapse after notification before proceeding to fill the vacancy. The act was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary in 1866, a committee composed of Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois; Ira Harris, of New York; Daniel Clark, of New Hampshire; Luke Poland, of Vermont; William M. Stewart, of Nevada; Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana; and Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland. That list of names should carry with it the conviction that the act was very carefully framed.

The report of the committee was made on the 9th of July, 1866, and so far as the first and second sections are concerned they were adopted substantially as reported and as they stand to-day. But coming to the section in controversy, providing for filling a vacancy occurring when the legislature is in session, the committee reported as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That whenever, on the meeting of the legislature of any State, a vacancy shall exist in the representation of such State in the Senate of the United States, said legislature shall proceed, on the second Tuesday after the commencement of its session, to elect a person to fill such vacancy, in the manner hereinbefore provided for the election of a Senator for a full term——"

Now I come to the provision under which this contention has arisen—"and if a vacancy shall happen during the session of the legislature, then on the second Tuesday after the legislature shall have notice thereof."

* * * * * * *

Now, Mr. President, as this bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary the provision over which this controversy has arisen read as follows:

"And if a vacancy shall happen during the session of the legislature, then on the second Tuesday after the legislature shall have notice thereof."

Can anyone misunderstand that language? They could not elect until the second Tuesday after notice. Now, the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] suggests that it was changed. I know that, and I am going to show the Senate how it was changed and for what reason. But, mark you, there was no change in the bill as to the time of electing on the second Tuesday after notice. Let me read the debate. Mr. Clark in his discussion in the Senate said:

"I move further to amend the bill in the fifth line of the second section by inserting the words 'and organization' after the word 'commencement.' "

That is all, "and organization," leaving the balance just as it read, "the second Tuesday after notice."

"Mr. JOHNSON"—

Reverdy Johnson—

"How will it read then?

"Mr. CLARK"—

Quoting—

"And if a vacancy shall happen during the session of the legislature, then on the second Tuesday after the legislature shall have been organized and shall have notice of the vacancy."

That was the only change, and that is the law as it reads to-day. The only change made by the Senate when the bill was before the Senate declaring that the election should take place on the second Tuesday after notice was to insert the words "and organization," so as to read "organization and notice," for the reason that they could not proceed, of course, until after the legislature was organized.

"Mr. TRUMBULL. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that that can hardly be necessary. This provision is, 'If a vacancy shall happen during the session of the legislature.' Is it a 'session' of the legislature until it is organized?

"Mr. CLARK. It may be. The legislature may be together and sitting, but not organized. I want to avoid that difficulty.

"Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no objection to it.

"Mr. CLARK. I think it would make it a little more specific to insert those words."

That, Mr. President, is the history of this enactment. That is how the amendment "organization" came in, and thus it conforms to the provision of the other sections. Is it contended that because the word "organization" was inserted before the word notice it changed the whole meaning of the section? That can not be possible. The second Tuesday after organization and notice of the vacancy applies with equal force to "notice" as to organization. My contention therefore is that the legislature of Maryland, in proceeding to the election of a Senator on the 25th day of March to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Senator Whyte, which occurred on the 17th day of the same month, acted prematurely and in violation of the statute of 1866.

Mr. President, I have taken occasion to look over the precedents of the Senate since 1866, when this measure was enacted. There have been 14 deaths in the Senate at a time when the legislature of the State in which the vacancy happened was in session and in not one single instance has any State presumed to defy or ignore this statute and elect until the second Tuesday after they were notified of the vacancy.

The cases are all like the one now pending before the Senate—a death during the session, an election by the legislature after the legislature had been notified and the second Tuesday after such notification—and in no single instance has a Senator been permitted to take his seat who has not conformed to that statute.

In the case of George Hearst, of California, who died February 28, 1891, and his successor was elected March 19, 1891, the second Tuesday.

Orville H. Platt, of Connecticut, died April 21, 1905, and his successor was elected May 10, 1905.

Benjamin H. Hill, of Georgia, died August 16, 1882, and his successor was elected November 15, 1882.

John A. Logan, of Illinois, died December 26, 1886, and his successor was elected January 19, 1887.

James B. Beck, of Kentucky, died May 3, 1890, and his successor was elected May 17, 1890.

Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, died March 11, 1874, and his successor was elected April 17, 1874.

Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, died January 24, 1907, and his successor was elected February 6, 1907.

William J. Sewell, of New Jersey, died December 27, 1901, and his successor was elected January 29, 1902.

Marcus A. Hanna, of Ohio, died February 15, 1994, and his successor was elected March 2, 1904.

Ambrose E. Burnside died September 13, 1881, and his successor was elected October 5, 1881.

William B. Bate, of Tennessee, died March 9, 1905, and his successor was elected March 21, 1905, and the election on the second Tuesday.

John E. Kenna, of West Virginia, died January 11, 1893, and his successor was elected January 25, 1893.

Matthew H. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, died February 24, 1881, and his successor was elected March 10, 1881.

Asbury C. Latimer died February 20, 1908, and his successor was elected March 6, 1908.

So in all the cases in every other State where a vacancy has occurred in the representation in the Senate from such State during the session of the legislature that legislature has conformed to the statute and waited before filling the vacancy until the second Tuesday after notice of the vacancy.

Now, I submit, Mr. President, to admit the gentleman holding these credentials to a seat in this body is not only in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, but he has not even a prima facie case which would entitle him to admission. I insist, therefore, to admit Mr. Smith under these circumstances will be to reverse the judgment of the Senate for 40 years, overthrow all precedents, and receive into the membership of this body a person under circumstances which can not for one moment, in my judgment, be justified.

[Extracts from remarks of Mr. Rayner, of Maryland, in favor of the oath being administered. Found in the proceedings of March 26, 1908, Congressional Record, vol. 42, pp. 3940, 3942, 3944.]

Mr. President, * * * I shall be very much mistaken if I can not convince the Senate within a very short time that the Senator from Michigan has fallen into an error upon the question under discussion. I shall do this principally by precedents that I have that I think conclusively settle the matter.

I wish to state, in the first place, that there is no contestant here at all. There is no protest whatever against the seating of the Senator-elect. Gov. Whyte died last Tuesday a week at 7 o'clock. The general assembly of Maryland, then in session, had immediate notice of his death. The law does not speak of any official notice, and does not require any.

On the following Tuesday—that is to say, Tuesday of this week—the two Houses nitiated their proceedings for the election of a Senator to fill the unexpired term of Senator Whyte. They met on Tuesday for that purpose, and yesterday, Wednesday, met in joint convention. The Senator-elect who is present was declared in accordance with the law to have received the majority of votes and to be the duly elected Senator. The legislature of Maryland adjourns next Monday by constitutional limitation. If the Senator is right in what he states, Maryland will be without its proper representation upon this floor.

* * * * * * *

Now, Mr. President, what does this section mean? I want Senators to look at it to see whether I am not right in having all the other sections taken with it. You must construe the whole act of 1866 together. You can not take just one provision of an act and give it a construction without looking at the whole of the act. It means this—and the Senate will come to the conclusion that it means it, and if it comes to any other conclusion it is treading on dangerous ground—that an election for United States Senator shall not take place in any event until the second Tuesday after the organization, and it does not mean anything else.

It can not mean anything else without rendering the section absolutely absurd. All those three sections taken together simply mean that an election for United States Senator shall not in any event be held until the second Tuesday after the legislature has organized; and the question of notice has nothing to do with it. After the legislature has organized and there is a vacancy I submit the legislature has a pefect right, if the second Tuesday has expired, to proceed immediately to the election of a United States Senator, no matter upon what date it took place and no matter when the notice may have been given.

I appeal to every lawyer upon this floor whether there is any other possible construction to be given to this section unless you render it absolutely nugatory in its terms. I want to call attention to this because this is a matter of great importance. The sixteenth section provides for the election of a Senator in regular form, and it has these words in it:

"Shall proceed on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization."

Now, omitting one section, which merely refers to the proceedings, the next section provides that:

"Where a vacancy occurs at the assembling of the legislature the legislature shall again proceed upon the second Tuesday after the meeting."

In this section when the vacancy occurs during the session of the legislature it says, "similar proceedings to fill such vacancy shall be had on the second Tuesday."

It is ridiculous, because there may be no vacancy, as I have shown, and was not in this case until the second Tuesday had expired. Every statute must receive a sensible construction. The Senate will give the construction to this statute that it would receive in any judicial forum. You must take these three sections together and the purport of them is what I have said now frequently.

* * * * * * *

Even if this Tuesday was not the second Tuesday, if the construction of the Senator from Michigan is a correct construction, if this statute is mandatory and not directoory, if the verdict of the Maryland Legislature can be set aside by the Senate of the United States, then I contend that upon an unbroken line of authority, the credentials being in proper form, the Senator has the right to be sworn in, and the question must go, if at all, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections after he takes his oath and is seated in this body. I will give the cases on that point, and I think there is no question about it. I ask the Senator from Michigan to give me a single case where a Senator was ever denied the right to be sworn in when his credentials were proper and were right or where they were collaterally impeached, and he was prevented from taking the oath of office. In all these contested-election cases that went to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where they were controverted and disputed, some of them taking weeks and months for their adjudication, the Senator was sworn in, and the controversy took place after he took his seat. In none of them did the Senate do what the Senator from Michigan now asks the Senate to do, and that is, to send it to the committee, where, perhaps, we can not get a decision until after our legislature adjourns next Monday.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, I have finished what I wish to say, and I rest upon these four propositions: First, that the section is not entitled to the interpretation the Senator from Michigan puts upon it; second, that the section is only directory, not mandatory; third, the State of Maryland has decided it; and fourth, if I am all wrong in everything else I have said, the Senator elect is now entitled to be sworn in, and this question should go to the committee, as has been done in every other case, for further examination. I ask, therefore, that the Senator be sworn in.

[Extract from debate as found in Congressional Record, vol. 42, p. 3349.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ought to have asked the question earlier. The Senator asked, What is the use of delay; why refer anything to a committee? When a demurrer to a complaint is filed, and as a matter of fact the court knows the facts and everybody else knows the facts, but the case has not been tried, the question could be asked, What is the use of referring this case to a jury to try the facts or to the court to hear it? We know it all now.

Mr. KNOX. I think, Mr. President, that the Senator is most unfortunate in his reference to a proceeding in court. The Senate is the absolute, uncontrolled judge of this matter. No other authority or no other power on earth can intervene between us and the decision of the question of the qualification of anyone who presents himself here for admission to this body.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator this question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course, everybody concedes that that is so under the clause of the Constitution that the Senate is the judge, and so forth, but if every question is to be determined by the Senate the moment anybody raises it, what is the use of having a standing Committee on Privileges and Elections at all, and if we should investigate the facts in one case in a regular manner, why not in another case in a regular manner, even though we all know what they may be in one instance and do not in another?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I will come in just a moment to reply to the question suggested by the Senator from Indiana. It is perfectly foolish for the Senate to stop and consider a thing that is openly admitted upon the floor of the Senate to be the fact if it raises a question that we must ultimately deal with. We have, upon the face of the credentials presented, the statement that Senator Smith was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Whyte. We have it upon the face of the record that Senator Whyte died upon a particular day, and we certainly can take notice of the flight of time between the date of the death of Senator Whyte and the date specified upon the credentials as the date when Mr. Smith was elected. So that I say, Mr. President, that every single fact that bears upon this question is in full possession of the Senate.

I only want to say one word as to the section of the Revised Statutes that has been referred to. It was made perfectly clear by the distinguished chairman of the committee that as that bill was originally reported to the Senate it only provided for one thing, namely, that when a vacancy shall occur during the session of the legislature the legislature shall proceed on the second Tuesday after notice of the vacancy to elect a successor. When the bill with that provision in it was reported to the Senate, the Senate said, "Nay; there is one thing yet that we must provide, and that is that the legislature under such circumstances must have been organized." So an amendment was inserted, and the law as it stands now provides that two things must concur—first, that the legislature must be duly organized and, second, that its action must follow not earlier than the second Tuesday after notice of the fact of death.

The full debate on this case will be found in the Congressional Record, volume 42, pages 3938–3955.

VOTE ON THE CASE.

Mr. Burrows submitted the following resolution as a substitute for the motion of Mr. Rayner:

"Resolved, That the credentials of John Walter Smith, claiming a seat in the Senate from the State of Maryland, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

On the question to agree to the resolution,

It was determined in the negative, by the following vote:

Yeas.—Messrs. Aldrich, Ankeny, Brandegee, Bulkeley, Burnham, Burrows, Crane, Curtis, Depew, Dick, Dillingham, Dixon, Dolliver, du Pont, Elkins, Flint, Foraker, Gallinger, Gamble, Hopkins, Kean, Knox, Lodge, Long, Nelson, Smith, Sutherland, and Wetmore—28.

Nays.—Messrs. Bankhead, Beveridge, Borah, Bourne, Brown, Burkett, Clay, Culberson, Foster, Frazier, Frye, Gary, Gore, Guggenheim, Heyburn, Johnston, La Follette, McCreary, McCumber, McEnery, McLaurin, Owen, Overman, Paynter, Perkins, Piles, Platt, Rayner, Richardson, Smoot, Stephenson, Taylor, Teller, and Warren—34.

So the resolution was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. Rayner that the oath prescribed by law be administered to Mr. Smith,

The motion was agreed to.

Whereupon,

Mr. Smith appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice President, he took his seat in the Senate. (Cong. Rec., vol. 42, pp. 3954–3955.)

[Sixty-first Congress, second and third session.]

WILLIAM LORIMER,

Of Illinois.

FIRST INVESTIGATION.

Mr. Lorimer took his seat in the United States Senate on June 18, 1909, as a Senator from the State of Illinois, having been elected by the Forty-sixth General Assembly of Illinois on the ninety-fifth joint ballot, May 26, 1909. Over a year later, May 28, 1910, he made a speech in the Senate in the form of an answer to the charges contained in an article printed in the Chicago Tribune of April 30, 1910, bearing the signature of one Charles A. White, a member of the Forty-sixth General Assembly of Illinois, asserting that he (White) had been paid $1,000 to vote for Mr. Lorimer. At the conclusion of his speech Mr. Lorimer introduced a resolution demanding an investigation of this charge by the Senate. June 7, 1910, Clifford W. Barnes, president of the Legislative Voters' League of the State of Illinois, filed charges in the Senate against Mr. Lorimer, alleging on information and belief that three members of the legislature who voted for Mr. Lorimer for United States Senator had been bribed to do so. These charges were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

On June 20, 1910, the Senate of the United States passed a resolution authorizing and directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or a subcommittee thereof, to investigate "certain charges against William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and to report to the Senate whether in the election of said William Lorimer as a Senator from the State of Illinois, there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices."

December 21, 1910, the Committee on Privileges and Elections presented its report to the Senate of the United States. The report exonerated Mr. Lorimer and found:

"In our opinion the title of Mr. Lorimer to a seat in the Senate has not been shown to be invalid by the use or employment of corrupt methods or practices."

The report held that Mr. Lorimer himself could not in the remotest degree be implicated in any personal act of bribery or corrupt practices of any nature; that while four members of the General Assembly which elected Mr. Lorimer testified to receiving money as a consideration for their votes, circumstances tended to render the testimony of each and all the witnesses of doubtful value; that the majority for Mr. Lorimer in the joint assembly of the two houses of the general assembly was 14 and unless a sufficient number of those votes were obtained by corrupt means to deprive him of this majority, Mr. Lorimer had a good title to his seat; that even if it were admitted that the four members who voted for Mr. Lorimer were bribed to do so, he still had a majority of the votes cast in the assembly, and his election was valid, for there were no facts or circumstances from which it could be found or legally inferred that any other member or members of the said general assembly were bribed to vote for Mr. Lorimer. The report further held that no warrant could be found in the testimony for believing that any of the legislators who were accused of bribe giving had been moved to vote for Mr. Lorimer by corrupt influences so their votes should in no way be excluded, and that if there was money in the legislature and distributed by these men it was from a fund which was neither raised nor expended to promote the election of Mr. Lorimer as a Senator nor to reward those who voted for him for that office.

Two members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections submitted their views to the Senate dissenting from the report of the majority of the committee, and one of them, Mr. Beveridge, on January 9, 1911, submitted a resolution declaring that Mr. Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States.

The report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the resolution of Mr. Beveridge were discussed and debated on the floor of the Senate at various times until March 1, 1911, when the resolution was determined in the negative by a vote of 46 to 40.

The history of the first case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings of the Senate bearing on the case, as published in the Congressional Record, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with the views of the minority of the committee, a statement of the days on which the question was debated in the Senate, references to the prepared speeches and statements for and against the committee report as found in the Congressional Record, and a record of the vote taken on Mr. Beveridge's resolution.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE.

[Sixty-first Congress, first session.]

FRIDAY, JUNE 18, 1909.

Mr. Cullom presented the credentials of William Lorimer, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Illinois a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1909, which were read and filed. The oath prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. Lorimer, he took his seat in the Senate. (Cong. Rec., vol. 44, p. 3437.)

[Sixty-first Congress, second session.]

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1910.

Mr. Lorimer of Illinois rose to a question of personal privilege and made a speech demanding an investigation of the charges made by the Chicago Tribune (Chicago, Ill.), under date of April 30, 1910, that his seat in the United States Senate was secured by bribery and corruption. At the conclusion of which he introduced the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate (S. Res., 247):

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to examine the allegations recently made in the public press, charging that bribery and corruption were practiced in the election of William Lorimer to a seat in the United States Senate, and to ascertain the facts in connection with these charges, and report as early as possible; and for that purpose the committee shall have authority to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer and such other additional help as it shall deem necessary; and the committee is authorized to act through a subcommittee; and its expense shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate." (Cong. Rec., vol. 45, pp. 7019–7070.)

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1910.

Mr. Kean, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution (S. Res., 247) submitted by Mr. Lorimer May 28, reported it favorably without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which was agreed to. (Cong. Rec., vol. 45, p. 7190.)

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1910.

Mr. Cullom of Illinois presented a memorial from Clifford W. Barnes, as president of the Legislative Voters' League of the State of Illinois, alleging in substance that the election of William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, was secured by bribery. This statement was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed. (Cong. Rec., vol. 45, pp. 7528–7537.)

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1910.

Mr. Burrows, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate (S. Res. 264):

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate certain charges against William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and to report to the Senate whether in the election of said William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from said State of Illinois there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices; that said committee or subcommittee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress, to hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall seem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths, and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee." (Cong. Rec., vol. 45, p. 8452.)

MONDAY, JUNE 20, 1910.

Mr. Kean, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution (S. Res. 264), reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections by Mr. Burrows on the 18th instant, reported it with amendment; and it was agreed to by the Senate. (Cong. Rec., vol. 45, p. 8501.)

[Sixty-first Congress, third session.]

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1910.

Mr. Burrows, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred Senate resolution 264, directing an investigation into certain charges made against William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, submitted the following report (No. 942), together with the testimony taken before the subcommittee, and asked that it be printed and laid on the table:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Burrows (chairman), Depew, Beveridge, Dillingham, Gamble, Heyburn, Bulkeley, Bailey, Frazier, Paynter, Johnston, and Fletcher.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.
DECEMBER 21, 1910.—Ordered to be printed.

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred certain charges relating to the election of William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, by the legislature of that State, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

On the 7th day of June, 1910, there was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections a memorial signed by one Clifford W. Barnes, as president of the Legislative Voters' League, of Chicago, Ill., alleging in substance that the election of William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, was secured by bribery. These charges are set forth at length in the proceedings of the Senate for June 7, 1910.

On the 20th day of June, 1910, the Senate adopted a resolution authorizing and directing said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, to investigate said charges. In pursuance of the authority conferred and direction given by the Senate in said resolution, a subcommittee was appointed, consisting of Mr. Burrows, chairman, Mr. Gamble, Mr. Heyburn, Mr. Bulkeley, Mr. Frazier, Mr. Paynter, and Mr Johnston.

It was thought by the subcommittee to be advisable to make this investigation at the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois. Accordingly the subcommittee met in that city on the 20th of September, 1910, and proceeded to execute the order of the Senate.

A large number of witnesses were examined and all the available information which, in the judgment of the subcommittee would be of any value in the investigation, was obtained and considered.

It appears from the evidence that Mr. Lorimer was elected a Senator from the State of Illinois on the 26th day of May, 1909, by a joint assembly of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois, receiving 108 votes out of 202 that were cast for the several candidates for that office, as follows:

Albert J. Hopkins	70
William Lorimer	108
Lawrence B. Stringer	24

Votes required to elect.

The question is raised by counsel whether the language of the statute regulating the election of United States Senators requires that in order to elect a Senator the person elected must receive a majority of the votes of all the members elected to each house of the legislature, or whether it is sufficient if one person receives a majority of all the votes cast in the joint assembly, "a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting." This question seems to have been decided by the Senate in the case of Lapham and Miller (Senate Election Cases, 697). In that case it was held that a majority of a quorum of each house is sufficient to elect, and in that decision the committee concur.

Bribery.

In a number of cases that have been before the Senate of the United States it has been held that to invalidate the election of a Senator on account of bribery it must be made to appear either—

(1) That the person elected participated in one or more acts of bribery or attempted bribery, or sanctioned or encouraged the same; or

(2) That by bribery or corrupt practices enough votes were obtained for him to change the result of the election.

At what was practically the outset of the investigation, counsel for the Chicago Tribune (who conducted the inquiry against Senator Lorimer) announced that he did not expect to connect Senator Lorimer with any acts of bribery, and upon this point the following took place (Record, p. 66):

"Senator HEYBURN. I would suggest it might be well for you here to state what you expect to prove, in order that we may apply the law as to such proof.

"Mr. AUSTRIAN. I expect to prove——

"Senator BULKELEY. Do you expect to connect Mr. Lorimer with this?

"Mr. AUSTRIAN. No, sir; not in that way at all.

"Judge HANECY. That is, you do not intend to connect Senator Lorimer?

"Mr. AUSTRIAN. I personally do not intend to connect Senator Lorimer. The statement made here by the witnesses that they had some talk with Mr. Lorimer, the committee will please understand, of course, these witnesses, I have never talked with—never talked with but two of the witnesses who will be called upon the witness stand.

"Judge HANECY. You do not claim that any witness will say that he ever talked with Senator Lorimer about money?

"Mr. AUSTRIAN. I know of no one.

"Judge HANECY. You say, in that connection, you said that they would show that they had some conversation with Senator Lorimer?

"Mr. AUSTRIAN. Oh, they had, but what that conversation was I do not know.

"Judge HANECY. But not in relation to the payment of money or any corrupt practice, you do not mean?

"Mr. AUSTRIAN. I should say not."

And that he did not contend that "he (Senator Lorimer) had anything to do with it." (Record, p. 80.)

It will be remembered that on the 28th of May, 1910, shortly after the charges appeared in the public press, Senator Lorimer in the open Senate denied any act of bribery on his part in connection with his election in the most emphatic terms, and demanded an investigation by presenting the following resolution (Cong. Record, vol. 45, pt. 7, p. 7020):

"In the Senate of the United States.

"May 28, 1910.

"Mr. Lorimer submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"'Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to examine the allegations recently made in the public press, charging that bribery and corruption were practiced in the election of William Lorimer to a seat in the United States Senate, and to ascertain the facts in connection with these charges, and report as early as possible; and for that purpose the committee shall have authority to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer and such other additional help as it shall deem necessary; and the committee is authorized to act through a subcommittee; and its expense shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.'"

It should further be stated that there was no testimony offered during the investigation which would tend in the remotest degree to implicate Senator Lorimer in any personal act of bribery or attempted bribery or corrupt practices of any nature.

It is claimed, however, that several members of the legislature were, in fact, bribed to vote for Mr. Lorimer, and if established it remains to inquire whether a sufficient number of members of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois were bribed to vote for Senator Lorimer to render his election to that office invalid.

It was to this question that the evidence taken on the investigation was chiefly directed, and the subcommittee who made the investigation not only heard the testimony but observed the witnesses while on the stand, their demeanor while testifying, their apparent candor or want of candor in giving their testimony, and other indicia of the truth or falsity of the story they were telling.

Four members of the general assembly which elected Mr. Lorimer testified to receiving money as a consideration for their votes. The members who thus confessed their own infamy were Charles A. White, Michael Link, H. J. C. Beckemeyer, and Daniel W. Holstlaw.

Charles A. White.

The chief of these self-accusers and the one on whose testimony the whole fabric of the accusation largely depends was Charles A. White, a member of the lower house of the Illinois General Assembly. White seems to have developed early in his legislative career an insatiable desire to secure a pecuniary compensation for his official acts, and he also appears to have suspected his fellow members of the general assembly of being as corrupt as himself. He endeavored to induce the chairman of an important committee to defer reporting a bill in order to extort money from those who were interested in its passage. After Mr. Lorimer had been elected to the Senate, White tried to obtain information from another member of the house whether money had not been used to promote Senator Lorimer's election. This inquiry not only shows his corrupt character, but also casts suspicion upon the truth of his story that he had been bribed to vote for the successful candidate for Senator.

After wasting his salary and other means in riotous living, White appears to have conceived the plan of claiming to have been bribed in connection with the senatorial election as a basis for extorting money from Senator Lorimer. This purpose he reveals to two of his friends and then attempts to put it into execution. In this he signally fails, as appears from the following correspondence:

O'FALLON, ILL., December 4, 1909.

HON. WM. H. LORIMER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am preparing to place before the people of this country an article I have written giving my true experience as a member of the Illinois legislature. The article will appear either in book form or will be published in one of the largest magazines in the United States.

I have just completed the manuscript, which contains about 30,000 words, giving in detail my absolutely true experiences as a member of the forty-sixth general assembly. As yet I have not closed a deal with any publishing house, but when my terms are acceptable will dispose of it.

I have been offered a sum sufficient to value the manuscript at about $2.50 per word.

Believing that you would be more than deeply interested in the works and actions of the members of the last session of the Illinois legislature, owing to the fact that possibly your experience with that general assembly will be one of the questions freely discussed, and assuring you that I have severed all connections with the party leaders, as I am to be independent in the future in all my political dealings,

I am, respectfully, yours, CHAS. A. WHITE.

(Record, p. 125.)

To this communication Senator Lorimer replied as follows:

Hon. CHARLES A. WHITE, O'Fallon, Ill.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of December 4 in which you advise me that you have manuscript ready to place with publishers treating of your experience as a member of the Illinois Legislature.

I would be very glad indeed to know of your success as an author.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Very truly, yours, WILLIAM LORIMER.

(Record, p. 164.)

Questioned by the committee as to his purpose in writing Senator Lorimer, Mr. White testified:

"Senator PAYNTER. If I understood you, Mr. White, correctly, that you hoped to get a letter from Senator Lorimer that you could use in connection with this publication?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Well, by that I suppose that you expected a letter from Senator Lorimer that might aid to support your charges. Is that the hope you had in the matter?—A. Yes, sir; I had no evidence against Senator Lorimer directly, and had no dealings with him.

"Q. The letter recites in substance, I do not remember the exact language, that you had been made an offer or some inducement had been held out that indicated that the manuscript was worth $2.25 a word—or $2.50 a word, I mean. That is the language of it. 'I have been offered a sum sufficient to value the manuscript at about $2.50 per word.' Suppose that Senator Lorimer had placed the same value upon the manuscript that you did, and had offered you $75,000, would you have taken it?—A. I would have let him have the manuscript.

Q. For $75,000. Would you have accepted $75,000 if he had offered it to you?—A. I don't think I would; if I had I might have turned it over to somebody else.

"Q. You would have turned the money over to some one else?—A. I might have done that." (Record, p. 126.)

Thereafter, Mr. White attempted to sell his story to eastern publications and subsequently did contract to sell it to the Chicago Tribune for the sum of $3,500, a part of White's agreement being that he would assist in substantiating the correctness of his story. This agreement was reduced to writing and is as follows:

[Exhibit 5.]

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, OFFICE OF PUBLISHER,
Chicago, Ill., April 29, 1910.

TO CHARLES A. WHITE:

You offered to sell to us for publication a story written by you, which story gives your experiences while a member of the House of Representatives of Illinois during 1909-10, and giving also certain information as to what transpired by reason of your voting for certain measures, etc., while a member of such house.

We refused to pay you for that story or to print the same unless such story was verified and corroborated by persons selected by the Tribune.

For more than four weeks we, with your cooperation, through different agencies, have caused your story to be fully investigated.

For the sole and exclusive right hereby granted by you to the Tribune Co. to publish this story or a revision thereof or excerpts therefrom in the Chicago Tribune and copyright it either in your name or in that of the Tribune Co., but in which shall be at our election, and also in full compensation for the time already spent by you in assisting us in obtaining corroborative evidence of the facts contained in this story, and in full payment for all your time, which shall be devoted by you to further substantiate this story at any time, which time you hereby agree to devote to that purpose as and when called upon so to do, the Tribune Co. hereby agrees to pay you $3,250, of which said sum $1,250 shall be paid upon the printing of the said story or the first installment thereof, $1,000 thirty days after said first payment, and $1,000 sixty days thereafter.

You reserve to yourself all book or other rights to the story other than the exclusive newspaper rights hereinbefore referred to, which belong under the terms hereof to the Tribune Co.

J. KEELEY,
Vice President Tribune Co.

CHICAGO, ILL., April —, 1910.

TO THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE AND THE TRIBUNE CO.

GENTLEMEN: I have read the above and foregoing and agree to the terms thereof, and to accept the sums of money as therein set forth, and I further agree to devote my time and services to substantiate the story referred to as and when requested by you so to do and in such manner as you may direct.

CHAS. A. WHITE.

White's account of the alleged bribery of himself is given circumstantially and in detail, but in this he has been shown to have falsified in several important particulars concerning which he could not have been mistaken had his narrative been true. Among other things he stated that Browne came to his room shortly before the election of Senator Lorimer and that two men named Yarborough were then in the room. But it was proved by two reputable and creditable witnesses that on the evening in question one of these men was in Chicago.

Without further reference to the details of White's testimony, it may be said that after seeing, observing, and hearing this witness it was the opinion of a majority of the subcommittee that no credence ought to be given to any part of his testimony tending to establish the fact of bribery. And after carefully reading the testimony given by White in the investigation, a majority of the committee concur in the opinion of the subcommittee in that regard.

Michael Link.

According to the testimony of this witness, he was paid the sum of $1,000 by Lee O'Neil Browne some time after Mr. Lorimer had been elected to the Senate. He further testified that no money was paid or promised him before he voted for Mr. Lorimer; that he made up his mind as early as in the month of March, 1909, to vote for Mr. Lorimer if an opportunity for so doing should occur, and promised Mr. Lorimer his vote some time in advance of the election of a Senator. When accused of having received money for voting for Mr. Lorimer he denied it. When summoned before a grand jury he stated under oath that he had not received any money as a consideration for his vote for Senator. Following this statement he was compelled, by means fully set forth in his testimony, to retract his former statement and testify to having received money for his vote for Mr. Lorimer, as shown by the following:

Cross-examination by Judge HANECY:

Q. You are a farmer, I believe, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have been all your manhood life?—A. All my life; born on a farm.

Q. You have lived in Madison County for how long?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. You live out some distance from——A. (Interrupting.) A mile from Mitchell, a little station.

Q. When were you first elected to the legislature?—A. In November, 1906.

Q. Is it not a fact that everybody from the southern part of Illinois, Republicans and Democrats, who desire to meet each other at any place generally go to St. Louis?—A. Yes, sir; from time to time men for years have met members of the legislature there.

Q. Was it very much easier to go to St. Louis than to any other town that has any hotel accommodations south of the central part of Illinois?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is very much easier to go there than from any other part of southern or central Illinois than it is to go to Chicago, isn't it—very much easier to go to St. Louis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is practically a uniform practice, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When anybody, for political or other reasons, want two or three to get together for any purpose, they meet at St. Louis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That has been the case for a great many years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Tierney and White talk with you or come down there more than once?—A. Not White; Tierney was there the second time, and I pretty nearly forgot the incident, when I met him somewhere about Mitchell, about the station. I went in for my mail, or, perhaps, to buy something.

Q. Did he try to get some information from you or try to get some admissions from you?—A. He certainly did.

Q. Did he tell you that he was a detective connected with the Maguire and White Detective Agency, detectives for the Chicago Tribune?—A. No; he said he represented Gov. Deneen.

Q. You were then summoned or told to come up here?—A. Yes, sir; by subpœna.

Q. And you did come up?—A. I certainly came up.

Q. When you came up where did you go?—A. I went to the Morrison Hotel.

Q. Then did you go to the State's attorney's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you went to the State's attorney's office did you see Mr. Wayman, the State's attorney, or Mr. Arnold, or Mr. Marshall?—A. Mr. Arnold and Mr. Marshall, I think; I did not see Mr. Wayman.

Q. Which one did you see?—A. I think it was Mr. Marshall, I am not positive; I rather think it was.

Q. It was one of the assistant State's attorneys?—A. Yes, sir; one of the assistant state's attorneys.

Q. Tell the conversation, the language used by each as nearly as possible, and if you can not do that, give the substance as nearly as you can.—A. Well, I had a conversation with Mr. Marshall something like this: He says to me, "If I were you I would not be here telling damned lies before this grand jury; I would tell the truth." Then I told him he would not tell me that outside very well or we might mix.

Q. Had you been before the grand jury then?—A. I think I had; yes, sir.

Q. What I want to do is to commence before—just before you were taken to the grand-jury room, and I would like to have you——A. (Interrupting.) I didn't have any particular conversation to my recollection with anyone of the assistant State's attorneys.

Q. You went there, you don't remember how, and was taken before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir; when my turn came.

Q. They asked you there in relation to your voting for Senator Lorimer for United States Senator?—A. I was in the grand-jury room; yes, sir.

Q. That is what I wanted to know.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were examined by whom?—A. By Mr. Wayman.

Q. By Mr. Wayman himself?—A. By Mr. Wayman himself; yes, sir.

Q. What did he ask in relation to that subject? I don't care about anything else.—A. He asked me if I voted for Senator Lorimer, and I told him yes. According to my recollection I told him, "Certainly, I voted for Senator Lorimer and was proud of it; no excuses to make."

Q. What took place then? Did he ask you if you had been paid anything for voting for Senator Lorimer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you tell him?—A. I absolutely denied it.

Q. You didn't tell this to Mr. Wayman individually, but in answering his question to the whole grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All the conversation you had with Mr. Wayman in the grand-jury room was public conversation before the grand jury?—A. That is all at that time. I had some conversation—at that time—yes, sir—at that time.

Senator BURROWS. State what you said before the grand jury.—A. Well, I answered questions, but I disremember what all the questions he asked me were.

Senator BURROWS. State those you can remember and your replies.—A. I denied receiving any money for voting for Senator Lorimer.

By Judge HANECY:

Q. Then did you leave the grand-jury room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After those different questions were asked you?—A. Yes, sir; at that time I did.

Q. Do you remember what day of the week or day of the month that was you first went before the grand jury?—A. That was the 5th or 7th of May; it was right along there, the early days of May.

Q. May of this year?—A. Yes, sir; May of this year.

Q. When you left the grand jury-room were you put in the custody of an officer?—A. I certainly was.

Q. Were you indicted at that time or was there any complaint or charge made against you at any place?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who put you in charge of an officer?—A. Well, I presume Mr. Wayman did. To my knowledge I was in charge directly of an officer.

Q. Who was the officer?—A. Well, there were two or three different officers.

Q. The first one?—A. I disremember his name. Mr. O'Keefe was with me most of the time.

Q. Was it Oake?—A. I think that is his name.
Q. He was the first officer?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He was a police officer, a detective appointed to the State's attorney's office at that time?—A. Yes; I understood so.
Q. Did he take charge of you at that time?—A. Certainly.
Q. How long did you remain in his custody?—A. I disremember.
Q. About?—A. The first night I think I went to dinner with him—the first night, I believe; that would be on Wednesday night of the week; and I remained in his custody and he kept his eye on me like a was a criminal. Oake would not allow me to telephone to friends, and was keeping his eye on me, and I was not allowed to discuss any matters at all.
Q. Was he armed at the time, and did he take out his revolver and his billie and put them on the table in the hotel, so you could see them?—A. He did not, but other detectives did; I suppose he was armed, but I don't know to my knowledge.
Q. Other officers did?—A. Other officers did.
Q. Were you continuously in the charge of some officer of the State's attorney's office, after that time?—A. I certainly was.
Q. Up to what time?—A. Until I was permitted to go home on Saturday morning.
Q. What day?—A. It was the week I was here; I disremember—it was from the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, or 9th, or something of that kind, of May.
Senator BURROWS. It was Saturday morning of that week?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You came up here what day of the week?—A. I came here Tuesday evening.

By Judge HANECY:

Q. You went before the State's attorney—went before the grand jury Wednesday morning, did you?—A. I believe so.
Q. When you went back home again, did an officer go with you?—A. Not at that time.
Q. Did an officer from the State's attorney's office come down and get you afterwards?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When, after that Saturday morning that you went home?—A. That was the—well—I wish to correct that. I got a subpœna served to me to go to Springfield on my return home Saturday evening of this week. I went to Springfield from this subpœna and acknowledged it, and a detective went home with me from Springfield and stayed with me.
Q. That was a subpœna to appear before the grand jury at Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When was that?—A. That was the week following I was here.
Q. Was it the first of the week or the middle of the week or the last?—A. Well, I think it was on Monday following the Saturday I left Chicago.
Q. When did you leave Springfield to go home?—You got there Monday?—A. That evening.
Q. Monday evening?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did an officer from the State's attorney's office of Cook County go with you back home from Springfield on Monday evening?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did he take you into custody?—A. Well, I was not arrested.
Q. Did he stay with you there all the time?—A. He went to my house, but went to St. Louis, I believe, one day while at my house in the country; but he went home with me and stayed with me, but, of course, he went to St. Louis during one day.
Q. He was with you wherever you went?—A. Yes, sir.
Senator PAYNTER. Was that officer from Chicago or Springfield?—A. Chicago.
Senator GAMBLE. How long was he with you?—A. Four days.
Q. At your home?—A. Until I insisted upon having him called off.
Q. Did he stay at your home?—A. Yes, sir.

By Judge HANECY:

Q. All the time?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Except when you went out, and then he went with you?—A. He went to St. Louis during that time by himself.
Q. How far are you from St. Louis, about?—A. About 15 miles.
Q. You can go there by electric line?—A. Yes, sir; and get back in two or three hours, at any time.
Q. Then did another officer—I will withdraw that—did the State's attorney of Sangamon County, Springfield, send any officer with you after you had been examined there before the grand jury?—A. No, sir.
Q. He never had you in custody?—A. No, sir; they don't use those methods.
Q. When the officer left Springfield—the officer from the State's attorney's office in Cook County left with you to go to your home from Springfield—did he have any warrant against you?—A. No, sir.

Senator GAMBLE. Was there any warrant for your arrest?—A. No, sir.

Senator GAMBLE. Or a subpœna served on you?—A. A subpœna to appear at Springfield.

By Judge HANECY:

Q. After you left Springfield and went back home was there any supbœna or warrant against you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was that officer's name?—A. That was O'Keefe that called for me.

Senator JOHNSTON. What did the officer say he accompanied you from Springfield for?—A. He claimed it was for my own protection. I told him positively that I needed no protection; that I could protect myself.

Q. Did he insist upon staying at your house?—A. He was under orders from a gentleman in Chicago.

Q. Who was the next officer who had charge of you?—A. Well, I think after that time I was under the direction of O'Keefe until I read what is called the "riot act" to Wayman.

Q. When was that?—A. That was about a week before the first Browne trial, when I told Wayman no more detectives for me. "If you have got a warrant, arrest me; if I am guilty of anything arrest me; but no more detectives; I shall not submit to detectives any longer." That was my conversation.

Q. Did O'Keefe then go to Chicago with you and stay with you at the different hotels or wherever you were kept?—A. He did until a week before the Browne trial; then no more detectives after that for me.

Q. He did stay here until that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The first trial of Browne commenced about the 7th to the 10th of June; that is right, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Now, after you were before this grand jury, the first grand jury, and told Mr. Wayman, the State's attorney, and the grand jury that you never got any money from anybody, Browne or anybody else, for voting for Lorimer for United States Senator, were you indicted?—A. I was indicted for perjury either the second or third day I was here—I am not positive which—after my denial.

Q. Was it the second or third day after you first went before the grand jury?—A. It was either the second or third day, I guess the second. I am not positive whether the second or third day.

Q. You were indicted for peujrry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the same grand jury you had been before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you were indicted for perjury were you taken by the State's attorney or any of his assistants and talked with about your testimony and about your indictment?—A. I guess I was.

Q. Now, what was the first thing that was done after you were indicted for perjury by him?—A. They kept flaunting the indictment for perjury against me.

Q. Doing what?—A. Putting it in front of my face, showing it to me and speaking to me.

Senator GAMBLE. Who did that?—A. The asistant State's attorney and the State's attorney himself.

Q. Tell the names of the assistant State's attorneys.—A. Mr. Marshall.

Q. Did State's Attorney Wayman do that, too?—A. He didn't throw it in my face; he would show it to me and talk to me about losing my home, putting my home on one side and the penitentiary on the other.

Q. State to this honorable committee what State's Attorney Wayman told you about the indictment for perjury.—A. He told me if I would go before the grand jury and state that I had received some money from Browne and Robert E. Wilson that I would be cleared and go home a free man. That is what he told me.

Senator BURROWS. Anything else said?—A. Well, I told him that I had told him all I knew, and he denied that I had. We kept up the conversation, and he said he was a farmer himself in his early days South. I told him I was a farmer, and he told me, he says: "You come up here"—the conversation drifted along this line—"and let these Chicago lawyers get a hold of you and they will take your farm away from you." That was the line of talk; and he told me to rest over that night—that was Friday evening—and to come in by 10 o'clock on Saturday morning and make a confession, and he would have the perjury charge expunged from the record, and I would go home a free man. That was the sum and substance of the conversation.

Q. They had more than an hour to talk to you about that?—A. Yes, sir; something of that kind.

Q. What time of day was that conversation; what time did it end?—A. It was somewhere between 5.20 and 6.30; it was 6.30 when I left the Criminal Court Building that evening.

Q. Then were you put in the custody of an officer when you left the State's attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was that officer?—A. That was Mr. O'Keefe.

Q. What did he do with you?—A. He took me back to the Morrison Hotel.

Q. Did he stay there with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it he that took his revolver, billie out and put it on the table in your presence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he talk with you about what the State's attorney talked to you about—about your going back and telling what the State's attorney wanted you to tell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Detective O'Keefe from the State's attorney's office say to you in that respect?—A. He said: "Link, I wouldnot stand by the other fellows, I would stand by Wayman, he is the man to stand by in this matter; make a confession. I don't like to see you get into trouble and you are going to get into trouble."

Q. Mr. Link, how long during this conversation between you and O'Keefe, how long did O'Keefe talk to you?—A. Off and on, but I disremember the number of times; it was not continuous, of course, but off and on during the time he was with me.

Q. Off and on between the times you and the State's attorney had the talk and he took you back there?—A. Prior to that night, too.

Q. All the time you were in his custody?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did Officer O'Keefe take you back to the State's attorney's office the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be Saturday morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk with, or did Thomas Maguire, of the Maguire & White Detective Agency, talk with you?—A. Yes, sir; he was present nearly every time I met Wayman, and Wayman and myself were in Wayman's room.

Q. What did Maguire say to you?—A. He tried to put words in my mouth several times.

Q. Words about what?—A. He said I should not be friendly to the Browne side, and the Lorimer side, and so forth; "It doesn't look well, Link; that don't look well." I told him it was none of his business; I would take up for my friends wherever I saw fit to take them.

Q. Did Thomas Maguire, the detective, say this to you—that you had better tell what you knew or you would go to the penitentiary; did Maguire say that to you?—A. I rather think one of the assistant State's attorneys told me that; I don't know whether Maguire said that to me or not, but his conversation ran on that line. I think that was Arnold; 20 minutes before 5 o'clock that evening of that week.

Q. What was that conversation you had with Assistant State's Attorney Arnold in which he said that to you?—A. Mr. Arnold came to me and says, "Link, you have got just 20 minutes to save your life." I says, "What do you mean?" He says, "You have got just 20 minutes to go in and tell all you know to save your life." I says, "I have told all I know." He says, "All right, Link, it is your funeral; it is not mine." He goes into the grand jury room and an indictment was returned that evening. I told him I had told all I knew.

Senator PAYNTER. An indictment against you?—A. Yes, sir; for perjury.

Q. Arnold said that you——A. He said I had 20 minutes to save my life.

Q. That was just before——A. (Interrupting.) Twenty minutes before the grand jury adjourned at 5 o'clock, Friday afternoon or evening.

Q. Were you told that night that you were in the custody of an officer of the State's attorney and that you had been indicted for perjury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who told you that? Was it a detective or one of the assistant State's attorneys?—A. It was, I think, Mr. Wayman himself that told me that.

Q. Mr. Wayman himself told you that?—A. I think so.

Q. Did Mr. Arnold say to you in that conversation that you have been referring to, just before you were indicted for perjury, that if you didn't tell what they wanted you to that they would send you to the penitentiary?—A. That it was my funeral; yes, sir.

Q. Did he use the word "penitentiary"—that he would send you to the penitentiary?—A. I am not quite certain; I am not positive; but he used that kind of terms to me.

Q. Did he lay special stress upon the word "penitentiary" in talking to you?—A. Mr. Wayman laid more stress on that than any of his assistants.

Q. That is, that he would send you to the penitentiary?—A. He pictured it very, very strenuously between the penitentiary and my home.

Senator BURROWS. Will you state what he said?—A. He said "It will be much better for you to be here with your family than to go to the penitentiary and lose your home." He pictured what the penitentiary was, and so forth.

Senator BURROWS. What did he say?—A. That I might lose my home, and he put a great deal of stress on the penitentiary and my home—I being a farmer away from my home and my family.

Q. Did Mr. Wayman say anything in picturing the penitentiary on one side and your home on the other about your wife?—A. Why, certainly.

Q. Tell the committee what he said.—A. Well, that I would lose my home, and that meant that I would lose my wife, too.

Q. Did he say what would be done if you would go before the grand jury and tell what he wanted you to?—A. That I could go home a free man and not a perjurer in any manner, shape, or form.

Senator BURROWS: If what?—A. If I went before the grand jury and made an acknowledgement.

Senator BURROWS. An acknowledgement of what?—A. If I had received $1,000 from Browne.

Senator FRAZIER. Was that true that you had received $1,000?—A. I shall not deny it; it is true.

Q. Did not the State's attorney say to you that if you would go on and say that you had received $1,000 from Browne for voting for William Lorimer for United States Senator that you could go home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was not true?—A. That was not true; no, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Wayman tell you that you had been indicted and that he would take you before the criminal court for trial on that indictment if you didn't go before the grand jury and tell that body what Mr. Wayman wanted you to tell?—A. Why, certainly; he said I would have to give a bond, and it was a $15,000 bond, and they made it $5,000, I think.

Q. Did Mr. Wayman tell you what he would do if you would go before the grand jury and tell them what he wanted you to tell them? Did he tell you what he would do with the indictment?—A. Nolle pros it and have it expunged from the record, so in future years it would not be on the record.

Q. Did you say to Mr. Wayman, "Well, I will go before the grand jury and lie if I have to; but I don't want to;" did you say that or that in substance?—A. That in substance.

Q. What did you tell the grand jury, then?—A. I told the grand jury that I had received $1,000 from Browne and that I had received $900 through Robert Wilson; that is what I told the grand jury.

Q. Did you tell the grand jury that you had received that money or any part of it for voting for Senator Lorimer for United States Senator?—A. Positively no.

Q. Just before you went before the grand jury that last time did Mr. Wayman tell you that if you would go and tell the grand jury what he wanted you to you would keep out of trouble and keep from disgracing your family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you went before the grand jury with Mr. Wayman the last time and told the grand jury what Mr. Wayman asked you to, what, if anything, did Mr. Wayman or his office do in relation to the indictment against you for perjury?—A. Well, he took me before Judge McSurely, I think it was, and said: "Mr. Link has made a clean breast of the whole affair." I didn't know what he called a "clean breast," but those were his words. I denied making a clean breast of anything except the truth.

Q. Did Mr. Wayman have the indictment against you quashed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He took you before Judge McSurely and asked to have it done, and Judge McSurely did it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you still continue in the custody of the officer?—A. No, sir; he allowed me to go home.

Q. Did he put you in the custody of an officer after that time?—A. Certainly.

Q. When?—A. The following week.

Q. That was Saturday that he dismissed the indictment against you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When, the next week, were you put in the custody of another officer?—A. Monday night or Tuesday night—I think it was Monday night of the following week. A subpœna was served on me to go to Springfield, and immediately on my return home on that Saturday evening—I returned home about 6.30; that is my home town; I didn't get home quite that early.

Q. Did that officer or some other officer from the State's attorney's office keep you in custody all the time—until about the time of the first Browne trial?—A. I wrote a letter to Mr. Wayman that I would not submit to it and told him personally when I came to Chicago no more detectives for me; that I would not play hide and go seek any longer; that I was not a criminal, and that I would not stand for it. I wrote him such a letter from my home, and told him to recall Mr. O'Keefe, which he did.

Q. When was that?—A. After he was with me; I think about four days there.

Q. Do you remember what day of the month that was, or what month?—A. No, sir; it was during the month of May.

Q. When was it with respect to the commencement of the first Browne trial?—A. It was some little time before the commencement of the trial.

Q. About how long?—A. About three or four weeks; perhaps three weeks or something; I don't know. I told him positively that I would not submit to it, and when I saw Mr. Wayman, a week before the first Browne trial, I told him that personally.

Q. What I want to know is, if you were put into the custody of an officer from the State's attorney's office after you were indicted for perjury and that indictment for perjury had been dismissed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were still kept in the custody of an officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any charge against you of any kind that you know of?—A. None whatever.

Q. After that indictment for perjury had been dismissed?—A. Well, by Mr. Wayman's advice I refused to answer questions at Springfield. I had to go to Springfield two or three times, and at his advice refused to answer the questions.

Q. Were you summoned before the grand jury in Springfield as a witness?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Wayman know that you had been summoned as a witness there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he talk with you about whether you should go before the grand jury in response to the subpœna of the court?—A. Not as to whether I should go, but as to whether I should answer certain questions or not.

Q. Did he tell you whether or not you should answer questions that might be asked you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the grand jury or the State's attorney of Sangamon County?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he tell you?—A. He told me not to answer, but to stand on the ground that I might incriminate myself by answering any questions before the grand jury.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Wayman that you were not afraid of incriminating yourself?—A. Certainly; I told him I wanted to answer the questions my way that were put to me there.

Q. What did he say to you?—A. "Don't do it, Link; don't do it."

Q. Did he know that the State's attorney and the grand jury of Sagamon County had summoned you before the grand jury to testify in relation to these matters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he tell you as to the subject matter? Did he tell you not to answer the questions of the State's attorney or the grand jury of Sangamon County?—A. If the senatorial committee please, the question all hinged upon one answer, "No" or "Yes," to one certain question, and that question was, "Did you receive or were you offered or do you know of anybody being offered any money in Springfield for voting on any question?" That was the question, and when I finally got permission from Mr. Wayman, which I answered positively, right straight out, "No." I answered "No." That is all there was about that. He wouldn't let me answer the question at all.

Q. Did you have a conversation in the criminal court building about a week prior to the trial of Lee O'Neill Browne with H. J. C. Beckemeyer, in the criminal court building about a week before the first Browne trial began?—A. Yes, sir; it was just about a week before—a week prior.

Q. Did Beckemeyer say to you, "Our testimony will be alike, word for word?" And did you say, "No, Beck, I have got the best of you; I promised to vote for Lorimer 8 or 10 days before Browne spoke to me about it"—A. That conversation took place.

Q. As I read it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Beckemeyer say to you, "Yes; you have the best of me in that"? Then did you say to Beckemeyer: "Beck, I don't believe that Lorimer ever put up a dollar for his election, or that anybody else ever put up a dollar for him"? And did Beckemeyer say, "I don't believe he did, either"?—A. That was the conversation, word for word, as near as I can remember it.

Q. Did you ever receive any money or any other thing of value from anybody—Browne, Wilson, or anybody else—on condition, or on the promise or agreement or understanding, directly or indirectly, that you were to vote for William Lorimer for United States Senator?—A. I certainly did not.

Senator GAMBLE. Or after he had voted for Lorimer.

Q. Did you ever receive any money from Lee O'Neill Browne, Bob Wilson, or R. E. Wilson, whatever his name is, or anybody else, or from any source whatever, or did you receive any other thing of value at any time from anybody because you had voted for William Lorimer for United States Senator?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there ever any consideration moving to you, or to anybody for you, or for your benefit, in any place, from any source whatever, with the understanding that you were to vote for William Lorimer for United States Senator, or if you had voted for William Lorimer for United States Senator, any consideration of any kind?—A. None whatever.

Q. Did you vote for William Lorimer for United States Senator for any other reason than that you liked him, and that you favored and that your people favored the things he favored in relation to the deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf?—A. That is why I voted for him.

H. J. Beckemeyer.

This witness also testified before the subcommittee that he had received money from Lee O'Neil Browne as a reward for his vote for Senator Lorimer, but he also testifies that no money or other compensation was promised him before he voted for Mr. Lorimer. His experience before the grand jury was similar to that of the witness Michael Link, and as against his declaration last made before the grand jury and repeated to the subcommittee we have his statement to Michael Link denying the use of money in the senatorial election, and also to Robert E. Wilson that he did not get any money for voting for Mr. Lorimer, and if anyone said so he was a liar.

D. W. Holstlaw.

This witness testified that in a conversation with Senator Broderick he told Broderick that he intended to vote for Mr. Lorimer for Senator, to which Broderick replied, "Well, there is $2,500 for you," and that sometime afterwards Broderick paid him $2,500. This witness was also driven to making this statement by certain proceedings taken before a grand jury of Sangamon County, Ill., and in many respects the story told by this witness seemed to the subcommittee to be a highly improbable one.

The circumstances before referred to and many others which might be instanced, tended to render the testimony of each and all the witnesses who have been named, of doubtful value. And in each case in which it was claimed that some member of the Illinois General Assembly had been bribed to vote for Mr. Lorimer, the accusation was positively denied by the person accused of committing the alleged act of bribery. And after a careful examination and consideration of all the evidence submitted, the committee are of the opinion that even if it should be conceded that the four members of the Illinois General Assembly before referred to received money in consideration for their votes for Mr. Lorimer, there are no facts or circumstances from which it could be found or legally inferred that any other member or members of the said general assembly were bribed to vote for Mr. Lorimer.

The majority for Senator Lorimer in the joint assembly of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois was 14. Unless, therefore, a sufficient number of these votes were obtained by corrupt means to deprive him of this majority, Mr. Lorimer has a good title to the seat he occupies in the Senate. If it were admitted that four of the members of the general assembly who voted for Mr. Lorimer were bribed to do so, he still had a majority of the votes cast in the general assembly, and his election was valid.

Case of Browne, Broderick, and Wilson.

It is, however, declared that if the four witnesses before named were bribed to vote for Mr. Lorimer, those who bribed them were equally guilty and that the votes of Browne, Broderick, and Wilson should also be excluded. But the committee can find no warrant in the testimony for believing that either one of said legislators was moved by any corrupt influence. Browne's reasons for voting as he did are clearly set forth in his testimony. He was the leader of a faction of the minority of the house, and for certain political reasons he thought it good policy to aid in the election of some member of the majority party other than those who had received a considerable number of votes in the general assembly.

The suggestion that his vote and the votes of others whom he might be able to influence should be given to Mr. Lorimer was first made to him by the speaker of the Illinois House of Representatives, and there is no suggestion in the testimony that Mr. Shurtleff, in thus attempting to bring about Mr. Lorimer's election, was actuated by any improper motive. And the fact that many members of the minority party in the Illinois General Assembly voted for Mr. Lorimer creates no well-grounded suspicion that they were bribed to do so. It is not the first instance in the history of this country in which the members of the minority party of the legislature of a State have joined a few of the members of the party in the majority in electing a Senator from the ranks of the majority party. As to Senator Broderick, there is no testimony that he was bribed to vote for Mr. Lorimer. He not only emphatically denies that he received any money for his vote, but gives his reasons for voting as he did.

Nor is there any evidence in the record from which a legal inference could be drawn that Representative Wilson was bribed to vote for Senator Lorimer. As is hereinafter stated, if Wilson was guilty of any act of bribery, it was not in connection with the senatorial election. There is, therefore, no good ground for deducting his vote from those received by Mr. Lorimer.

Much of the testimony taken upon the investigation related to the alleged payment of money to members of the General Assembly of Illinois by one Robert E. Wilson. This was denied by Wilson and by others, and after considering all the evidence on that subject, the committee are not prepared to find that the fact is established. But whether the sums of money claimed to have been paid were or were not paid, that fact has no relevancy to the matter which the committee was appointed to investigate. If any money was disbursed by Wilson, it is evident that it was from a fund which was neither raised nor expended to promote the election of Mr. Lorimer as a Senator nor to reward those who voted for him for that office. It was therefore no part of the duty of the subcommittee to inquire into either the origin of the fund or the purpose for which it was used. That matter was and is one for the proper officials of the State of Illinois to take cognizance of and one with which the Senate of the United States has no concern.

The committee submit to the Senate the testimony taken in the investigation, with their report that, in their opinion, the title of Mr. Lorimer to a seat in the Senate has not been shown to be invalid by the use or employment of corrupt methods or practices, and request that they be discharged from further consideration of Senate resolution No. 264.

The undersigned, while fully concurring in the foregoing report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, desires to state herewith his personal reasons therefor:

There was a vacancy in the Senate from Illinois to be filled by the legislature in the constitutional manner.

The record of the Legislature of Illinois consisted of 202 votes on joint ballot, and at a lawful time, May 26, 1909, the vote for Senator was taken which resulted in 108 votes being cast for Mr. Lorimer, which result was duly certified to the Senate and Mr. Lorimer was seated.

No other person has claimed the right to hold the office or to have been elected thereto.

No claim has been made by or on behalf of the State of Illinois that the election of Mr. Lorimer was not in accordance with law or that any other person is entitled to the office.

On June 7, 1910, more than one year after Mr. Lorimer had been elected and taken his oath of office as a Senator, one Clifford W. Barnes, claiming to act on behalf of "The Legislative Voters' League of Illinois," presented charges in the senate, alleging on information and belief that three members of the legislature who voted for Mr. Lorimer had been bribed to do so by one Lee O'Neil Browne, who was a Democrat and who is shown to have been indicted for such act and acquitted by a jury of the State of Illinois upon the trial under such indictment.

When the committee was organized at Chicago to hear the parties who had made the charges, Clifford W. Barnes was called and appeared before the committee. Upon being inquired of as to whether he was prepared to proceed to sustain the charges which he had made he informed the committee he was not prepared to offer anything in support of such charges and did not desire to appear for that purpose, or any other, before the committee. He, however, requested that the Chicago Tribune, a newspaper published in Chicago, should be permitted, through its representatives, to introduce testimony before the committee respecting the charges and to appear by counsel.

The committee granted this request and a large amount of testimony was introduced, much of which was outside the legitimate scope of the inquiry and some of which consisted of the testimony of members of the legislature establishing the unreliability, and even infamy, of such witnesses. Men swore without any apparent embarrassment that they had sworn falsely on other occasions; had committed perjury; had violated the laws of their State, the laws of morality, and the laws of decency. While it is true the truth may be told by bad men and should not be disregarded altogether because of the moral character of the party testifying, yet in this case the moral obliquity of some of the witnesses called to establish the charges was such as to make it highly improper to accept such testimony as the basis upon which any man's character or right to an office should depend.

It is not claimed nor was any attempt made to show that Mr. Lorimer was in any way connected with the alleged bribery or that he knew of any bribery or corrupt practice in connection with his election.

The committee is not charged with the investigation of the personal character of the members of the Illinois Legislature, nor should it report upon the same.

The right to investigate the character of the legislative body of a State or any member thereof belongs exclusively to the State and the people thereof.

In the Senate every presumption is in favor of the integrity of the State as certified to it by the chief executive of the State, and no presumption can be indulged that the State acted corruptly in the election of a Senator.

When a question as to the right of an incumbent to sit arises in the Senate which is based upon charges made by persons acting in their individual capacity, the burden of sustaining such charges rests on the charging party, and such party should be held to strict proof of the charges made, and such charges may not be made the basis of a dragnet investigation into the personal conduct or morals of the members of the legislature who participated in the election. The State must stand responsible for the character of its officers, and that responsibility is to its own people and not to any branch of the General Government.

The Senate may inquire into the personal fitness of a man elected by a State to sit as a Senator and may determine such question within the exercise of its exclusive powers, but in doing so it may not inquire into the personal character of the officers through whom the State acts. That question belongs to the people of the State exclusively.

The Senate may, however, inquire into the manner of the election of a member of its body to the end and for the purpose of ascertaining whether such election was an honest one, representing the will of the members of the legislative body which certifies his election to the Senate, and in doing this we may inquire whether the votes cast by members of the legislature were procured by bribery of such members, by the person for whom they voted or by anyone on behalf of such person with the knowledge or consent of such person, and in case we should find that such bribery existed we should find that his election was procured in violation of the law, and the person so selected should not be permitted to hold the office of Senator.

In this case Mr. Lorimer is neither charged nor shown to have bribed or corrupted any member of the legislature who voted for him, or to have furnished any money to any person for such purpose, neither has it been shown that he had any knowledge of any bribery or corrupt practice in connection with his election. We do not have to weigh testimony to arrive at this conclusion, for there was no attempt to establish such conduct or knowledge on the part of Senator Lorimer.

That a sufficient number of Democrats had agreed among themselves to join those Republicans who forced Mr. Lorimer's election is clearly shown by the testimony, a majority of the faction of the Democratic party from which such votes came was acting under the leadership of Mr. Lee O'Neil Browne, who was a member of the house.

Much testimony and much scandal has been brought to the attention of the committee in connection with Mr. Browne's methods of dealing with the Democrats who voted for Mr. Lorimer under his leadership. Men have been charged with corrupt practice, bribery, and perjury. The powers of the courts of Illinois have been invoked to punish the men charged with these offenses, and trials have been had, but no one has been convicted. Another election for the election of members of the Illinois Legislature has been held and most of the men charged with crime and corruption have been reelected to office by the people of Illinois. Can it be urged that the Senate, in determining the truth of the charges affecting the election of Mr. Lorimer, should disregard the verdict of the courts and of the people before whom the charges were urged and considered and unseat a member upon testimony held insufficient by the people of the State of Illinois?

MONDAY, JANUARY 9, 1911.

Mr. Beveridge, a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted his views dissenting from the report of the committee (No. 942, Pt. 3), at the conclusion of which he offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That William Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Illinois." (S. Res. 315.)

VIEWS OF MR. BEVERIDGE.

I can not concur with the report of the majority of the committee.

To my mind the testimony is conclusive that far more than enough bribery was practiced in this election to invalidate the same, even under the Senate precedents upon which the majority rely.

The facts.

The majority report itself declares that "four members of the general assembly testified to receiving money as a consideration for their votes." Each of these men did so testify repeatedly.

Senator Holstlaw testified that he received his money from his fellow senator, Broderick, at two different times, the first installment being $2,500, and the second amount being $700.

Representatives Beckemeyer, White, and Link testified to having received their money from their fellow representative and factional leader, Browne, and from Leader Browne's lieutenant, their fellow representative, Wilson.

Like Senator Holstlaw, these three representatives received their money also in two installments, the first being $1,000 and the second $900.

It is of corroborative importance that the dates when Senator Holstlaw received his two installments from his fellow senator, Broderick, are practically the same dates on which the house members received their two installments from their fellow representatives, Browne and Wilson.

Now comes an undisputed fact of conclusive force, although the majority report ignores it. These confessed bribe takers were shown to have had in their possession, in bills of large denominations, unusual sums of money soon after the dates when they swore to having received the same.

This fact is proved by the uncontradicted testimony of impartial and disinterested witnesses.

For example, on the very day that confessing bribe-taking Senator Holstlaw received his first installment of $2,500 in currency of large denominations from his fellow senator, Broderick, in Chicago, he personally deposited that very amount in the State Bank of Chicago in currency of large denominations. This is proved by Mr. Newton, the cashier of the State Bank of Chicago, who personally received this $2,500 from Holstlaw in currency of large denominations. It is proved by the bank's regular deposit slip formally showing this transaction.

Again, Representative White, under the same circumstances, was seen in possession of unusual sums of money in bills of large denominations. This is proved by the uncontradicted testimony of Miss Vandeveer, White's bookkeeper; Mr. Dennis, a business associate; and Mr. Kirkpatrick, an employee of the store where White deposited several hundred dollars. These three impartial witnesses saw the money and swear that it was in bills of large denominations.

Representative Beckemeyer, under the same circumstances, deposited $500 in a bank at Belle Isle, Ill., although he did not live at Belle Isle and had to be identified at the bank. This is proved by the uncontradicted testimony of James Gray, a business man of Belle Isle, who identified Representative Beckemeyer at the bank at the latter's request.

Mr. Gray saw the money and swears that it was in bills of large denominations, twice mentioning a $100 bill. The size of the bill, and indeed, the whole transaction, seems to have impressed Mr. Gray, for he asked Representative Beckemeyer where he got it.

The subcommittee refused to permit Mr. Gray to tell Mr. Beckemeyer's answer. It appears that two other gentlemen—Mr. Ford and Mr. Murray—would have testified to the same facts to which the committee would not permit Mr. Gray to testify, but under this ruling of the committee both Mr. Ford and Mr. Murray were abandoned as witnesses.

Of the four men who repeatedly testified to having received this bribe money, only Link was not shown to have been seen with the cash. But Link repeatedly testified under oath at various times that he did receive the same amounts of money under the same circumstances and at the same times and places where his fellow members received theirs. And this repeated testimony of Link's is corroborated as to circumstances by the testimony of the others.

The majority attack the confession under oath of these bribe takers upon various grounds. For example, the majority report says, or at least strongly implies, that three of them were "compelled" or "driven" to make these sworn confessions because of their treatment by the officers of justice of Cook County and Sangamon County, Ill., who were investigating this and other transactions before the grand juries of those counties.

The majority lay great stress upon the testimony of bribe-taker Link as to his treatment by State's Attorney Wayman and his assistants, State's Attorneys Arnold and Marshall, and the officers in charge of Link in connection with the grand-jury proceedings in Cook County, before which grand jury Link finally made his full confession under oath. The language of the majority suggests sympathy for bribe-taker Link under this treatment and condemnation for the officers of justice whom Link says subjected him to it.

But Link's theatrical account of what he calls the "third degree" to which he was subjected is explained by the testimony of State's Attorney Wayman. For example, in the matter of being placed in the custody of an officer in Chicago and to and at hishome afterwards, it actually appears that Link was very glad to have the officer with him for protection, if indeed, Link himself did not ask that an officer be sent with him.

The men of whom Link most bitterly complains are Assistant State's Attorneys Arnold and Marshal, particularly the former. Yet the committee did not subpœna these officers of justice to give their account of Link's story, although they were residents of Chicago, in which the hearing was held.

The majority seem to think that the remarkable so-called third-degree story told by Link actually "compelled" him to testify to a falsehood in confessing his bribery both before the grand jury and before the subcommittee. If so, it was important that Arnold and Marshall should give their account. Yet they were not called. If not—if Link testified to the truth when he swore before the subcommittee, as well as before the grand jury, that he received this bribe money—why is the majority so concerned about Link's third-degree melodrama?

The majority report ignores one reason that Link repeatedly gave for denying that he met Browne and Wilson and got the bribe money from them. Link swears that he made this denial because he did not wish to get his "friends in trouble." Who were these friends whom Link was so afraid of "getting in trouble," that, to protect them as well as himself, he at first committed perjury by denying having met Browne and Wilson and getting money from them?

But after all, this phase of the case upon which the majority lays such emphatic emphasis is not material unless the Senate believes these confessed bribe takers did not tell the truth in their repeated statements under oath that they actually did receive this bribe money, but, on the contrary, that they were "compelled" or "driven," as the majority say, to this repeated perjury by the conduct of the State's attorney and his assistants.

What the Senate must determine is whether it believes, as a matter of fact, that these men actually did receive the money which they testified to having received, and large amounts of which were found in their possession in bills of large denominations about the time they testified to having received it. This is the question before us—not the conduct of the officers of justice.

Upon this point the testimony convinces me that "four members of the general assembly which elected Mr. Lorimer" who "testified to receiving money as a consideration for their votes," actually did receive such money.

If they actually did receive such money, from whom did they receive it? They testify that they received it from their fellow representative and factional leader, Browne, and his lieutenant; their fellow representative, Wilson; and from Broderick, the fellow senator of Holstlaw.

If they did receive it from these men, these three bribe givers are as guilty as the four bribe takers. In law bribery includes the giving as well as the receiving of bribes, and the bribers are equally culpable with the bribed. In morals these bribe givers are even more culpable than the bribe takers, because they were men of greater influence, intelligence, and force of character.

The majority report exonerates these three accused bribe givers upon the ground, chiefly, that they denied the accusation. What else did the majority expect these accused bribe givers to do except to deny that they gave the bribe? What else could they have done unless they, too, confessed?

Did the majority expect everybody concerned with these corrupt proceedings to confess?

Is bribe giving to be proved only by the sworn confession of the bribe givers? Is not the law settled, clear, and conclusive that bribery may be and often must be proved by circumstantial evidence?

It would be a rare case where any culprit could be convicted before a jury of bribery or conspiracy to bribe if the courts should take the view of the law taken by the majority of the committee.

Why did Browne take the long journey to St. Louis to meet his fellow members, who testified that they received their bribe money from Browne at St. Louis?

Browne lived at the other end of the State. His excuse that he went to St. Louis to talk politics to these men is absurd. It had been hardly three weeks since he had seen them at the legislature in Springfield, where he had been in constant communication with them for months.

The campaign about which he says he went to see them did not occur for more than a year in the future. And having taken this long and disagreeable journey to meet these men in St. Louis about the campaign a year in the future, he remained there only between trains, arriving about 8 or 9 in the morning and leaving at noon.

The explanations of Wilson are fully as bad or worse. And Broderick had no explanation at all as to why Holstlaw, who never before had visited Broderick's saloon at Chicago, should come from his home in the country town of Iuka and go a mile and a half from the railroad station in Chicago to Broderick's saloon, which is across the bridge on the West Side.

According to bribe-giver Broderick, bribe-taker Holstlaw merely came to Broderick's saloon in Chicago just to visit, without any reason whatever. Yet he had never done such a thing before. He never frequented saloons. On important points Broderick refused to testify on the ground that he might incriminate himself.

And note this: Both times that Holstlaw made these visits to the saloon of his fellow senator, Broderick, in Chicago, were about the same times that his fellow bribe takers were receiving bribe money from their fellow representatives, Browne and Wilson, in St. Louis.

The failure of these three witnesses, Browne, Wilson, and Broderick, to appear before the subcommittee at the time they were subpœnaed; the successful efforts made by his counsel to delay the testimony of Broderick; the explanation of Wilson and Browne as to their nonappearance are significant.

They are almost as unreasonable as are Browne and Wilson's grotesque excuses for their meeting the three bribe-taking representatives in St. Louis, or as Broderick's novel account of the bribe-taking Senator Holstlaw coming from his village home out in the State and unexpectedly visiting his saloon on the West Side without any reason whatever.

In short, the testimony is overwhelming and conclusive, not only that four members of the general assembly who participated in this election were bribed, but that three of their fellow members of the general assembly paid them their money.

I am not able to follow the mental processes which can concede that these four bribe takers got their bribe money, and yet they did not receive it from their three fellow members whom the four bribe takers testified had paid it to them and whom it is conceded that the four bribe takers met under circumstances not reasonably explained.

If the confessed bribe takers did receive this bribe money, from whom did they receive it if not from their fellow members who admit having met the bribe takers when and where the latter testify that they did receive the bribe money from these accused bribe givers?

So the evidence convinces me that at least 7 tainted votes were cast in this election.

But these 7 votes, which under the statute and the precedents are enough to invalidate this election, were not all of the tainted votes cast in this putrid transaction. The testimony shows that at least 3 additional corrupt votes were cast—those of Clark, Shephard, and Luke.

While Shephard and Clark did not confess, and Luke, who is dead, could not confess, the evidence convicts them of having shared the plunder at the same times and places—from the same hands and for the same consideration as their fellow members who repeatedly testified to having received it, and who were afterwards shown to be in possession of it.

It is conceded that these three members, Clark, Shephard, and Luke, belonged to the faction and were the followers of their fellow representative and factional leader, Browne. It is conceded that all of them met Browne and his lieutenant, Wilson, by appointment in St. Louis at the same hotel and at the same time that the confessed bribe takers are conceded to have met Browne and Wilson.

Lukes's wife testified that along about this time Luke came home and showed her $950 in bills of large denominations, without saying where he got it. The committee declined to permit testimony as to Luke's statement concerning this money and his visit to St. Louis.

I think this ruling was in direct conflict with the ruling on the same point in the Clark case. Still, without this excluded testimony, the evidence, taken all together, shows that Luke got the money in the same amounts and from the same sources and in the same places at the same time that the confessed bribe takers got theirs.

Representative Shephard met his fellow representative and factional leader, Browne, and his fellow representative, Browne's lieutenant, Wilson, at St. Louis, at the same time, in the same room of the same hotel where his three fellow representatives who repeatedly confessed to having received this money from Browne and Wilson at those times and places.

The testimony shows that Wilson paid at least some of this bribe money to the bribe takers in the bathroom of his hotel room. White swears that he, himself, was called into the bathroom by Wilson, and was there paid his second installment of $900. White swears that he heard Wilson call Shephard into the same bathroom, from which they shortly emerged.

Shephard himself admits that he was there and that Wilson called him into the bathroom, but only to ask him the name of a lady Shephard dined with in Springfield almost two months before. Shephard admits having visited a safety deposit box which he had rented in St. Louis the very same forenoon that he met Wilson at the hotel, and was called by Wilson into the bathroom.

Shephard's only excuse for visiting St. Louis on this interesting occasion was that he made the journey to get some packing for his automobile. This was a remarkable excursion for a banker and business man. We are asked to believe that Shephard's meeting with fellow representative, Wilson, at St. Louis at this lucrative conference was a pure accident, a mere coincidence.

Apparently the majority of the committee do so believe.

If we credit Shephard's testimony our indignant sympathy is aroused for this victim of one of these malign tangles of circumstances and events which sometimes entrap the most virtuous of men.

But regardless of whether or not Shephard got any money for his vote he was bribed to vote for Lorimer by the promise of influence concerning an office. This bribery was arranged and consummated between Shephard and Lorimer himself. Shephard himself declares that, "rock-ribbed Democrat" as he was, the promise of Lorimer's influence concerning a post office was "the consideration" for his vote.

Of course, in law this is quite as much bribery as if Lorimer had paid him cash in hand. On this the authorities are unanimous.

Representative Clark also met his fellow representative and factional leader, Browne, and his fellow representative, Wilson, Browne's lieutenant, at St. Louis in the same room of the same hotel, at the same times that his fellow members who confessed to taking bribes at those times and places met Browne and Wilson. Also, like the others, Clark met Browne and Wilson in St. Louis at the latter's request.

But Mr. Clark says that he did not receive any money on either of these occasions. He sticks to the story that Browne did nothing but just talk on the first occasion. Browne says that this talk was about "politics." Clark says that his interview with Wilson on the second occasion was more or less miscellaneous. Yet both Browne and Wilson made long and uncomfortable trips for a brief period of such conversation with Clark.

It must be remembered that Clark was a police magistrate in a fair-sized country town. As such he was better schooled than his fellow members in the effectiveness of stout denial and persistent avoidance of damaging admissions. Indeed, we find Clark almost the firmest and cleverest of the conspirators who were resolving and arranging to stand pat in their denials.

Yet Clark, police magistrate of a country town, purchased diamonds during the session of the legislature, for which he paid after the legislature adjourned. Taken in connection with all the testimony in this case, the testimony of Clark himself convinces me that he was as guilty as the others.

If the Senate conclude that these three men, Luke, Shephard, and Clark, also received this bribe money we have 10 tainted votes cast in this election, or 4 more than enough to invalidate the same even under the precedents which the majority cite. With these 10 putrid votes I shall stop, although the evidence also entangles one other. So, if there were 10 votes, or even if only 7 votes were corrupt, what is their legal effect on the election involved?

The law.

To elect, the statute in terms requires "a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting." The number of votes that constituted the joint assembly that elected Mr. Lorimer was 202. "A majority of all" these votes was 102. Mr. Lorimer received 108, or 6 more than "a majority of all votes of said joint assembly."

But at least 7 of these were tainted. This leaves 101 votes for Mr. Lorimer, or one less than "a majority of all the votes of said joint assembly," as required by the specific words of the statute.

If to these 7 corrupt votes, the Senate concludes that the 3 votes of Representatives Luke, Clark, and Shephard should be added, there were 10 tainted votes that went to make up the entire 108 that Mr. Lorimer received.

Deducting these 10 from this 108 leaves 98 untainted votes for Mr. Lorimer, or 4 less than "a majority of all the votes of said joint assembly."

All this is true, even admitting the soundness of the Senate precedents cited by the committee. These precedents are that no matter how many votes were bribed, yet if there was a majority of unbribed votes, the election is valid.

In the present case there was not an unbribed "majority of all the votes of said joint assembly." There was at least 1 vote less than an untainted majority. Including Clark, Shephard, and Luke as corrupt, there were 4 votes less than an untainted majority. So the election was invalid—it never legally occurred.

If it is said that these untainted votes must be expunged and considered as never having been cast, the answer is, in the words of the statute itself, that they were "present and voting."

The only reasonable and legal position is that those tainted votes actually were "present and voting," a part of the joint assembly; but because their votes were tainted they are not to be counted for the candidate for whom they corruptly voted. They were a part of the joint assembly present and voting because this was the case, but they are not to be counted for Mr. Lorimer, because they were bribed to vote for him.

This is the most restricted meaning that reasonably can be put on the statute and precedents. But I think the sound view is much broader. Not only should these votes be considered as "present and voting," which was the actual fact; not only must they be deducted from the vote cast for Mr. Lorimer because of their corruption, but also they must be added to the vote against Mr. Lorimer.

As I have shown above, it is not necessary to take this view in order to invalidate this election. I take it merely on principle as a matter of law when applied to this or any similar case.

All of these tainted votes were stanch partisans of the opposite party to Mr. Lorimer. For more than three months all of them steadily had voted either for the candidate of their party, nominated at their party's primaries by popular vote, or, at least, against any Republican. None of them voted for any Republican until the notable 26th of May, when all of them cast their votes suddenly for Mr. Lorimer upon the occasion of his election.

If they actually were bought to cast their votes for Mr. Lorimer, it follows that they would have continued to vote as they hitherto had done, either for the primary nominee of their own party or at least for some other member of their own party. Was it not for the very purpose of preventing them from so voting and inducing them to vote for Mr. Lorimer that they were bought? If not, for what purpose were they bought?

And were they bought if the buyers did not think their votes were necessary? Is it possible that large sums of money were spent to purchase votes that were not needed? Were thousands of dollars thrown away and the risk of the penitentiary incurred for nothing at all?

While, as I have shown, it is not necessary to a decision of this case, yet I challenge the Senate precedents cited by the majority that even though it be proven that any number of votes were bribed, yet if there were a majority of untainted votes the election can not be questioned.

If only one case of bribery be clearly established in the election of a Senator, I hold that this invalidates the entire election. In my opinion, one act of bribery makes the whole election foul.

In the language of my illustrious predecessor in this body, Senator Morton, "Bribery is to an election what fraud is to a contract."

It is said in defense of these precedents that it would be hard on a personally guiltless and successful candidate who had an honest majority if his election should be invalidated by votes corrupted in his behalf which were not enough in number to destroy his honest majority.

The clear answer is that it is harder on the people whose representative this candidate is to have any corrupt influences employed in his behalf.

We can not consider the personal fortunes or even feelings of a candidate in determining the law of election cases. The candidate is not on trial. The election is on trial. Was the election pure and free, or influenced and venal? The candidate is nothing; the people are everything. Or, rather, the candidate is nothing, except as the representative of the people.

Our business is to guard the purity of elections. Our concern is to permit no chances to be taken. Yet chances always are taken under these ill-considered precedents—dangerous chances. For if a number of corrupt votes are plainly proven to be such, it is reasonable to suppose that others were cast equally corrupt which could not be proven to be such. The law recognizes no more difficult task than that of proving bribery or conspiracy to bribe.

And would this untainted majority be cast if the uncorrupted votes positively knew of the bribery being practiced for the candidate for whom they voted? If honest members of a legislature innocently vote for a candidate for Senator for whom corrupt members of the legislature were bribed to vote, would these honest members have so voted had they known of this bribery? This simple illustration will prove convincingly the unsoundness of the precedents which I am assailing.

So I propose that we overthrow such unsound precedents and establish a new Senate precedent, that one act of bribery in the election of a Senator makes such an election void—makes an election foul.

The public welfare, the theory of free and fair elections, which it is our sole business to safeguard, and which is the reason and origin of the power we are now exercising, requires the establishment of this new Senate precedent.

We should in this case establish the law of the Senate in conformity with the ancient common law. We should declare that one act of bribery makes a whole election foul.

This pronouncement by the Senate of the United States would prevent an ambitious and wealthy candidate from perpetrating bribery to make his election sure and doing it in such a way as to cover up his tracks. It would give a needed pause to corrupt interests that undertake to make the election of their favorites certain by corrupt practices. It absolutely would prevent overzealous friends, inspired by nothing but the heat of battle and devotion to their favorite, from undertaking to secure his success by infamous methods.

If we make a new Senate precedent that one act of bribery makes a whole election foul, we shall have an end of the amusing and overworked argument of the improper activities of too enthusiastic friends bribing voters for their favorite without any other motive than their fanatical and money-sacrificing devotion to him.

The time has arrived when we had much better take to heart the people's unsullied and uninfluenced representation than that we should continue to bemoan the possible fate of a virtuous candidate in whose behalf the heinous crime of bribery has been practiced, whether by venal interests or by well-intentioned but overzealous and financially affluent friends.

But waive this point. The evidence shows it is not necessary to a decision of this case. I advance it only because this body ought to establish now that one act of bribery invalidates an election.

And this suggests another untenable view heretofore suggested in election cases and which we should now decisively negative. This view is that a single act of bribery perpetrated or countenanced by a person elected to the Senate of the United States does not void the election, but only so taints such a person that he must be expelled. That is, if the sitting Senator personally perpetrated or countenanced bribery to secure his election his seat can not be vacated by a majority vote, but he must be expelled by a two-thirds vote.

I think it clear that this view is wrong. The argument for it is that the bribing Senator is guilty only of a moral defect which renders him unfit to be a member of this body.

It is as if such a Senator had a contagious disease such as smallpox, or that he was dangerously insane, or that he had committed treason, and yet, in any of these cases, insisted upon sitting among us. In any of these cases or others that may suggest themselves such a member may be expelled, but only by a two-thirds vote.

The reason a two-thirds vote was provided in the Constitution to expel a member was that the mental, moral, or physical defect should be so unquestionable that two-thirds of this body would be impelled to vote for expulsion.

And yet it is upon these grounds and these only that the argument is made that a Senator guilty or knowing of bribery in his election must be expelled by a two-thirds vote rather than his election invalidated by a majority vote.

This position is so dangerous to the public welfare, so contrary to public policy, so abhorrent to reason and repugnant to justice that I repudiate and challenge it.

For conceding that an elected Senator had a majority of perfectly honest votes, would they have so cast their votes if they had known that the candidate was bribing other votes.

Let me put an illustration personally to each Senator here. Suppose that we are electing some man to some office within our gift. Suppose that all but one of us were honest and earnest in our intended votes for this man. But suppose that just before our vote we discovered that he had bribed or countenanced the bribery of one of our number. Would a single one of us with such knowledge vote for the man for whom until that moment we had intended to vote? Of course not.

So it is that one act of bribery perpetrated or countenanced by any Senator to secure his election vitiates the same. It does not necessitate an act of expulsion requiring a two-thirds vote, but a resolution requiring a majority vote invalidating the election.

Was Mr. Lorimer informed of what was going on in his behalf? While not necessary to a decision of this case, the evidence and circumstances require the Senate to consider this point.

From his speech on this case in this body it appears that Mr. Lorimer is a seasoned politician of nearly 30 years' experience in practical politics in one of the greatest cities of the country and of the world—a superb organizer who gives attention to the very smallest details of any election.

Mr. Lorimer was on the ground during practically the whole session of this legislature. He was there principally for the purpose of defeating the will of the voters of his party as declared in the primary. He was the "intimate" friend of the leader of the opposite party, Mr. Browne, and had been such for years.

It appears that Mr. Lorimer himself finally developed as a solution of the deadlock which he had precipitated to defeat the decree of the primaries of his own party. To secure his election, he absolutely required the votes of large numbers of members of the general assembly from the opposite party.

His "intimate" friend for years, Mr. Browne, who was the leader of the minority and the captain of a faction, became his needed assistant.

But even Browne, the chief of a minority faction, declined to permit the votes of his faction to go to Mr. Lorimer unless Browne could be assured that with the votes Browne might get Mr. Lorimer could get enough others certainly to elect him.

With this understanding and for this purpose the two "intimate" friends, Browne and Lorimer, worked together for at least 10 days or two weeks. During this time they were in repeated and almost continuous conference, night as well as day, and both were seasoned practical politicians.

If we believe that anybody at all was bribed, the testimony shows that it was during these fateful 10 days or 2 weeks that the bribery was arranged. If we believe that anybody at all was bribed, the evidence shows that Browne was the chief instrument of bribery.

Taking these things altogether, did everything occur that the evidence shows to have occurred without Mr. Lorimer's knowledge?

Even if the corruption fund came from sources higher up, did those exalted sources of iniquity pass by Mr. Lorimer, whom they were trying to elect with this putrid money, without his knowing a thing about it?

In law Mr. Lorimer must be held to have knowledge of these transactions in his behalf.

If so, I contend that his election is invalid upon this ground. If Senators believe that he knew and countenanced a single act of bribery we need not conclude that we must expel him by a two-thirds vote. We need only to conclude that his election was invalid and so declare by a majority vote.

But for the purpose of this particular case it is not necessary to raise the question of Mr. Lorimer's knowledge of any bribery in his behalf. I raise it only because personally I want to go on record against the proposition hitherto advanced, that an act of bribery by a successful candidate does not invalidate his election, but only taints the successful candidate himself.

I conclude that this election was invalid under any possible view of the law. If the Senate so concludes, it is our duty to so declare. Therefore I submit the following resolution:

"Resolved, That William Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Illinois."

ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 46, pp. 654–657.)

On the same day Mr. Owen addressed the Senate stating that he could not acquiesce in the conclusions of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that the election of Mr. Lorimer was not invalidated by any sufficient evidence of corrupt practices, at the conclusion of which he offered the following resolution (S. Res. 316) for the consideration of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the so-called election of William Lorimer on May 26, 1909, by the legislature of the State of Illinois was illegal and void, and that he is not entitled to a seat in the United States Senate." (Cong. Rec., vol. 46, pp. 665–668.)

TUESDAY, JANUARY 10, 1911.

Mr. Crawford addressed the Senate supporting the resolution submitted by Mr. Owen (S. Res. 316). (Cong. Rec., vol. 46, pp. 716–728.)

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1911.

The resolution (S. Res. 316) submitted by Mr. Owen on the 9th instant was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. [As this resolution was for all practical purposes the same as the one before the Senate (S. Res. 315) no action was taken by the committee.] (Cong. Rec., vol. 46, p. 767.)

MONDAY, JANUARY 30, 1911.

Mr. Frazier, a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following views to the Senate (Rept. 942, pt. 4), concurring in the resolution offered by Mr. Beveridge (S. Res. 315):

"It is with great reluctance that I differ with my colleagues on the subcommittee, but feeling impelled to do so, I beg leave to state briefly my views and conclusions in this case.

"As I understand the precedents as established by the Senate and the other branch of Congress, and now recognized as the law governing such cases, they are:

"First. If the proof establishes the fact that the Member whose seat is in question because of alleged bribery or corrupt practices resorted to in his election has himself been guilty of bribery or corrupt practices, or knew of or sanctioned such corrupt practices, he may be unseated without reference to the number of votes thus corruptly influenced.

"Second. If the proof fails to show that the Member knew of or participated in or sanctioned such corrupt practices, then, in order to justify unseating him, the proof must show that enough members of the legislature voting for him were bribed or influenced by corrupt practices that deducting their votes from the total vote received by him would reduce his vote below the constitutional majority required for his election.

"While there are some facts and circumstances in this case tending to show that Senator Lorimer may have heard of or known that corrupt practices were being resorted to, and while Senator Lorimer failed to avail himself of the opportunity of going on the stand as a witness and denying any such knowledge or sanction of corrupt practices, if any such were being practiced, still I am of the opinion that the testimony fails to establish the fact that Senator Lorimer was himself guilty of bribery or other corrupt practices, or that he sanctioned or was cognizant of the fact that bribery or other corrupt practices were being used by others to influence votes for him.

"This being true, the question then arises, Was bribery or corrupt practices used by others in his behalf to influence votes for him; and, if so, were enough votes thus tainted with fraud and corruptly influenced, when excluded, to reduce his vote below the legal majority required for his election?

"The Legislature of Illinois consisted of 204 members. There were present and voting on the occasion of the election of Senator Lorimer 202 members. A quorum of both houses being present, in my opinion, he must have received a majority of all those present and voting, or 102 votes, to have been elected. Senator Lorimer received 108 votes, or 6 more than necessary to elect.

"The testimony taken by the committee satisfies me that four members of the legislature were paid money for voting for, or in consequence of having voted for, Senator Lorimer. One Senator and three representatives admitted under oath before the committee that they were paid money, and their admissions and the facts and circumstances surrounding the transactions satisfy me that they received it as a bribe for or in consequence of their votes for Senator Lorimer.

"The four self-confessed bribe takers implicate three other members of the legislature who voted for Senator Lorimer as the persons who bribed them. The testimony satisfies me that the three alleged bribe givers were guilty of that offense. To my mind the man who bribes another is as corrupt as the one who is bribed, and by his corrupt act of bribery he demonstrates the fact that he is none too honest to receive a bribe if offered him.

"While the proof is not clear or conclusive that these three bribe givers were themselves bribed or corruptly influenced to vote for Senator Lorimer, when I take into consideration their corrupt conduct as bribers of others, together with all the facts and circumstances surrounding this case, I can not bring myself to agree with the majority of the subcommittee that their votes are free from taint or corruption. These three votes added to the four confessedly bribed would make 7 tainted votes. Eliminate them, and the vote received by Senator Lorimer was less than a majority of the votes cast.

"As stated above, it is with hesitancy and great reluctance that I differ with my colleagues upon the subcommittee, but I have felt impelled to do so after a most careful and, I trust, unbiased study of this record. In view of the fact that I appear to stand alone in the views herein expressed, I make no recommendation to the committee, but I do ask that members of the committee not members of the subcommittee carefully read all of the testimony before forming an opinion.

"At the time the foregoing statement of my views and conclusions were filed with the full Committee on Privileges and Elections it was my purpose to file in the Senate a more elaborate statement, setting out in full the reasons which led me to the conclusions reached. It was also my purpose to offer with such statement a resolution declaring that Senator Lorimer was not legally elected Senator from the State of Illinois.

"Since then, to wit, on January 9, 1911, the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Beveridge) has filed an extended statement of his views, with copious reference to the testimony, and has offered a resolution of the character referred to. Hence it is not necessary for me at this time to file either the more extended report contemplated or the resolution. I am gratified that the Senator from Indiana concurs in the conclusion reached by me as to the election of Mr. Lorimer. In the resolution offered by him with respect thereto I concur." (Cong. Rec., vol. 46, pp. 1632–1633.)

The report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the resolution of Mr. Beveridge were discussed and debated in the Senate January 18, 1911 (Cong. Rec., vol. 46, pp. 1041-1058); January 23, 1911 (ibid., pp. 1279–1290); January 25, 1911 (ibid., pp. 1413–1425); January 26, 1911 (ibid., pp. 1487-1888); January 27, 1911 (ibid., pp. 1524–1535); February 3, 1911 (ibid., pp. 1886-1896); February 6, 1911 (ibid., pp. 1980–1990); February 7, 1911 (ibid., pp. 2050–2066); February 9, 1911 (ibid., pp. 2187-2189); February 10, 1911 (ibid., pp. 2246–2251); February 13, 14, 1911 (ibid., pp. 2474–2490); February 21, 23, 24, 1911 (ibid., pp. 3258–3306); February 27, 1911 (ibid., pp. 3521-3588); February 28, 1911 (ibid., pp. 3650–3658); and March 1, 1911 (ibid., pp. 3753–3760).

The Sixty-first Congress adjourned sine die at noon March 4, 1911.

[Sixty-second Congress, first and second sessions.]

WILLIAM LORIMER

of Illinois.

SECOND INVESTIGATION.

Mr. Lorimer took his seat in the United States Senate on June 18, 1909, Sixty-first Congress, first session, as a Senator from the State of Illinois. During the second session of the Sixty-first Congress charges were filed in the Senate that corrupt methods and practices were employed in his election by the Legislature of Illinois that elected him to this office, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections were authorized to investigate these charges. The latter brought in a report vindicating Mr. Lorimer and the Senate by a vote of March 1, 1911, declared that he was duly and legally elected to his seat in the Senate of the United States.

At the opening of the Sixty-second Congress, April 6, 1911, Mr. La Follette introduced a resolution in the Senate providing for a reinvestigation of the election of William Lorimer by a special committee of the United States Senate. Later Mr. La Follette made an extended speech in the Senate in which he alleged that new and material evidence had been produced through the investigation of a committee of the Illinois State Senate, and quoted extensively from the testimony taken before that committee, tending to show that one Edward Hines had raised $100,000 to "put Lorimer over."

Several resolutions were introduced by different Senators providing for a reopening of the case, holding that the Senate had authority to do so upon the ground of newly discovered evidence. There were extended debates in the Senate as to whether the case should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections or investigated by a special committee of the United States Senate, and as to the composition of the committee to conduct the investigation.

June 6, 1911, the Senate of the State of Illinois presented an official resolution to the Senate of the United States asking the United States Senate to further investigate the election of William Lorimer, basing their request on the report of the committee appointed for that purpose from the Senate of the State of Illinois. June 7, 1911, the Senate of the United States passed a resolution which provided for an investigation of these charges against Mr. Lorimer by a committee of the Senate composed of eight specified members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

May 20, 1912, the committee of the Senate appointed to investigate the election of William Lorimer as a Senator from the State of Illinois submitted its report, signed by five members of that committee, contending that the Senate had, after a full investigation, already passed upon Mr. Lorimer's right to his seat which, in accordance with the rules of law, judicial procedure, and justice, should stand unless new and convincing evidence was produced establishing corruption in his election; that, as absolutely no new or substantial evidence had been produced or discovered on the reinvestigation showing that Mr. Lorimer was elected by corruption, the previous judgment of the Senate should be held conclusive and final. But in the event that the Senate should hold that its former judgment could be reconsidered and vacated, the committee submitted the following conclusions based on the charges made: That they could find no evidence in all the testimony submitted that Mr. Lorimer was personally guilty of any corrupt practices in securing his election, or that he had any knowledge of any corrupt practices, or that he authorized anyone to employ corrupt practices in his election. The committee further held that no vote in the election of Mr. Lorimer was secured for him by bribery; that whatever money any person in the legislature received was not paid to him by anyone on Mr. Lorimer's behalf or in consideration of or to secure such vote or votes for him; that neither Edward Hines nor anyone else raised or contributed to a fund to be used to secure his election; and that Mr. Lorimer's election was the logical result of existing political conditions in the State of Illinois, and was free from any corrupt practice.

On the same day, May 20, 1912, Mr. Lea submitted the views of three members of the committee, dissenting from the report of the majority, and holding that Mr. Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to his seat in the Senate of the United States, and Mr. Lea submitted a resolution to the Senate to that effect.

The minority held that the doctrine of res adjudicata did not apply to the case, the Senate having adopted the resolution of June 7, 1911, reopening the case for a full and complete reinvestigation of the facts, and that the testimony taken before this committee reinvestigating the case established the contention that at least 10 votes were purchased for the purpose of electing Mr. Lorimer, so his election was obtained by corrupt means and therefore invalid.

The report of the committee, the views of the minority, and the resolution offered by Mr. Lea were discussed and debated on the floor of the Senate at various times until July 13, 1912, when the resolution of Mr. Lea was adopted by a vote of 55 to 28.

The history of the second case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings of the Senate bearing on the case, as published in the Congressional Record, the report of the Committee of the Senate, with the views of the minority, a statement of the days on which the question was debated in the Senate, references to the prepared speeches and statements for and against the Committee report as found in the Congressional Record, and a record of the vote taken on Mr. Lea's resolution.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE.

[Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1911.

Mr. La Follette, as a result of certain testimony taken before a special committee appointed by the Senate of the Illinois Legislature to investigate the circumstances connected with the election of Mr. Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois on May 26, 1911, presented the following resolution (S. Res. 6) and asked to have it lie on the table subject to call:

"Whereas the Senate by resolution adopted on the 20th day of June, 1910, authorized and directed the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate certain charges against William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and to report to the Senate whether in the election of said Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from said State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices; and

"Whereas said committee, pursuant to said resolution, took the testimony of a large number of witnesses, reduced the testimony to printed form, and reported the same to the Senate, which was thereafter considered and acted upon by the Senate; and

"Whereas the Illinois State Senate thereafter appointed a committee to investigate like charges against William Lorimer and to report to said State senate whether in the election of said Lorimer to the United States Senate corrupt methods and practices were employed and used; and

"Whereas as it appears from the published reports of the proceedings of the said Illinois State Senate committee that witnesses who were not called and sworn by the committee of this Senate appointed to investigate said charges have appeared before the said committee of the Illinois State Senate, and upon being interrogated have given important material testimony tending to prove that $100,000 was corruptly expended to secure the election of William Lorimer to the United States Senate:

"Resolved, That Senators John D. Works, Charles E. Townsend, George P. McLean, John W. Kern, and Atlee Pomerene be, and they are hereby, appointed a special committee, and as such committee be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and report to the Senate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices; that said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress, to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ stenographers, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to report the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee." (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 101.)

MONDAY, MAY 1, 1911.

Mr. La Follette called up Senate resolution No. 6, which he introduced on April 6, and asked that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and it was so ordered. (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 793.)

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1911.

Mr. Briggs, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back Senate resolution No. 6, submitted by Mr. La Follette, accompanied by a report (No. 4), as follows:

"This resolution is reported to the Senate by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with a favorable recommendation. In making this recommendation the committee disclaims any purpose to indicate whether the investigation should be made by the standing Committee on Privileges and Elections or by the special committee whose membership is named in the resolution, or whether the investigation should be made at all; those matters being left, as they must be left, to the future action of the Senate, but intends by its action to provide the money necessary for this investigation if an investigation be made." (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 924.)

MONDAY, MAY 22, 1911.

Mr. Dillingham, as a result of the public press account of the action of the upper branch of the Illinois Legislature in asking that the Senate of the United States reinvestigate the charges relating to the seat of Mr. Lorimer as a Senator from that State, offered the following resolution (S. Res. 46) and asked that it be laid on the table:

"Whereas since the action by the Senate on the resolution of June 20, 1910, relating to the seat of William Lorimer, it is represented that new testimony has been discovered; and

"Whereas the Senate of the State of Illinois did on the 18th day of May, 1911, adopt the following resolutions:

"'Whereas under senate resolution No. 17 a committee was appointed to investigate charges of corruption and official misconduct against members of this senate; and

"'Whereas said committee has reported the result of its investigation to this senate, from which it appears that there were important and material witnesses without the State of Illinois, whose attendance it could not legally compel and which witnesses refused voluntarily to appear; and

"'Whereas said committee was seriously impeded in the performance of its duties by what we believe to be the unwarranted action of a certain judge; and

"'Whereas it appears from the report of said committee that despite its inability to compel the attendance of such foreign witnesses and the adverse action of said judge sufficient evidence was procured to show that without bribery and corruption and by reason of the failure of certain senators and representatives during the different roll calls to carry out the will of the people, as exprssed at the polls, in the choice for a United States Senator, which action we deem most reprehensible and should be condemned, and which we hereby condemn: Therefore be it

"'Resolved, That it is the opinion of this senate, based upon the report and findings of the said committee, that the election of William Lorimer to a seat in the United States Senate was brought about by bribery and corruption; and

"'Resolved, That the gravity of the situation, involving as it does the integrity and good name of this State and the welfare of the Nation, demands a further investigation and determination of this matter by a body possessing broader jurisdiction and greater powers than does this senate; and be it further

"'Resolved, That the secretary of this senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transmit to the Senate of the Uuited States a copy of the evidence taken by the said committee, together with the report and findings of that committee and a copy of this resolution for such action as the Senate of the United States may deem proper.

"'Resolved, That the findings of said committee, as set forth in the report heretofore filed, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and approved.'

"Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections are authorized and directed to further investigate the charges made against William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and to inquire and report to the Senate whether in or about the election of the said William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois, or in connection with his right to a seat in this body, there were used or employed by any person, firm, corporation, or association any corrupt methods or practices.

"That said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress; to hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers and such counsel and competent accountants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee." (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1430, 1431.)

On the same day Mr. La Follette began a speech, in connection with his resolution (S. Res. 6), questioning the validity of Mr. Lorimer's right to his seat, alleging that new and material evidence had been produced through the investigation of a committee appointed by the Illinois State senate, quoting from the testimony taken before that committee to show that one Edward Hines was accused by witnesses of being connected with the raising of $100,000 to elect Mr. Lorimer, and demanding that the United States Senate make a new investigation of Mr. Lorimer's right to his seat as a Senator from the State of Illinois. (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1434–1437.)

[Mr. La Follette continued his remarks on Tuesday, May 23, 1911 (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1490–1495); Wednesday, May 24, 1911 (Cong. Rec., vol 47, pp. 1547–1557); and concluded them on Friday, May 26, 1911 (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1600–1605).]

TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1911.

Mr. Martin, of Virginia, submitted the following resolution and asked that it be laid on the table (S. Res. 51):

"Whereas the Senate adopted a resolution June 20, 1910, directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the charges relating to the election of William Lorimer to the Senate of the United States; and

"Whereas since the Senate voted on the report of that committee it is represented that new material testimony has been discovered in reference to such matter; and

"Whereas the senate of the State of Illinois, on the 18th of May, 1911, adopted a resolution for the reasons therein stated, requesting the Senate of the United States to institute further investigation of the election of William Lorimer to the Senate: It is therefore

"Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, sitting in banc, be, and are hereby, authorized and directed forthwith to investigate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices; that said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers, counsel, and accountants; to send for persons and papers; to administer oaths; and as early as practicable to report the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee. The committee is further and specially instructed to inquire fully into and report upon the alleged 'jack-pot' fund in its relation to and effect, if any, upon the election of William Lorimer to the Senate." (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 1482.)

FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1911.

Mr. Martin called up his resolution (S. Res. 51) and offered it as a substitute for that submitted by Mr. La Follette on April 6, 1911 (S. Res. 6). (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1609–1610.)

MONDAY, MAY 29, 1911.

Mr. Martin addressed the Senate in support of his resolution (S. Res. 51), which he offered as a substitute for Senate resolution No. 6. (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1628–1632.)

The resolution of Mr. La Follette and the substitute as offered by Mr. Martin were debated at length by different Senators. Mr. Smith of Michigan and Mr. Hitchcock offered amendments to the substitute, but they were rejected by the Senate. (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1632–1646.)

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1911.

Mr. Brown offered the following resolution (S. Res. 57) and asked that it be printed and lie on the table:

"Resolved, That William Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Illinois." (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 1654.)

On the same day Mr. La Follette called up Senate resolution No. 6, which he introduced on April 6, 1911, and asked to make certain modifications in the same, presenting it to the Senate in the following form:

"Whereas the Senate, by resolution adopted on the 20th day of June, 1910, authorized and directed the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate certain charges against William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and to report to the Senate whether, in the election of said Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from said State of Illinois, there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices; and

"Whereas said committee, pursuant to said resolution, took the testimony of a large number of witnesses, reduced the testimony to printed form, and reported the same to the Senate, which was thereafter considered and acted upon by the Senate; and

"Whereas the Illinois State Senate thereafter appointed a committee to investigate like charges against William Lorimer and to report to said State senate whether in the election of said Lorimer to the United States Senate corrupt methods and practices were employed and used; and

"Whereas as it appears from the published reports of the proceedings of the said Illinois State Senate committee that witnesses who were not called and sworn by the committee of this Senate appointed to investigate said charges have appeared before the said committee of the Illinois State Senate, and upon being interrogated have given important material testimony tending to prove that $100,000 was corruptly expended to secure the election of William Lorimer to the United States Senate: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That a committee composed of five members of the Senate, three of whom shall be of the majority and two of the minority party, shall be elected in the open session by roll call, and when so elected said committee be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to promptly investigate and report to the Senate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices; that said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress, to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ stenographers, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to report the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

"In electing said committee a majority of those present and voting shall be required to elect. Each Senator may vote for five upon the first roll call, and thereafter for such number as have not received the requisite majority. No Senator who was a Member of the Senate on the 3d day of March, 1911, shall be eligible to a place upon such committee, and any votes cast for such a Senator shall be void." (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 1654.)

The revised resolution of Mr. La Follette and the substitute offered by Mr. Martin were debated at length by several Senators. All favored the reopening of the case, basing their action for the most part on the ground of newly discovered evidence, but the personnel of the committee to be appointed to conduct the investigation was the subject of dispute. Finally the Senate agreed to the substitute of Mr. Martin's by a vote of 48 to 20. (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1654–1682.)

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1911.

The Vice President laid before the Senate the official resolution of the State Senate of Illinois recommending further investigation in the election of William Lorimer as a United States Senator; a copy of the evidence taken before the investigating committee; and the committee's report to the Illinois State Senate. This was ordered to be printed as a public document (S. Doc. No. 45) and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 1693.)

On the same day Mr. Dillingham, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 60):

"Resolved, That a committee consisting of the following members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Kenyon, Johnston of Alabama, Fletcher, Kern, and Lea, be, and are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed forthwith to investigate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices, and whether he is now entitled to retain his seat.

"That said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers, counsel, accountants, and such other assistants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths; and, as early as practicable, to report to the Senate the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the commitee.

"The committee is further and specially instructed to inquire fully into and report upon the sources and use of the alleged 'jack-pot' fund, or any other fund, in its relation to and effect, if any, upon the election of William Lorimer to the Senate." (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 1698.)

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7, 1911.

Mr. Dillingham asked to modify his resolution of June 6, 1911 (S. Res. 60), and as amended on motion of Mr. Reed, it passed the Senate in the following form:

"Resolved, That a committee of the United States Senate, consisting of the following members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections: Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Kenyon, Johnston, Fletcher, Kern, and Lea, be, and are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed forthwith to investigate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices.

"That said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers, counsel, accountants, and such other assistants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths; and as early as practicable to report to the Senate the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

"The committee is further and specially instructed to inquire fully into and report upon the sources and use of the alleged 'jack-pot' fund or any other fund in its relation to and effect, if any, upon the election of William Lorimer to the Senate." (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, pp. 1732–1734.)

[Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

MONDAY, MAY 20, 1912.

Mr. Dillingham, from the special committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator from the State of Illinois, there were employed corrupt methods and practices, submitted the following report (No. 769), together with the testimony taken before that committee:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Dillingham (chairman), Gamble, Jones, Kenyon, Johnston, Fletcher, Kern, and Lea.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MAY 20, 1912.—Ordered to be printed.

The committee named in Senate resolution No. 60 of the Sixty-second Congress, first session, respectfully reports that immediately after the adoption of the same it organized and entered upon the work assigned it. Under its authority to employ counsel the services of John H. Marble, of Washington, and John J. Healy, of Chicago, were secured and the work was mapped out. On the 20th day of June a series of public hearings were inaugurated in Washington, which continued until August 9, when a recess was taken until October 10, on which day the committee convened in Chicago, and public hearings were held until November 22, when another recess was taken until December 5, on which day the committee again took up the work in Washington, where the hearings were continued until February 9, 1912. These public hearings actually occupied 102 working-days. One hundred and eighty different persons appeared and testified as witnesses, and a large volume of documentary evidence was secured.

The record of such hearings has been laid before the Senate for its consideration. It is comprised in eight volumes, containing 8,588 printed pages, with an accompanying digest index.

The following is a copy of the resolution referred to:

"Resolved, That a committee of the United States Senate, consisting of the following members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections: Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Kenyon, Johnston, Fletcher, Kern, and Lea, be, and are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed forthwith to investigate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices.

"That said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers, counsel, accountants, and such other assistants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths; and as early as practicable to report to the Senate the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

"The committee is further and specially instructed to inquire fully into and report upon the sources and use of the alleged 'jack-pot' fund or any other fund in its relation to and effect, if any, upon the election of William Lorimer to the Senate."

Statement regarding a prior investigation.

Inasmuch as under a Senate resolution of June 20, 1910, the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate also made an investigation of the question "Whether in the election of said William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from said State of Illinois there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices," and inasmuch as the Senate on the 1st day of March, 1911, having fully considered the question, on the reports of such committee and the evidence taken, determined that Mr. Lorimer was entitled to retain his seat; and inasmuch as the present investigation is in the nature of a rehearing of the case, the committee at this point inserts certain important undisputed dates taken from the brief of counsel representing Mr. Lorimer at this time, to aid in a ready reference to different circumstances and events hereinafter more fully stated and considered. They are as follows:

The Forty-sixth General Assembly of Illinois met and organized January 6, 1909. On that day the house elected Edward D. Shurtleff speaker.

The first vote for United States Senator in the separate houses of the legislature was taken January 19, 1909. The first joint ballot for United States Senator was taken January 20, 1909. There were 95 joint ballots for United States Senator. More than 150 different men were voted for, for United States Senator, by that legislature.

The first vote for William Lorimer for United States Senator was cast May 13, 1909. William Lorimer was elected Senator on the ninety-fifth joint ballot, taken on the 26th day of May, 1909.

There were 202 members of the legislature present and voting on the ninety-fifth ballot, May 26, 1909. On that ballot William Lorimer received 108 votes for United States Senator; Albert J. Hopkins received 70 votes, and Lawrence B. Stringer received 24 votes. Senator Lorimer had a majority of 14 votes.

Two hundred and four members had been elected to the Forty-sixth General Assembly of Illinois. Paul Zaable, a member of the house, died in January, and the vacancy was not filled at that session. Frank P. Schmidt, a member of the senate, was not present at the taking of the ninety-fifth ballot.

The total number of Republicans elected to the house was 89; the total number of Democrats elected to the house was 64. The total number of Republicans in the senate was 38; the total number of Democrats in the senate was 13. The total number of Republicans elected to both houses of the legislature was 127; the total number of Democrats elected to both houses of the legislature was 77.

On the ninety-fifth ballot 55 Republican votes and 53 Democratic votes were cast for Mr. Lorimer.

William Lorimer was commissioned United States Senator by Gov. Deneen on May 27, 1909.

Senator Lorimer was sworn in and took his seat in the United States Senate June 18, 1909.

On April 30, 1910, the Chicago Tribune published the White story.

April 29, 1910, State's Attorney Wayman filed a petition for and obtained an order calling a special grand jury in Cook County.

May 2, 1910, the special grand jury convened and was sworn in.

Lee O'Neil Browne was indicted on the 6th day of May, 1910, on a charge of bribing Charles A. White to vote for Senator Lorimer.

May 28, 1910, Senator Lorimer made a speech in the United States Senate and demanded an investigation of the charges made by the Chicago Tribune April 30, 1910.

On June 7, 1910, Clifford W. Barnes filed charges in the Senate of the United States against Senator Lorimer.

June 20, 1910, the United States Senate adopted a resolution, which was as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate certain charges against William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and to report to the Senate whether in the election of said William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from said State of Illinois there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices; that said committee or subcommittee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress, to hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall seem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths, and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee."

A subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate of the United States, of which Senator Burrows was chairman, was appointed to investigate the charges against Senator Lorimer.

On the 7th day of June, 1910, Lee O'Neil Browne was placed on trial under the indictment returned against him. The jury in that trial disagreed and were discharged June 29, 1910. Lee O'Neil Browne was placed on trial the second time on the same indictment August 4, 1910. The jury in the second Lee O'Neil Browne trial returned a verdict of not guilty September 9, 1910.

September 20, 1910, the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate of the United States convened in Chicago to hear testimony. September 22, 1910, the subcommittee of the Senate held its first public hearing.

The subcommittee of the Senate concluded the hearing of testimony in Chicago October 8, 1910.

December 7, 1910, the subcommittee of the United States Senate took further testimony in Washington, D. C., and on that day concluded the public hearings.

December 21, 1910, the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate presented its report to the Senate of the United States. The report exonerated Senator Lorimer and found:

"In our opinion the title of Mr. Lorimer to a seat in the Senate has not been shown to be invalid by the use or employment of corrupt methods or practices."

On January 9, 1911, Senator Beveridge submitted his views to the Senate of the United States, dissenting from the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That William Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Illinois."

On January 30, 1911, Senator Frazier, a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted his views to the Senate, concurring in the resolution offered by Senator Beveridge.

The report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the resolution of Senator Beveridge were discussed and debated on the floor of the Senate at intervals until March 1, 1911.

On the 1st of March, 1911, the resolution of Senator Beveridge was determined in the negative by the Senate; a roll call thereon resulted in a vote—nays 46, yeas 40.

The Sixty-first Congress adjourned sine die at noon March 4, 1911.

Circumstances leading up to present investigation.

While the question of Mr. Lorimer's right to a seat in the United States Senate was under consideration and debate in that body, to wit, on January 17, 1911, a committee was appointed by the Senate of the Illinois Legislature, known as the Helm committee, to investigate the circumstances connected with the election of Mr. Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois. By a peculiar coincidence Mr. H. H. Kohlsaat, editor of the Chicago Record-Herald, on the same day addressed to the Hon. Elihu Root, a Senator of the United States from the State of New York, the following personal letter, containing information which, if true, would have had a direct bearing upon the question at issue before the Helm committee as well as in the Senate of the United States, but the source of which information and its authenticity he could not make public or consent to have investigated because of the circumstances under which he had received the same. The information Mr. Kohlsaat says was given to him in confidence and, as a newspaper man, he felt "the same obligation to maintain secrecy that a priest does of a confession."

The letter was as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., January 17, 1911.

Senator ELIHU ROOT,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just received a call from some well-known people here, among them Mr. Walter L. Fisher, asking me if I would not write you and tell you of an incident in the Lorimer senatorial election. My friends thought that if you had this personal knowledge it would be of assistance to you in strengthening your belief that money was used to elect Lorimer. The information was given to me in confidence, and as a newspaper man I feel the same obligation to maintain secrecy that a priest does of a confession.

Some time last June I met a friend who is general manager of a Chicago corporation with a capital of over $25,000,000. He said, "I have been intending to call on you for some days to tell you of an incident that occurred right after Lorimer's election a year ago. I had a visit from Edward Hines, the lumberman, and he told me that Lorimer's friends had had the opportunity of electing him to the Senate by putting up $100,000; that they had only a few days before the adjournment of the legislature and could not take the time to go around and raise the money, so a half dozen of Lorimer's friends underwrote the $100,000 and gave it to the proper agent. Lorimer was elected, and we are now asking some of the corporations to pay in their share. I am taking care of the down-town district and another man (mentioning his name) has charge of the stockyards. We figure that your share will be $10,000." My friend answered substantially as follows: "I can not give you any money for two reasons: First, we are not in that kind of business, and, second, if you have gotten yourselves into a hole why should you expect us to pull you out?"

On the strength of this statement the Record-Herald has explicitly stated several times, editorially, that $100,000 was raised to buy Lorimer's election, and we have never had a protest from anybody on it. The man who gave me this information is absolutely reliable. He had no object in telling me a falsehood, and I believe him thoroughly.

When Col. Roosevelt was here on his way to Cheyenne, I told him of the incident, and it was the prime motive that prompted him to decline to sit at the Hamilton Club banquet with Lorimer.

Hoping that this may be of some value to you, believe me,

Yours, sincerely,

H. H. KOHLSAAT.

On February 11, 1911, Senator Root replied to this letter, strongly urging Mr. Kohlsaat to induce the friend who had given him the information upon which his letter was based to disclose his identity.

Upon receipt of Senator Root's letter Mr. Kohlsaat sent for Mr. Clarence S. Funk, general manager of the International Harvester Co., the friend to whom he referred in his letter to Senator Root as his informant, but whose name he had not revealed and, showing him the letter, told him that he was the only man who could settle that question. Mr. Funk, after full consideration, refused to allow his name to be given and, on February 15, 1911, Mr. Kohlsaat so informed Senator Root in the following letter:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 15, 1911.

DEAR SENATOR ROOT: Your favor of the 11th at hand. I agree with you my friend's testimony would greatly help at this time, but it would absolutely ruin him to take the stand. He was approached as an officer of the company, not as an individual, and could not come out in the open without the consent of the directors, some of whom are friendly to Lorimer. You can imagine the situation he is, and would be, in.

I know some of the forces at work to keep Lorimer in the Senate. If they succeed, God help us; a day of reckoning will surely come to the American people.

The weakness of the anti-Lorimerites is that the Chicago Tribune is back of the fight to unseat Lorimer. That paper is rendering a great service to the people of these United States.

Your speech made a great impression throughout the West. It was a wonderful plea for the right.

Yours, faithfully, H. H. KOHLSAAT.

To Senator ELIHU ROOT,
Washington, D. C.

On the same day, February 15, 1911, Mr. Kohlsaat published in the Record-Herald an editorial in which the following language was used:

"Do we know all there is to be known concerning the $100,000 fund that was raised to pay for Lorimer's votes?"

This attracted wide attention and caused inquiries to be made of Mr. Kohlsaat by Senator La Follette and others who were anxious to ascertain upon what authority such statement and inquiry were made, and what the facts were with respect to the raising of the alleged fund.

Senator La Follette telegraphed Mr. Kohlsaat asking for information regarding the allegation of the existence of a fund of $100,000, and received in reply the following telegram:

CHICAGO, February 21, 1911.

Senator LA FOLLETTE, Washington, D. C.:

If I had all the details of the raising and disposition of the $100,000, would not have asked the editorial question. That $100,000 was raised for that purpose I have absolutely no shadow of doubt, but can not prove. We have made the assertion a number of times editorially. The assertion has never been challenged. You are the first person to ask for particulars.

H. H. KOHLSAAT.

Senator La Follette was exceedingly anxious to secure the information and endeavored to induce Mr. Kohlsaat to go to Washington, and, failing, wired his friend, Mr. Charles R. Crane, to see and induce Mr. Kohlsaat to do so. Mr. Crane visited Mr. Kohlsaat, exhibited the telegram, and urged him to go. Mr. Kohlsaat repeated to Mr. Crane the story he had written to Senator Root, but refused either to visit Washington or to reveal the name of his informant. Immediately thereafter Mr. Kohlsaat sent the following telegram to Senator La Follette:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 22, 1911.

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.:

Please ask Senator Root to show you my letters of January 17 and February 15. I gave Charles Crane this morning my reasons for not giving names. He agreed with me that it would not be just right or wise to do so.

H. H. KOHLSAAT.

Neither Senator made public the contents of such letters and telegrams during the debates in the Senate, and Mr. Lorimer's right to retain his seat in the United States Senate was determined in his favor by vote of that body on the 1st day of March, 1911.

Almost a month thereafter the Helm committee, which did not commence taking testimony until March 28, 1911, summoned Mr. Kohlsaat as a witness to testify regarding the editorial in question and the facts upon which it was based, whereupon the following proceedings were had:

"WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, 1911—9.45 O'CLOCK A. M.

"The committee convened pursuant to the call of the chair.

"Herman H. Kohlsaat, called as a witness herein, being first duly sworn, was examined by Mr. Healy, and testified as follows:

"Q. What is your full name?—A. Herman H. Kohlsaat.

"Q. Your residence is in Chicago?—A. Chicago.

"Q. You are the editor and proprietor of the Chicago Record-Herald?—A. Yes.

"Q. That is a newspaper published in the city of Chicago?—A. It is, when the strikers do not shut us up.

"Q. As editor and proprietor of that paper, I assume, Mr. Kohlsaat, that you are—that you have general supervision and control over it?—A. Yes.

"Q. Exercise a supervisory control over the paper and over the editorial pages?—A. Yes.

"Q. In February of this year, Mr. Kohlsaat, there was published in the Chicago Record-Herald an editorial in reference to the senatorial action at Springfield. I will show you a copy of that editorial, or what purports to be a substantial copy [handing document to witness].—A. (Examining document). I think that is practically correct, because that is the way I felt and feel.

"Q. That editorial, then, was written by you?—A. Dictated.

"Q. Yes?—A. Yes.

"Q. You had information upon which that editorial was based?—A. Yes.

"Q. Have you any objection to giving the committee that information?—A. Yes.

"Q. You have objection?—A. Yes.

"Q. Well, do you object to giving the committee the information which you had without at this time perhaps identifying the individual or individuals who gave you the information?—A. Yes; because if I did that it would naturally lead up to the main party in the controversy, and it would undo just what I do not want to do.

"Q. That is what I want to show; if there is any main party here it will lead up to, that is what we want to show.—A. Can not I tell this in my own way?

"Q. Yes, certainly.—A. I am willing to answer questions as you put them.

"Q. Go ahead and make any statement that you please.

"Senator BURTON. Can I see that paper?

"Mr. HEALY. I have some other copies here. Just a minute; perhaps you might let the committee familiarize themselves with the edirorial first.

"(Said copy of said editorial is in words and figures as follows, to wit:)

[Wednesday, Feb. 15, 1911.]

"Bailey's fallacy—with applications.

"Senator Bailey has almost convinced himself that there was no corruption at all in the Illinois Legislature which sent Lorimer to the Senate. His grand 'forgery' climax was cruelly spoiled, but undaunted he asserted that there was little except suspicion and talk in the Lorimer and jack-pot scandals. Generalizing, he contends that there is much less corruption and graft in the country than many people, misled by muckrakers, have been led to believe.

"Now, this general statement may be true without lending any force whatever to Bailey's view of concrete cases. Do we know all that we might about the Illinois jack pot? Do we know all there is to know concerning the $100,000 fund that was raised to pay for Lorimer votes? Do we know the true inwardness of the Browne, Erbstein, Keeley trials?

"In some instances there is undoubtedly more cry than there is wool in muckraking affairs. In others, like the Albany Allds-Conger scandal, the Illinois Lorimer affair and jack pot, the facts are much graver than the average voter in certain districts realizes, or men like Browne, Broderick, or Wilson would never have been reelected. If all the facts were known about Springfield and Albany graft, a good many men would be moving penitentiaryward. In cases of bribery, perjury, looting of public treasuries it is not easy to get the 'parties' to talk, for obvious reasons. What loose writers here and there say about unspecified graft has no bearing on concrete cases. In such cases the question is one of evidence—its quantity and quality—and of inference, probability, reasonable interpretation.

"(Mr. Healy here passed copies of the document to the members of the committee.)

"By Mr. HEALY:

"Q. There were a number of editorials written along that same line, were there not? A. Yes.

"Q. About that time?—A. Yes. Shall I just tell this in my own way?

"Q. Just tell it in your own way, yes.—A. Shortly after the Chicago Tribune published Representative White's story last spring I met a friend of mine, a man of the highest character, intelligence, and a man who does not make reckless statements, and he gave me a detailed account of the raising of $100,000 to bring about the election of Mr. Lorimer. He gave it to me in confidence. I told him that the confidence would not be betrayed. With that feeling of perfect security that this man's information that he gave me was absolutely reliable, I took the position that the election should be investigated and came out editorially and backed the Tribune in its fight. The natural inclination in cases of that kind, where there are two great papers striving in the same field for circulation, advertising, and influence, is to, in the language of the street, knock the other paper's story. But I was so impressed with the truth of this that I came out editorially next day after this and backed the Tribune in their story, and have done it ever since.

"As I say, this was given to me in confidence. The cardinal principle of an honorable, upright, newspaper man is confidence. When I engage a cub reporter or put out a correspondent or a financial man on the street, I say: 'Now, one thing you must understand from the start, that when a man gives you a piece of information in confidence you, under no circumstances whatever, must ever divulge his name. If you do, you will be discharged, no matter how important and vital to the newspaper that information is.' About a month ago we printed a story in Chicago exclusively that I would have been glad to pay $500 for—a big financial story. I asked the managing editor who got it, and he told me, and I sent for the man and I complimented him on his story, and then said, 'Who gave it to you?' He said, 'I got it in confidence.' I said, 'If you tell me I will discharge you.'

"Now, I have talked that to my boys and men and correspondents, as Mr. Evans here can assure you personally, for 20 years, and nothing under heaven would make me set an example of breach of confidence to my men and to the other newspaper reporters and the men of this country. There is no one that is more interested in maintaining that status of correct behavior between newspaper men and public men than you gentlemen yourselves. Suppose that during this trial I had given the name of my informant and he had given the testimony; it would have had a wonderful influence in the case. But he is—I asked him if he had changed his mind and if I was at liberty to give the information, and he said, 'No, I could not release you'; and he told me why, and his reasons were absolutely sufficient, and I would not violate that confidence for anything.

"Some of the Senators in Washington got hold of these same editorials, and Senator Root and others asked me if I could bring that evidence out. I told them I could not and would not under any circumstances. When I got the summons from your committee to appear here—I have a great respect for any legislative committees that are out trying to probe and clean up corruption in the State—I came down here, but I wish that some one of the committee had come to see me beforehand, and I think I would not have had to sleep in upper 13 on the Alton last night, or try to sleep. I am sorry I can not do it, that I can not give you the information, but it is really impossible for me to violate that confidence. I have been very frank with you and will answer any question except leading questions that you wish to put to me.

"Q. Did this gentleman, whose identity you do not care to disclose, tell you that he had been personally involved in the matter, or came into personal contact with some one who had——A. Mr. Healy, I will have to refuse to answer all those questions, because you are too clever for me, and if I got started you might uncover some things that I would not want to go into. I have heard you before juries.

"Q. Well, that is very complimentary, Mr. Kohlsaat, but at the same time, I think you are quite capable of taking care of yourself.—A. Well, I find the safest way is to make a complete straight statement in the beginning and then not diverge.

"Q. And in your present frame and attitude of mind that is all the information that you would care to give the committee at this time?—A. Yes. I simply say that I am exactly of the same opinion to-day as I was when those editorials were written. All those editorials were written with this object in view. I felt that I was perfectly justified in taking the position, although legally I might not be able to accomplish anything. I think morally the support that we gave has been very beneficial, not only to the State of Illinois but to the country at large. The question of one man's election to the United States Senate cuts very little figure. I believe that this investigation that has gone on and the publicity and everything else has had a wholesome effect on the whole country, and I feel I would be lax in my duty as a leader in public opinion if I had not used the instrument at hand to strengthen public opinion.

"Q. Well, the information you got at that time impressed you with its accuracy and truth?—A. Absolutely.

"Q. And you were sufficiently impressed to justify the publication of the editorial which has been called to your attention? A.—Yes. And if you will read the editorials you will see that they are all written so that I could not be pulled up in a criminal-libel case and be made to tell the names. I never have used any names.

"Q. I am going to ask you some leading questions now, Mr. Kohlsaat. Did this informant tell you that he was approached with the request that he should contribute $10,000 to this $100,000 fund?—A. I decline to answer, Mr. Healy.

"Q. And which contribution on his part was to be used in conjunction with the senatorial election in Illinois in 1909?—A. I must decline to answer.

"Q. Did he tell you that he was one of the 10 men who were asked to contribute to such a fund?—A. I decline to answer.

"Q. Did he inform you that a fund of $100,000 had been raised to induce the election of Senator Lorimer in the State of Illinois in 1909, and that subsequently the man or men who raised that fund desired to reimburse themselves?—A. Split your question, please, Mr. Healy.

"Mr. HEALY. Just read the first part of the question.

"(The following portion of the question was read: 'Did he inform you that a fund of $100,000 had been raised to induce the election of Senator Lorimer in the State of Illinois?')

"A. He did.

"Q. Did he also tell you that the man or men who had raised that $100,000 fund desired to reimburse themselves, or solicit 10 other men, residents of Chicago, to make that amount good?—A. I must decline to answer.

"Q. And did he tell you that he was one of the men so approached?—A. I decline to answer.

"Q. Did he give you the name or names of men who approached him, and what they said to him in connection with the matter?—A. I must decline to answer.

"Q. I assume that information was obtained—I believe you have answered this question, but in order to have the record clear in that respect, I assume that information was obtained at or about the time these editorials were published?—A. I can not fix that date in my mind, but it was after the publication of the White letter, very shortly after the publication of the White letter.

"Q. That was in April or May, 1910, wasn't it?—A. Well, it was last spring, I did not——

"Q. About a year ago?—A. Just about a year ago.

"Q. Mr. Kohlsaat, did you verify the information received from this unnamed person in any other way?—A. No; I did not have to. I could not verify it, but so many things developed in the trials and everywhere else afterwards that corroborated it, although this man's word personally to me was all that was necessary.

"Q. Well, by verification, I mean did you send to any of the persons whom he had named——A. Oh, no, no.

"Q. And cause them to be interviewed?—A. No; the matter came to me in confidence, and I could not go and ask a man such a question. He would say, 'What is your authority?' And I am in duty bound when I ask a man a question of that kind, that has an insult in the queston, to have some basis for it.

"Q. This man who gave you the information is a resident of Chicago?—A. I refuse to answer. I decline to answer, to put it politely.

"Q. Is he still living, as far as you know?—A. Yes.

"Mr. HEALY. Well, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to consider the matter perhaps in executive session and call Mr. Kohlsaat a little later, perhaps.

"The WITNESS. Could I get away at noon, gentlemen, because I have important business in Chicago?

"Senator BURTON. I wish to ask him some questions.

"Chairman HELM. Before we proceed with the executive session you may ask some questions.

"By Senator BURTON:

"Q. Mr. Kohlsaat, you say you are editor of the Record-Herald?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Your paper has insisted upon this investigation being conducted?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And yet when you are called here you refuse to aid us in that investigation? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Will you denounce any citizen that takes the same stand that you do and refuses to give us information by reason of a personal confidence?—A. I think a man that would violate a personal confidence is not worth his salt, and a newspaper man beyond all others. We could not run an honorable upright newspaper if we did it, and you, and you gentlemen here, are tremendously interested that there should be a straightforward, manly, decent press.

"Q. Where do you draw the distinction between a private citizen and the editor of a great paper when he undertakes to purge the general assembly of a class of men that you have charged are here?—A. Well, it may be hard for me to impress that upon you, but in my story I told you that I had made that a cardinal principle with all my men, and I am not going to start out by giving them a bad example, no matter what the consequence might be.

"Q. Are you sure you are not giving them a very bad example now?—A. No.

"Q. How can you expect a private citizen to come here and give us information when a man occupying the position you do comes here and refuses to disclose the source of his information that inspired the editorial you have written?—A. Well, I think that a newspaper man, an editor's position, is entirely different from a private individual, but if I were a private individual and gave my word I would not break it any more than I would as a newspaper man.

"Q. Then you think the private citizen that comes here and has obtained information in confidence is justified in refusing to answer, the same as you? A. If that is his code of morals. That is my code. I can not be responsible for other people's.

"Q. Have you a code of morals that justifies you in writing editorials and insisting that there should be a searching investigation and yet when called before this committee to give information you refuse to give it? Is that your code of morals?—A. Well, I do not think that your question is fair. I think that I have stated so clearly my position in this thing, and that ——

"Senator McKenzie. Isn't it true, Mr. Kohlsaat, that in dealing with all public men and getting information from your correspondents that is treated as a privileged communication and the name of the giver of the information is held in the background? Isn't that right; isn't that the way you get the news?—A. It is, if it was given in confidence. Mr. Evans there is my Springfield correspondent. If Senator McKenzie were to give Mr. Evans anything and say, 'Mr. Evans, I don't want my name to appear in this in any manner, shape, or form,' and Mr. Evans said, 'It will not,' nobody could drag it out of him. I could not drag it out of him, and if I could I would not have him here.

"Q. You would not get very much, either.—A. That is so. [Addressing Senator Burton.] Answering your question, I have had very close personal relations with three Presidents of the United States who have sent for me and told me things in confidence that were vital in the extreme. We fought for those principles because they said they wanted to bring them about, they wanted to create public sentiment, and if I had told especially one thing that I have in mind now, when asked by a number of my newspaper editorial associates around the country, the source of the information, it would have created a racket on both sides of the water. But that man knew that he was perfectly safe in talking to me, and when a newspaper man has a reputation of violating confidence his usefulness as a public citizen and leader ceases from that moment on. Now, following along as a private individual, I can not do that. I have got all the trouble I can have looking out for myself, but that is my attitude.

"Mr. Healy. I think before we proceed further in asking questions we had better go into executive session, and we will ask everybody else to retire from the room for the present.

"(Whereupon the committee went into executive session, at the conclusion of which the open session was resumed and the following proceedings had:)

"Chairman Helm. Mr. Kohlsaat, the committee has agreed that we will have to require you to answer, and if you refuse that we will report the matter to the senate and request you to appear back here next Wednesday to see what the senate desires to do in the matter. Will you still persist in refusing to answer?—A. Yes.

"Q. You decline to make any further disclosure?—A. Yes. Could you make that Thursday? You see Tuesday is election day, and I am up pretty nearly all night.

"Chairman Helm. That will be satisfactory.

"Mr. Healy. That will be at what hour?

"Chairman Helm. What hour will satisfy you?

"Mr. Healy. You will probably have to be here, Mr. Kohlsaat, at the morning session of the senate. I suggest we make it 10 o'clock, next Thursday, April 6.

"(The committee then took a recess until 2 o'clock of the same day, Wednesday, March 29, 1911.)"

Having persistently refused to reveal the name of his informant, and the committee having insisted that he do so, Mr. Kohlsaat was excused for a week, pending action of the Illinois Senate thereon, and he returned to Chicago. The press gave great publicity to the incident, emphasizing the fact that he was facing a possible arrest and imprisonment should he persist in such refusal, and much public interest was aroused, the result of all which was that Mr. Clarence S. Funk came forward and for the first time consented that his name as such informant be disclosed; and on April 5, 1911, Mr. Funk, to save Mr. Kohlsaat from further trouble, assumed the responsibility for such statement and testified before the Helm committee at Springfield as follows:

"Clarence S. Funk, called as a witness herein, being first duly sworn, was examined by Mr. Healy and testified as follows:

"Q. What is your full name, Mr. Funk?—A. Clarence S. Funk.

"Q. Where do you live?—A. In Oak Park, Chicago.

"Q. How old a man are you?—A. Forty-four.

"Q. You are married?—A. Yes.

"Q. Have a family?—A. Yes.

"Q. And what is your business?—A. I am general manager of the International Harvester Co.

"Q. How long have you occupied that position, approximately?—A. Since November 1, 1906.

"Q. And where are your headquarters?—A. Harvester Building, Chicago.

"Q. How long have you been connected with the harvester company in any way? A. Since its organization.

"Q. And about how long is that?—A. Oh, nine years.

"Senator Helm. Are there other witnesses that you desire to have excluded?

"Mr. Healy. No; no others. And I did not ask to have Mr. Funk excluded because the statement was simply preliminary.

"Q. What was your business before that, Mr. Funk?—A. I was sales manager for the Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co., one of the concerns that sold out to the harvester company.

"Q. What, generally, are your duties as general manager of the International Harvester Co.?—A. General supervision over the operating end of the business.

"Q. I direct your attention to a conversation that you had with Edward Hines, of the Edward Hines Lumber Co., in the latter part of the month of May, 1909, or the early part of the month of June, 1909. Did such a conversation take place?—A. Well, I can not identify the month. I had a conversation with Edward Hines shortly after Lorimer was elected United States Senator by the legislature.

"Q. Well, it is in the record here that the election of Senator Lorimer was on the 26th day of May, 1909. Directing your mind to that time, or about that time, when was it that this conversation occurred?—A. It was shortly after that. I could not say whether it was 5 days or 10, but it was within a short time afterwards.

"Q. Where did that conversation take place?—A. Union League Club, Chicago.

"Q. And with whom was the conversation?—A. Edward Hines.

"Q. Was the conference arranged in any way or was it more or less accidental?—A. I met Mr. Hines accidentally, and he said he had been trying to get a chance to see me or get time to see me.

"Q. In what part of the Union League Club did that conversation take place?—A. In the large lounging room right off of the entrance.

"Q. And about what time of the day, Mr. Funk?—A. It was after lunch, in the afternoon.

"Q. You had gone over there to get your luncheon?—A. Yes. I was just coming out.

"Q. Coming down from the luncheon room, you met him in the lounging room?—A. Yes.

"Q. Now, will you tell the committee, Mr. Funk, what occurred and what was said at that conversation by Mr. Hines and by yourself?—A. Do you want me to undertake to repeat verbatim?

"Q As near as you can remember; otherwise the substance of the conversation.

Senator Helm. Where you can remember the exact language you will give it, and where you can not, then give the substance.

"A. Well, he said I was just the fellow he had been looking for, or trying to see, and said he wanted to talk to me a minute. So we went and sat down on one of the leather couches there on the side of the room, and without any preliminaries, and quite as a matter of course, he said, 'Well, we put Lorimer over down at Springfield, but it cost us about a hundred thousand dollars to do it.' Then he went on to say that they had had to act quickly when the time came; that they had had no chance to consult anyone beforehand. I think his words were these, 'We had to act quickly when the time came, so we put up the money.' Then he said, 'We—now we are seeing some of our friends so as to get it fixed up.' He says they had advanced the money; that they were now seeing several people whom they thought would be interested to get them to reimburse them. I asked him why he came to us. I said, 'Why do you come to us?' —meaning the harvester company. He said, 'Well, you people are just as much interested as any of us in having the right kind of a man at Washington.' Well, I said—I think I replied, and said, 'We won't have anything to do with that matter at all.'

He said, 'Why not?' I said, 'Simply because we are not in that sort of business.' And we had some aimless discussion back and forth, and I remember I asked him how much he was getting from his different friends. He said, 'Well, of course, we can only go to a few big people; but if about 10 of us will put up $10,000 apiece that will clean it up.' That is the substance of the conversation. I am repeating it verbatim just as far as I can, Mr. Chairman. I do not undertake to say that it is absolutely exact.

"I left him then in just a moment. As I left he asked me to think it over. I made no reply to that. I just walekd away.

"Q. Is that the conversation as you remember it now, Mr. Funk, or do you recall anything else which was said with reference to the person to whom the money was to be sent?—A. Well, he—yes, he mentioned another name. Before I had any chance to say anything he had told me this, that he also mentioned the name of the man to whom he wanted me to send the money.

"Q. Who was that man?—A. I do not like to answer that question, because I have no evidence that the man he named had any knowledge of the transaction, had anything to do with it; and I do not want to drag in the name of another man in a matter of this kind, if I can help myself. I have no evidence beyond his statement to me."

After considerable discussion, the committee having held that the name should be revealed, the witness said:

"Well, I will answer, under protest. He told me to send the money to Ed. Tilden.

"Mr. HEALY:

"Q. Who is Ed. Tilden, if you know?—A. Well, I think he is president or vice president of some one of the banks at the stockyards, and I believe he is one of the officials of the National Packing Co. I don't know——

"Q. He is president of the National Packing Co., isn't he, or connected in some official way with that company?—A. I understand so."

Proceedings in the Senate of the United States.

This was the first information given to the public or which had come to the Senate or to any committee of the Senate concerning this now famous interview.

The press of the country gave great publicity to Mr. Funk's testimony before the Helm committee, and the following day, April 6, 1911, Senator La Follette introduced into the Senate a resolution, the preamble of which was as follows:

"Whereas the Senate, by resolution adopted on the twentieth day of June, nineteen hundred and ten, authorized and directed the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate certain charges against William Lorimer, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and to report to the Senate whether, in the election of said Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from said State of Illinois, there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices; and

"Whereas said committee, pursuant to said resolution, took the testimony of a large number of witnesses, reduced the testimony to printed form, and reported the same to the Senate, which was thereafter considered and acted upon by the Senate; and

"Whereas the Illinois State Senate thereafter appointed a committee to investigate like charges against William Lorimer and to report to said State senate whether in the election of said Lorimer to the United States Senate corrupt methods and practices were employed and used; and

"Whereas as it appears from the published reports of the proceedings of the said Illinois State Senate committee that witnesses who were not called and sworn by the committee of this Senate appointed to investigate said charges have appeared before the said committee of the Illinois State Senate, and upon being interrogated have given important material testimony tending to prove that one hundred thousand dollars was corruptly expended to secure the election of William Lorimer to the United States Senate."

The resolution provided for the appointment of Senators Works, Townsend, McLean, Kern, and Pomerene as a committee to investigate "and report to the Senate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices."

On May 22 Mr. Dillingham introduced a resolution providing for an investigation of the same character by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the preamble of which was as follows:

"Whereas since the action by the Senate on the resolution of June twentieth, nineteen hundred and ten, relating to the seat of William Lorimer, it is represented that new testimony has been discovered; and

"Whereas the Senate of the State of Illinois did on the eighteenth day of May, nineteen hundred and eleven, adopt the following resolutions:

"'Whereas, under S. Res. 17, a committee was appointed to investigate charges of corruption and official misconduct against members of this senate; and

"Whereas the said committee has reported the result of its investigation to this senate, from which it appears that there were important and material witnesses without the State of Illinois, whose attendance it could not legally compel and which witnesses refused voluntarily to appear; and

"'Whereas said committee was seriously impeded in the performance of its duties by what we believe to be the unwarranted action of a certain judge; and

"'Whereas it appears from the report of said committee that despite its inability to compel the attendance of such foreign witnesses and the adverse action of said judge, sufficient evidence was procured to show that without bribery and corruption and by reason of the failure of certain senators and representatives during the differ- ent roll calls, to carry out the will of the people as expressed at the polls, in the choice for a United States Senator, which action we deem most reprehensible, and should be condemned, and which we hereby condemn.'"

On the same day, May 22, 1911, Senator La Follette began a speech, dealing generally with the question of the validity of Mr. Lorimer's election, alleging that new and material evidence had been produced through the investigation of the Helm committee, quoting Mr. Funk's testimony regarding his interview with Mr. Hines, as well as the testimony given before that committee in relation to an alleged conversation between Christian F. Wiehe and William M. Burgess on a railroad train; he continued his remarks on May 23 and 24, and concluded them on May 26. Among other things, Senator La Follette said:

"Shortly before the final vote on this case at the last session, when the question was before the Senate of agreeing by unanimous consent to fix a time to vote, I interfered. I objected in the hope that I could, before the Senate completed its consideration and disposed of this case, submit to the Senate reasons why the case should be still further investigated.

"After making such objection I made the most diligent efforts to secure facts of which I had received some intimation, in order to lay them before the Senate and induce it to defer further consideration of the case until there had been a more complete and thorough investigation.

"But, sir, with all that I could do, I was not able to come before the Senate so prepared that I would feel warranted in asking that it arrest the progress of the case and reopen it."

On the same day Senator Bailey engaged in the debate, and, among other things, said:

"I speak without their authority, but I am sure that I speak with absolute accuracy, when I say that in view of the testimony elicited by one of its committees, and in view of the resolution adopted by the State Senate of Illinois, every Democratic Senator favors a further and a thorough inquiry into the election of Senator Lorimer. That was the mind of Democratic Senators before the Senator from Wisconsin began his extended address, and that is the mind of Democratic Senators since he has concluded it. * * *

"We favor this investigation because it is alleged that new and material evidence of corruption has been found. * * * It is upon this new evidence we base our votes and not upon any dissatisfaction with the former judgment of the Senate, nor upon any criticism with the work of the subcommittee which conducted the former investigation, * * * and it is no fair subject of criticism against it that some of the witnesses to those transactions concealed their knowledge from that committee and afterwards imparted it to another committee or to other people.

"If there were no new evidence, I would not vote to grant a new trial. * * * We must some time reach the end of even a proceeding like this; and if, without the discovery of new and material evidence, the Senate of each succeeding Congress could reopen and review the judgment of the preceding Senate, we would forever be in a struggle over questions like this."

On May 26, 1911, Mr. Dillingham also took part in the debate, saying among other things:

"It seems to me, in consideration of the new evidence which has been discovered by the committee of the Illinois Senate, and in view of the difficulties it has encountered in securing witnesses from other States, and especially in view of the request of that body that the case be further investigated by the Senate of the United States, that this body * * * should follow the lines which the courts of law have always adopted under similar circumstances, and grant a new hearing and make further investigation."

In support of his position, Senator Dillingham called attention to the Du Pont case in 1897, reading from the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, was then chairman, as follows:

"The majority of your committee now, as then, are of the opinion that this decision of the Senate was wrong; but the Senate is made by the Constitution the judge of election, qualifications, and returns of its Members, and its judgment is just as binding in law, in all constitutional vigor and potency, when it is rendered by one majority as when it is unanimous.

"It is clear that the word 'judge' in the Constitution was used advisedly. The Senate in the case provided for is to declare a result depending upon the application of law to existing facts, and is not to be affected in its action by the desire of its Members or by their opinion as to public policies or public interest. Its action determines great constitutional rights—the title of an individual citizen to a high office and the title of a sovereign State to be represented in the Senate by the person of its choice. We can not doubt that this declaration of the Senate is a judgment in the sense in which that word is used by judicial tribunals. We can conceive of no case which can arise in human affairs where it is more important that a judgment of any court should be respected and should stand unaffected by caprice or anything likely to excite passion or to tempt virtue. When the Senate decided the question it was sitting as a high constitutional court. In its action we think it ought to respect the principles, in giving effect to its own decision, which have been established in other judicial tribunals in like cases and which the experience of mankind has found safe and salutary."

And further:

"We do not doubt that the Senate, like other courts, may review its own judgments where new evidence has been discovered, or where by reason of fraud or accident it appears that the judgment ought to be reviewed. The remedy which in other courts may be given by writs of review or error or bills of review may doubtless be given here by a simple vote reversing the first adjudication. We have no doubt that a legal doctrine involved in a former judgment of the Senate may be overruled in later cases. But there is no case known in other judicial tribunals in which a final judgment in the same case can be rescinded or reversed merely because the composition of the court has changed or because the members of the court who originally decided it have changed their minds as to the law or facts which is involved."

On May 23, 1911, Senator Martin introduced a resolution providing for a similar investigation by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the preamble of which was as follows:

"Whereas the Senate adopted a resolution June twentieth, nineteen hundred and ten, directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the charges relating to the election of William Lorimer to the Senate of the United States; and

"Whereas since the Senate voted on the report of that committee it is represented that new material testimony has been discovered in reference to such matter; and

"Whereas the senate of the State of Illinois, on the eighteenth of May, nineteen hundred and eleven, adopted a resolution for the reasons therein stated, requesting the Senate of the United States to institute further investigation of the election of William Lorimer to the Senate."

A large number of Senators participated in the debates, which extended from May 22 to June 7, 1911. The greater portion of the time was occupied in a discussion of the work of the former committee and the question of the personnel of the committee to be appointed to conduct the investigation proposed in the several resolutions which were then pending in the Senate. All who took part in these debates favored the reopening of the case, and almost all, if not all, based their action on the ground of newly discovered evidence. As a result of these debates, on June 7, 1911, the following resolution, introduced by Mr. Dillingham, was adopted:

"Resolved, That a committee of the United States Senate consisting of the following members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections: Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Kenyon, Johnston, Fletcher, Kern, and Lea, be,and are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed forthwith to investigate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices.

"That said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers, counsel, accountants, and such other assistants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths; and as early as practicable to report to the Senate the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

"The committee is further and specially instructed to inquire fully into and report upon the sources and use of the alleged 'jack-pot' fund, or any other fund, in its relation to and effect, if any, upon the election of William Lorimer to the Senate."

Results of the investigation.

Before taking up for examination the various lines of evidence which have a bearing upon the question submitted to the committee for its investigation, the committee desires to call attention to the fact, well known to the Senate but apparently unknown to a large proportion of the people of the United States, that the investigation is not complicated by any charges which involve Mr. Lorimer's private character, the discharge of his public duties, or any other charge upon which his expulsion from the Senate might be predicated.

The only duty which was laid upon the committee in the first investigation or which has been laid upon this committee is "To investigate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt practices."

The newly discovered evidence.

The newly discovered evidence, to which reference is made in the preambles of the resolutions offered in the Senate and to which reference was made in the debates on the same, and the supposed existence of which resulted in the adoption of the resolution of the Senate under which this investigation has been conducted, all bore upon the question whether a fund of $100.000 was raised by or through the efforts of Edward Hines, and others acting with him, or by any other person or persons, with or without his knowledge, which was corruptly used or expended in whole or in part to secure the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois by the legislature of that Commonwealth on the 26th day of May, 1909.

The committee, after the most thorough investigation, during which every source of information has been probed, has failed to find any evidence that a fund of $100,000, or of any other sum, was raised or spent by Edward Hines or by him in connection with others, or with his knowledge, or by any other person or persons, to be used in or in connection with the election of Mr. Lorimer to the Senate of the United States, or that any corrupt practices were employed in such election.

The only newly discovered evidence that can be said to refer either to the raising or the existence or to the use of such a fund is that given by Clarence S. Funk, regarding an interview had by him with Edward Hines on May 27, 1909, and that given by William M. Burgess concerning an alleged conversation with C. F. Wiehe, to which reference is hereinafter made.

The evidence given by Mr. Funk before this committee is substantially as follows:

That shortly after the election of Mr. Lorimer Mr. Hines approached him in the Union League Club, Chicago, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock, and said: "Hello! You are just the man I was looking for," or "that I wanted to see."

"Mr. MARBLE. What did you say?

"Mr. FUNK. He said: 'I want to see you a moment.'

"Mr. MARBLE. What did you say to him?

"Mr. FUNK. I probably said 'Hello.' I don't remember.

"Mr. MARBLE. What next?

"Mr. FUNK. We walked off toward the end of the room, to the nearest couch, and sat down on the couch. Do you want me to tell what happened?

"Mr. MARBLE. Yes; go right ahead.

"Mr. FUNK. Yes. He seemed to be feeling rather exuberant at the time, and he said: 'Well, we put Lorimer over down at Springfield, but it cost us $100,000 to do it,' or 'about $100,000.'

"Mr. MARBLE. What else?

"Mr. FUNK. Then he went on to explain that they had to act quickly when the time came and did not have any time to consult anybody. And he said: 'So we put up the money. Now, we are seeing some of our friends to get the matter fixed up.'

"Mr. MARBLE. What else?

"Mr. FUNK. I inquired along about that time, how much he was getting from his different friends, and he said: 'Well, we can only go to a few big people; but if about 10 of us would put up $10,000 apiece we would clean it up.' I asked him why he came to me, and he said: 'Because you are as much interested as anybody in having the right kind of a man in Washington.' I told him we would not have anything to do with the matter. He wanted to know why, and I said: 'Because we are not in that kind of business.'" (544–545.)

Mr. Funk further testified that so far as he was aware there was no personal unfriendliness between them; that they did not shake hands at parting, and he does not know where Mr. Hines walked when he left him.

"Senator LEA. Was Mr. Tilden's name mentioned in that conversation—Mr. Ed. Tilden?

"Mr. FUNK. Yes, sir.

"Senator LEA. Tell us about that, please.

"Mr. FUNK. Well, I suppose there is no use of my protesting about bringing in his name, because I have already made my protest in the record. But I want to repeat that I dislike very much to bring in the name of a man simply on Mr. Hines's statement. Mr. Tilden's name was used before he got through his talk. He said: 'Just send the money to Ed. Tilden.' Assuming that we were going to send it, of course." (545, 546–549, 80–85.)

Further testifying, Mr. Funk said:

"He seemed to assume that it would be worth $10,000 to the International Harvester Co. to have the right kind of a man in the Senate from Illinois. (546.)

"Senator KENYON. How early in the conversation did he mention Mr. Tilden's name?

"Mr. FUNK. I think he mentioned it in connection with the contribution of $10,000 apiece by several big people. He talked rapidly, and rather assumed that the thing was going to be done, and he mentioned Tilden's name before I had a chance to say anything. * * * He said that he thought if 10 big people would contribute $10,000 apiece that would clean the matter up. He said: 'Just send the money to Ed. Tilden.'

"Senator JONES. You had not had any opportunity to say anything to him before that?

"Mr. FUNK. No; I let him talk. He wanted to talk, and I was willing to listen until he got through.

"Senator JONES. You made no answer of any kind to his suggestion that it had cost $100,000 to put Mr. Lorimer over?

"Mr. FUNK. No; I think he went right along. That is my recollection. He did not stop there. He simply stated it as a fact, and then went on with his argument.

"Senator JOHNSTON. You did ask him how much he expected you to contribute?

"Mr. FUNK. No; I asked him how much he was getting from his different friends, as I recall it." (546–547.)

How the story was regarded and how it was used.

The subsequent history of this incident, so far as Mr. Funk's conduct is concerned, bears out the conclusion that even if it occurred as he testified he regarded it as unimportant. While he testified that soon after its occurrence he communicated it to the president and to the general counsel of the International Harvester Co. and repeated the substance of it to the assistant manager (Funk, 556, 587), it was never again mentioned between them for a period of 21 months (Funk, 556; Bancroft, 384, 397–399; McCormick, 11–12), and the only other person to whom, so far as the evidence shows, he ever communicated it until he testified before the Helm committee in April, 1911 Funk, 556), was Mr. Kohlsaat, editor of the Chicago Record-Herald, a bitter political enemy of Mr. H. H. Lorimer, with whom he had a street conversation in Chicago immediately are the publication of White's jackpot story in the Chicago Tribune on April 30, 1910..

That he did not then consider the story as a factor of any value in the vigorous investigations which followed the publication of the White story by the legal authorities of Cook and Sangamon Counties is evident from the fact that he not only pledged Mr. Kohlsaat to secrecy, but that he did not disclose the story to the law officers of either of these counties, nor afterwards to the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, which was charged with the duty of investigating the whole subject, nor to any tribunal which might have determined the truth or falsity of his version of the interview between himself and Edward Hines or of the truth or falsity of the declarations alleged by him to have been made by Mr. Hines to him in that conversation.

For 20 years prior to that time Mr. Kohlsaat had been strongly opposed to Mr. Lorimer politically (Kohlsaat, 428–431, 457–469), and he was in full sympathy with the investigation then in progress under the direction of the State's attorney of Cook County, but he made no effort to substantiate Mr. Funk's story, nor did he attempt to ascertain whether there was any foundation for the statement which Mr. Funk said Mr. Hines made to him in regard to the raising of a fund of $100,000; nor did he, so far as the evidence shows, ever discuss with Mr. Funk the advisability of communicating this information to the prosecuting authorities of Cook County, nor did he do it himself. That he looked upon the story as a newspaper and political asset is apparent. In his testimony before the Helm committee at Springfield Mr. Kohlsaat says:

"He gave it to me in confidence. I told him that the confidence would not be betrayed. With that feeling of perfect security that this man's information that he gave me was absolutely reliable, I took the position that the election should be investigated and came out editorially and backed the Tribune in its fight. * * * I was so impressed with the truth of this that I came out editorially next day after this and backed the Tribune in their story, and have done it ever since." (Helm report, p. 58.)

It appears also that Mr. Kohlsaat immediately communicated this information which he had received in confidence to Mr. James Keeley, the general manager and editor of the Chicago Tribune, in confidence, who made use of it as early as May 2, 1910, in an editorial paragraph headed, "Was it sawdust," followed by the inquiry, "Who furnished the dust, to use a colloquialism, to bribe the legislature?" and on frequent occasions thereafter. (Keeley, 2010–2011, 2074–2075.)

Mr. Kohlsaat also testified that he communicated the story in confidence to Victor F. Lawson, owner of the Chicago Daily News, going so far as to reveal to him the name of Mr. Funk as his informant, and that the information so conveyed to Mr. Lawson thereafter "influenced his editorial policy during the entire period of the Lorimer investigation (Kohlsaat, 440), and it gave him confidence to be very specific in his editorials in regard to the belief that money was used to buy the election." (Kohlsaat, 440.)

Thus it appears that the three most powerful agencies for the creation of public sentiment in the Central West acted together in a common purpose to convince the public mind that the election of William Lorimer as Senator from the State of Illinois had been brought about by corrupt methods.

The testimony further shows that Mr. Kohlsaat related this story to Theodore Roosevelt, likewise in confidence, late in the month of August, 1910 (p. 440), when the latter made a brief stop in Chicago on his way to Cheyenne. (Kohlsaat, 439, 440, 441.) September 8 following, Col. Roosevelt returned to Chicago to attend a banquet which had been tendered to him by the Hamilton Club of that city. On the morning of that day he publicly announced that he would not attend such banquet if Senator Lorimer was to be present, with the result that, although a member of the club, Mr. Lorimer absented himself on that occasion. The public press teemed with accounts of this incident, producing a profound sensation, and intensifying the prejudice in the public mind against Mr. Lorimer. Col. Roosevelt subsequently wrote Mr. Kohlsaat that the story which the latter had told him as coming from Mr. Hines was the reason he declined to attend the dinner if Mr. Lorimer was to be present. (Kohlsaat, 440.)

Mr. Kohlsaat repeated the story, told him in confidence, wherever it would do the most direct and positive injury to Mr. Lorimer, and always unknown to him, "observing the cardinal principle of an honorable, upright newspaper man," and thus putting into practice observing his obligation to maintain "the same secrecy that a priest does of a confession."

During the summer of 1910 the grand juries of Cook and Sangamon Counties made exhaustive investigations of the charges of corruption in connection with the election of Senator Lorimer; indictments were returned, and Lee O'Neil Browne was tried and acquitted on a charge of having bribed Charles A. White to vote for Mr. Lorimer; on the 20th of September the Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, charged with investigating the question whether Mr. Lorimer's election had been secured by corrupt practices, met in Chicago and remained in session there for three weeks.

During that entire period the evidence discloses no instance when Mr. McCormick, Mr. Bancroft, Mr. Funk, Mr. Kohlsatt, Mr. Lawson, Mr. Keeley, or Col. Roosevelt saw fit to bring the information contained in Mr. Funk's statement to Mr. Kohlsaat to the attention of any person connected with any investigation or prosecution above referred to; nor does it disclose the fact that any of these gentlemen ever suggested to Mr. Funk the propriety of revealing the declaration alleged to have been made to him by Mr. Hines to any public officer or to any investigating body, so that its truth or falsity, and its value as evidence, might be properly determined.

The evidence further shows that although Mr. Keeley disclosed this information to his counsel, Mr. Alfred Austrian, who represented the Chicago Tribune before the first senatorial investigating committee, no suggestion was made by either of them to that committee or any member thereof concerning the Funk story, nor did Mr. Hines's name appear on the list of names of persons furnished by Mr. Austin to be summoned as witnesses before that committee. (Keeley, 1909–1912.)

All the facts adduced by the evidence show that the Senate of the United States was permitted to take final action on the question of the right of Mr. Lorimer to retain his seat without any information whatever, as a body, of the existence of the Funk story, and the first knowledge of this incident reached the Senate through the public newspaper accounts of the testimony given by Mr. Funk before the Helm committee at Springfield, April 5, 1911, more than a month after the final action of the Senate in confirming Mr. Lorimer's right to his seat in that body.

The testimony of Mr. Funk stands uncorroborated, either by the testimony of any other witness having knowledge of what occurred at this interview between Mr. Funk and Mr. Hines or by any circumstances which tend to establish his version of such interview.

The acquaintance between Mr. Funk and Mr. Hines had been of a casual, passing character. While both were members of the Union League Club, both were exceedingly busy men and met but few times in a year. They had no personal dealings with each other and their personal associations were confined to occasional meetings at the club, on railway trains, on the streets, at hotels, and in other public places.

In view of the fact that it was known to Mr. Hines that the relations existing between the officers of the International Harvester Co. and Mr. Lorimer were those of opponents rather then friends, it is improbable that he would seek from Mr. Funk, the representative of that corporation, a contribution to aid in the election of Mr. Lorimer; and it is inconceivable that Mr. Hines, if guilty of an infamous crime, would have unreservedly revealed it under the circumstances described by Mr. Funk, and in any case to a person with whom he had so slight an acquaintance, and at a time when the election was so fresh in the minds of the public. And particularly when it appears that at no previous time nor even at that time did Mr. Hines know whom Mr. Funk preferred for United States Senator. (Funk, 543–544.)

That Mr. Funk was a more than willing witness against Mr. Hines appears from his testimony. When asked how he knew whom Mr. Hines preferred for United States Senator, he replied:

"You would see his name in the paper every few days in connection with activities at Springfield, or hear it as a matter of general talk in the streets." (Funk, 544.)

On cross-examination, when his mind was specifically directed to this subject, Mr. Funk testified, among other things, as follows:

"Mr. HYNES. You spoke, Mr. Funk, of Mr. Hines's activities at Springfield. What did you have reference to there?

"Mr. FUNK. Why, it was a matter of common talk that he was very active down there.

"Mr. HYNES. What did you understand he was doing down there?

"Mr. FUNK. Pulling wires for the election of Senator Lorimer.

"Mr. HYNES. What do you mean by that? What was he doing? How long was he down there in Springfield before the election?

"Mr. FUNK. I do not know.

"Mr. HYNES. How long before the election did you hear that?

"Mr. FUNK. I heard it frequently. (595.)

* * * * * * *

"Mr. HYNES. Do you remember anybody who told you that he was down at Springfield active there in pulling wires for Senator Lorimer?

"Mr. FUNK. I think that was a matter of common talk.

"Mr. HYNES. Can you tell me anybody that said it?

"Mr. FUNK. I met a great many people that talked about it. I can not recall any particular man that made that particular statement." (595.)

These statements must be considered in connection with the fact that Mr. Hines was not at Springfield during the session of the legislature that elected Mr. Lorimer, had not been there for three years prior thereto, and did not go there afterwards until summoned as a witness before the Helm committee, nearly two years after such election, and that such "reports" must have had birth in Mr. Funk's imagination.

From his own testimony it is clear that Mr. Funk treated his interview with Mr. Hines lightly. He says, "the conversation was quite as casual as if we were discussing the sale of a car of lumber as far as I can recall." (Funk, 546.) He testifies that he was not surprised at what Mr. Hines said to him because it "comported with my general impression of the man" (Funk, 548), and being pressed to give that impression, he said:

"My observation has been that he was a loose talker.

"A man quite inclined to boast of his achievements, quite disposed to be familiar on short acquaintance, and quite anxious to have people think that he was a large factor in large matters." (Funk, 548–549.)

Confessing his inability to substantiate his version of the interview with Mr. Hines, Mr. Funk gave as a reason for keeping the same secret that it was simply his word against that of Mr. Hines.

There the case might have rested but for the fact that Mr. Funk afterwards attempted to corroborate his version of such interview by testifying that a day or two following the publication of the Record-Herald editorial of February 15, 1911 (Helm report, p. 71), 21 months after the interview took place, Mr. Hines visited Funk's office in the Harvester Building in Chicago, where, as Mr. Funk testified before this committee, the following occurred:

"Mr. FUNK. Mr. Hines arrived at my office one morning shortly after I got there, about 9 o'clock, and he was admitted to my room. He seemed to be considerably agitated, and he immediately began to talk with me about our former conversation.

"Mr. MARBLE. What did he say?

"Mr. FUNK. I can not repeat it verbatim; but in substance he undertook to refresh my memory as to what our previous conversation had been.

"Mr. MARBLE. As nearly as you can, give what he said.

"Senator KERN. It is important that we should have the substance of that conversation if you can not remember the exact words.

"Mr. FUNK. The substance of it was that he did not want me to misunderstand our talk the other day; that he had not meant to say that any money was used, but that he was only discussing with me in a general way the situation down there; and that he got to thinking about it afterwards and thought that I might not have understood it, and he was back there to clear it up for me.

* * * * * * *

"Senator LEA. Did you express dissent?

"Mr. FUNK. My recollection is that I told him that I thought I remembered the thing as it was. I disposed of him as quickly as I could, because, as I remember it, we were having a directors' meeting that morning, or a conference of some kind, which was of considerable importance, and they were waiting for me. And I got rid of him and left the room as soon as I could. I do not think he was in the office over three minutes.

"Senator LEA. Did you part on friendly terms that day?

"Mr. FUNK. Casual terms.

"Senator LEA. Was he satisfied with the visit, apparently, when he left?

"Mr. FUNK. I did not observe in particular as to whether he was or not. My recollection is that he was not.

"Senator LEA. He was not?

"Mr. FUNK. That is just an impression. I did not controvert his version of the thing. I heard him, and got out as soon as I could without making any particular comment about it.

"Senator LEA. Was his manner calm or excited or agitated?

"Mr. FUNK. It was rather agitated." (Funk, 557–559.)

Mr. Hines denies in the most positive terms that this alleged interview ever occurred, and testified that from and after February 6, preceding the date of it, until the morning of March 5 following, he was not in Chicago, and that such an interview was a physical impossibility. His testimony to that effect and to the effect that he spent that entire period in the East, and with the exception of a day in New York and one in Philadelphia he was constantly in Washington, is fully sustained by both personal and documentary evidence of a character which leaves no doubt of the fact. (See record, 904–908, 975–977, 981–983, 1869, 1832–1833, 1857–1858, 1829–1832, 1834–1836, 50–51, 53–56, 1789, 1821–1828, 7054–7055, 7057–7059, 6069.)

The testimony of Senator Lorimer (record, 7575–7576, 7774–7776); Edward Thomas (1789); C. R. Nelson (1821–1828); Thomas F. Toomey (7054–7056, 7063); Albert L. Swift (7069), and the production of hotel bills, letters, telegrams, books, and other documentary evidence fully sustain this finding of the committee.

The attempt and failure of Mr. Funk thus to substantiate his version of his interview with Mr. Hines does not serve to increase confidence in the correctness of the same.

Mr. Hines's version of the Union League Club meeting on May 27, 1909, is as follows:

That he went to the club to keep a business appointment with Mr. Fred Carney, a manufacturer of lumber at Owen Sound, Canada, and the evidence shows that the Hines Lumber Co. was under a continuing contract to take the entire output of the Carney Lumber Co., but that by the terms of the contract the price was to be fixed each year. Mr. Carney was in Chicago at that time to secure an agreement upon that detail of the contract. At this meeting Mr. Hines was accompanied by Isaac Baker and Charles L. Hall, who were employed by the Hines Lumber Co. as buyers. The four met at 1 o'clock and were seated on a long couch in the lounging room of the Union League Club, and Mr. Hines testified that while there discussing the business on account of which they met, he noticed Mr. Funk approaching—first noticed him when he was 6 or 8 feet away; that he arose and shook hands with him; that the conversation was opened by Mr. Funk's declaration, "I am very glad to hear that Mr. Lorimer has been elected Senator," or words to that effect; to which Mr. Hines replied, "I am pleased that you are glad that he is, and he ought to make a good representative of the State." (846.)

That Mr. Funk then continued:

"I would like very much indeed, at your earliest convenience, or convenience, I am not positive which, if you would arrange to introduce me to Senator Lorimer. I have never met him and I would like to have you introduce me to him." (847.)

Mr. Hines told him he would be pleased to do so, and with that they together walked toward the door leading out of the club; that as they neared the exit Mr. Funk said:

"The Senator must have been put to more or less expense in this contest for the senatorship, and he ought not to stand that. The business interests ought to take it off his hands. We would like to contribute to that expense. I said to him that I did not know anything about the matter, but I said: I will see and let you know." (847.)

Mr. Hines then returned to the gentlemen with whom he was engaged when interrupted by the approach of Mr. Funk and said to them: "That was Mr. Funk, general manager of the International Harvester Co." (847.)

In his testimony Mr. Hines denies in general and in detail every material statement made by Mr. Funk as to the interview had between them at that time, except the bare fact that they met and spoke with each other.

In his denial of Mr. Funk's statement that he approached Mr. Funk and said: "You are just the man I was looking for," and in his assertion that Mr. Funk approached him with the declaration: "I am very glad to hear that Mr. Lorimer has been elected Senator," he is corroborated by the testimony of three witnesses: Isaac Baker, Fred Carney, and Charles L. Hall.

Mr. Baker testified:

"There was a gentleman came up and said: 'How do you do, Mr. Hines,' and Mr. Hines got up and shook hands with him; and he made the remark: 'I see that Senator Lorimer is elected, and I am glad of it.' Mr. Hines replied to him and said: 'Yes; I think he will make a good representative.' And the gentleman then said, 'I have never met the Senator and would like to be introduced to him.' At that he turned around and they walked off toward the exit, where they go out of the clubroom. (1431.)

"They stood there maybe two minutes, and Mr. Hines returned to us, and he said to Mr. Carney: 'That is Mr. Funk, the general superintendent of the International Harvester Co.'" (1432.)

Mr. Carney testified:

"As I recall it, we were all sitting on this couch, when a gentleman walked across the room in the direction toward which we were facing. I really did not pay much attention to him, but I do recollect that possibly when he was 10 or 12 or 15 feet, possibly farther away from us, he had a smile on his face, and he evidently had caught somebody's eye—some of the four of us. When he got up possibly within 6 to 7 feet, or 5 or 6 feet, I will not say which, Mr. Hines got up. Mr. Hines was sitting next to me. He got up and stepped out 3 or 4 feet and shook hands with this gentleman.

"Mr. FARRAR. Did you hear the conversation that took place between them?

"Mr. CARNEY. No, sir; I did not.

"Mr. FARRAR. What took place after they met? Explain that.

"Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Hines stood talking with this gentleman for a minute or two, possibly, and, as I remember it, the two of them walked off from there—they had been almost directly in front of this couch—walked off toward the right toward the exit of the room. Mr. Hines came back directly; possibly he was gone three or four minutes.

"Mr. FARRAR. What did Mr. Hines say when he came back?

"Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Hines came back and sat down, and he said, 'Well, Carney, that is not a very heavy fellow for a fellow holding down a big job, is he?' I said, 'No, sir; he is not. Who is it?' He said, 'That is Mr. Funk, general manager of the International Harvester Co.'" (Carney, 1047–1048.)

He also said that Mr. Hines said that Mr. Funk had congratulated him on the election of Mr. Lorimer.

Mr. Hall says in his testimony that they were—

"interrupted by a gentleman coming across the room, diagonally across the room, to where we sat. The gentleman came within a few feet of Mr. Hines and spoke to him and said, 'How do you do, Mr. Hines,' Mr. Hines got up and shook hands with him and called him 'Mr. Funk,' and they talked perhaps two minutes or three minutes to the best of my judgment.

* * * * * * *

"This gentleman said to Mr. Hines, 'I am very glad that Mr. Lorimer has been elected Senator.'

* * * * * * *

"Mr. Hines expressed himself as being pleased. I do not remember just the words he used, but he expressed himself as being pleased, anyway. Mr. Funk said to Mr. Hines: 'I have never met the Senator, and would be glad to have you introduce him to me at your convenience.'" (1064–1065.)

That they then walked away toward the entrance of the room; that Mr. Hines stood there and talked for a few minutes with him, maybe two or three minutes, and returned to where the other three men were on the couch and said: "That is Mr. Funk, general manager of the International Harvester Co." (1064–1065.)

From the testimony of these witnesses it appears that the conversation between Mr. Hines and Mr. Funk was of very brief character, occupying not more than a few minutes, during which time they were walking from the point at which they met to the outside entrance of the club, and that they did not sit down nor have any extended talk.

In his testimony Mr. Hines, referring to Mr. Funk's desire for an introduction to Mr. Lorimer and his willingness to contribute to his campaign expenses, said:

"The impression I got at that time was, knowing the intense feeling that had existed between the McCormick people and Congressman Lorimer, and Mr. Funk having recently taken charge as general manager of the company, I thought he was trying to curry favor with the Senator, who had recently been elected Senator. That was the impression." (849.)

The evidence shows that Mr. Hines called at the home of Mr. Lorimer on the Sunday evening following his election to the Senate (852), at which time he testified:

"I said to him, 'I met Mr. Funk in the Union League Club the other day, and he is very anxious to be introduced to you.' He said, 'What did you say?' I said 'I told him I would be pleased to do so.' He said, 'Mr. Funk is one of my active enemies, Mr. Hines, and I do not care to meet him particularly.' I said, 'Well, Senator, I rather promised to introduce you to him, and I would like very much to carry out my promise.' He said, 'As long as you have promised, I will meet him.'

"Then I said, 'Congressman, were you put to any great expense in the contest down at Springfield?' And in a sort of a half-laughing and jocular way he said, 'Well, you know I don't drink or smoke, and I was not put to any extra expense at Springfield,' and that was all there was to it." (853).

Senator Lorimer corroborates Mr. Hines's statement as to his visit on this occasion, and in regard to the proposed introduction to Mr. Funk, said that he told Mr. Hines that Mr. Funk had always been an enemy of his, and that he did not care to meet him; that after some discussion he agreed to meet him, and while he does not recall the talk concerning his expenses, testified that, if Mr. Hines asked him, he told him he had none (Lorimer, 7564, 7733–7734, 7760–7779), because the only expenses he had were his hotel bills and his railroad fare, which would have been incurred anyway because of his trips back and forth between Washington and Springfield to look after the waterway legislation (7564–7565).

Before leaving Chicago on the morning following this talk at Mr. Lorimer's home, Mr. Hines instructed his brother-in-law, Mr. Wiehe, to see Mr. Funk and tell him there was nothing in the matter about which he talked with him (Hines, 858), but did not explain to Mr. Wiehe to what the remark referred (858), and on the following Wednesday, Mr. Hines being in Washington, Mr. Wiehe called him on the long-distance telephone, and after discussing personal business matters, told him that his message did not seem to suit Mr. Funk, who seemed anxious to meet him in Washington on the following Saturday (858). Mr. Hines was then unable to make an engagement, but on the following Friday, June 4, 1909, telegraphed the Edward Hines Lumber Co. at Chicago as follows:

"Have Funk meet me Chicago Saturday or Sunday. Could meet him any time. Like to leave here to-day. Answer quick."

And received in reply the following:

"Funk New York to-day. Leaves this afternoon, Washington. There to-morrow. You can reach him to-day, George Perkins's office or Judge Gary, 51 Broadway."

This incident is corroborated by the testimony of Mr. Wiehe. (1677, 1741, 1743. 1747.)

Without waiting to meet Mr. Funk in Washington, Mr. Hines left for Chicago that afternoon. (860.) He testified that he had no business of a personal nature pending with Mr. Funk, and that he knew of no reason why the latter desired to meet him beyond what was expressed in the message of Mr. Wiehe to the effect that Mr. Funk did not seem satisfied with what he had said to him and wanted to see Mr. Hines personally.

The statement of Mr. Hines is further corroborated by the fact that during the deep waterways convention which was held in Washington, and as Gov. Deneen testified, in the fall of 1909, Mr. Funk met him in the New Willard Hotel and was taken to Mr.

Mr. Hines to a room upstairs and introduced to Mr. Lorimer. (Funk, 533; Hines, 861–862; Lorimer, 7564, 7575.)

Much time has been spent and space given to a discussion of what occurred during the brief conversation between Messrs. Funk and Hines on May 27, 1909, not because it is conclusive of the facts alleged, but because it was the controlling factor in th action of the Senate in reopening the case and in the appointment of this committee.

The vital question to be determined is whether a fund of $100,000 was in fact raised by or through the efforts of Edward Hines and others acting with him, or by any other person or persons with his knowledge, which was corruptly used or expended in whole or in part to secure the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois.

Was such a fund raised?

After the most searching inquiry the committee is unable to find any evidence that any sum of money was raised or contributed by Mr. Hines, or through his suggestion, or with his knowledge, to be used corruptly in securing the election of Mr. Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois, or that Mr. Hines participated in any corrupt practices of any nature in connection with such election, nor can the committee find that any such fund was raised by any person or persons to be so used. The committee goes further and reports that it finds no evidence that any such fund was ever contemplated by Mr. Hines, or suggested to him by any of the gentlemen with whom he conferred before the election of Mr. Lorimer regarding the election of a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois, and in fact there is no proof that Mr. Hines raised or furnished or spent improperly any money to aid in the election of Mr. Lorimer.

Mr. Hines's interest in the election.

In connection with this finding the committee thought best to incorporate at this point a statement of what the evidence discloses regarding the activities of Mr. Hines in connection with the election of Mr. Lorimer.

While Mr. Hines has had a general acquaintance with Mr. Lorimer covering about 19 years, he has never had any business relations with him, nor has Senator Lorimer been the owner of stock in any corporation in which Mr. Hines has been interested; and although Mr. Hines was a resident of Mr. Lorimer's congressional district about nine years, he never took any interest in the political fortunes of the latter, beyond voting for him, except in the year 1906, when horses and wagons of the Edward Hines Lumber Co. were loaned to the Lorimer committee for a street parade, and Mr. Hines secured the signatures of 25 or 30 business men to a circular which was sent out to voters, showing Mr. Lorimer to be a protectionist, and the value of his work in favor of deep waterways. Mr. Hines does not remember whether he paid for the printing of these circulars or not; but if so, that is the only contribution ever made by him or any of the companies with which he was connected to any campaign fund to aid Mr. Lorimer at any time (882.)

A major portion of the winter and spring of 1909, during which the Legislature of Illinois was in deadlock over the election of a Senator, Mr. Hines spent in Washington, representing the interests of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, in connection with the tariff legislation then under consideration. He did not visit Springfield during the senatorial contest, and had not been in that city for at least five years prior to his appearance as a witness before the Helm committee in the spring of 1911. (813.)

Mr. Hines apparently had no interest in the senatorial contest, and according to the evidence did nothing in connection therewith until the 1st of February, 1909, when, at the request of Mr. Hibbard, of the firm of Hibbard, Spencer & Bartlett, hardware dealers in Chicago, a codirector with Mr. Hines on the Continental National Bank board, he telegraphed Mr. Lorimer, suggesting the candidacy of Mr. A. C. Bartlett, and followed this telegram by a letter, in which he said:

"Mr. Hibbard came to me this morning about the candidacy of Mr. A. C. Bartlett. * * * I feel it might be good policy to nominate a man of this kind, if you have not committed yourself elsewhere. * * * Probably you have already committed yourself along other lines." (811–812.)

In response to this, some time prior to the 1st of April, Mr. Lorimer told Mr. Hines that the different factions could not, apparently, unite on Mr. Bartlett. (812.)

During the next two months, from February 1 to April 1, 1909, Mr. Hines, as representative of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, looking after tariff legislation, in Washington, was much occupied and paid no attention to the Illinois situation. In this work he was brought frequently into contact with Senators Aldrich and Penrose, members of the Senate Committee on Finance, which was then conducting hearings in connection with the tariff schedules.

The legislative deadlock in Illinois naturally became a topic of conversation between them and was discussed first as a matter of political gossip (1791); then as the situation developed the probability of the deadlock being broken was often discussed. (1792.) Early in the month of April Senator Penrose sent for Mr. Hines and asked him if he knew the situation or could find out whether the legislature was liable to adjourn without electing a Senator; Mr. Hines replied that he did not know, but would try to find out.

To this end Mr. Hines talked first with Congressmen Boutell and Madden, of Chicago, who told him they did not know the real situation, but that probably Congressman Lorimer could give him the information, whereupon he telephoned to Mr. Lorimer, who was in Chicago, and arranged to see him at his office upon his return to Washington; at the interview then had Mr. Hines told Congressman Lorimer that he was not personally interested in the matter, but that Senator Penrose appeared to be much interested, and had asked him to make inquiries. Mr. Lorimer stated that the situation was indefinite; that he could not then say what it really was; but that he was going to Springfield the following night; would return to Washington in about a week, and might then be able to speak with a better knowledge. (813.) Mr. Hines reported this conversation to Senator Penrose. (814.)

A week or two later Mr. Hines again talked with Mr. Lorimer, who told him that the situation remained practically unchanged. Mr. Hines then inquired particularly as to the men under consideration, and Mr. Lorimer mentioned Congressmen McKinley and Lowden, Judge Grosscup, and Mr. Calhoun. (816.) Mr. Hines reported this conversation, as well as what he heard from other sources regarding conditions in Illinois, to Senator Penrose, as he met him in connection with the tariff matters. (1794.)

About the last of April Senator Penrose told Mr. Hines that Senator Aldrich would like to see him and went with him to Senator Aldrich's office, and in a conversation between them the general situation in Illinois, including the election of a Senator, was discussed, during which Mr. Hines stated that, in his judgment, Senator Hopkins could not be reelected, and he asked Senator Aldrich what the attitude of the President would be with reference to the matter. Senator Aldrich replied that the President was desirous that a Republican Senator should be elected in Illinois, and while he was naturally friendly to Senator Hopkins on account of the fact that the latter had received the primary nomination, and perhaps for other reasons, he did not intend to take any active part in influencing the action of the legislature; that his wish was that a Republican should be elected, but that he would take no steps in furtherance of Senator Hopkins's candidacy or that of any other person. (1648.)

A little later Mr. Hines had another interview with Mr. Lorimer, in which he asked him the direct question whether or not he was a candidate for the senatorship; and the latter replied that he was not, giving as the one important reason his great interest in the deep-waterway proposition, which he felt he could best promote by remaining in the House. At that time Mr. Lorimer asked Mr. Hines if he had anyone to recommend for the position (821), and Mr. Hines suggested Congressman Boutell, which met the approval of Mr. Lorimer; but he could not tell how Mr. Boutell's name would be received. (822.) Mr. Hines told Senator Penrose of this, who, in turn, had a talk with Mr. Boutell. About the same time Mr. Hines had an interview with Senator Aldrich regarding the attitude of the President toward the candidacy of Mr. Boutell, stating that an effort was being made to agree upon him as the successor of Senator Hopkins.

He asked Senator Aldrich if he would see the President, ascertain his attitude, and advise him, and Senator Aldrich afterwards in another conversation reported to him that the President would be agreeable to Mr. Boutell's candidacy; that his anxiety was to have a Republican elected, and that he was satisfied with Mr. Boutell's Republicanism and would have no objection to his election. (1649.) Mr. Lorimer's candidacy was not suggested or discussed at that time. (817; Aldrich, 1648–1649–1650.) Mr. Hines told Mr. Boutell what he had done, and suggested to him that he see the President. Mr. Boutell did so, and also wrote letters to Chicago to ascertain how his candidacy would be regarded in Illinois; later he went to Chicago and after a careful investigation found that it would be impossible to get the different factions to unite on him (826); and Mr. Hines told Senator Penrose of the failure of that undertaking. (1792.)

As time passed, the names of Messrs. Boutell, Lowden, and others mentioned in connection with this election, were in the progress of events eliminated, and Mr. Hines ultimately suggested to Senator Penrose that Mr. Lorimer might be the man upon whom the different factions could unite, but because Mr. Lorimer had previously informed him that he preferred to remain in the House it was doubtful if he could be induced to enter the contest. Senator Penrose also learned from other sources that Mr. Lorimer was the only available candidate. (1802.)

Just previous to the election of Mr. Lorimer by the Legislature of the State of Illinois, one or two interviews took place between Senator Aldrich and Mr. Hines regarding the candidacy of Mr. Lorimer and the attitude of the President with respect thereto. Regarding one of these, Senator Aldrich in his testimony says:

"Mr. Hines then told me that it was impossible to agree upon Mr. Boutell, and he thought there was a prospect—he said a very good prospect—of agreeing upon Mr. Lorimer; and he was anxious that I should find out the attitude of the President—the administration—toward Mr. Lorimer's election, and tell him what it would be."

This the committee finds was at Senator Aldrich's committee room, late in the evening; that together they rode to Senator Aldrich's house, where Mr. Hines was left to await the return of Senator Aldrich from the White House, where he went to have a consultation with the President in relation to this matter. Senator Aldrich returned home from this interview about midnight, and in his testimony says:

"I told him that Mr. Lorimer's candidacy would not be objectionable to the President. Then Mr. Hines asked me if I was willing to say that to anyone that he might suggest to inquire of me upon the subject; and I said that I was—that if I were asked in reference to the matter I should say that Mr. Lorimer's candidacy would not be objectionable to the President."

Regarding the time of this interview, Senator Aldrich testifies:

"I know that it was prior to the election, and my impression is that Mr. Hines told me that he was to leave for Chicago either that day or the next day, or some time very near that."

And on this point Senator Aldrich's testimony is as follows:

"Senator KERN (1653). Did you have any conversation with Mr. Hines at all about Gov. Deneen, or the part Gov. Deneen was to take in the contest?

"Senator ALDRICH. I think at this conversation Gov. Deneen's name was mentioned by Mr. Hines; not by me.

* * * * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. What did he say about Deneen?

"Senator ALDRICH. My recollection is that Deneen was an important party to this arrangement, or agreement, upon a candidate, and that Deneen's attitude would be more or less influenced by knowing whether it would be agreeable to the President. That was my general impression with regard to that matter."

Both Senators Aldrich and Penrose corroborate Mr. Hines in all essential features of his account of what took place leading up to and including his activities in behalf of Senator Lorimer.

Endeavoring to carry out what he understood to be the desire upon the part of Senator Aldrich and the administration, Mr. Hines went from the home of Senator Aldrich to the New Willard Hotel, from whence, sometime after midnight, he called up Congressman Lorimer on long-distance telephone at Springfield and gave him Senator Aldrich's message. Mr. Lorimer expressed some surprise at mention of the President's name, but Mr. Hines repeated the statement, telling him there was no question about it, as he had but then finished talking with Senator Aldrich, after the latter's return from a conference with the President at the White House, and that they would do all they could to assist in his election. Mr. Lorimer asked if Senator Aldrich would send him a telegram to that effect, and Mr. Hines assured him that he himself was authorized to send such a message, and Mr. Lorimer told him to send it. Mr. Hines then asked Congressman Lorimer if he would become a candidate, to which the latter replied:

"At this time I can not say; after I get the telegram I will give the matter consideration."

Mr. Hines accordingly sent the telegram. Senator Lorimer testifies that this was the first word he received from Mr. Hines concerning his candidacy, and Mr. Hines says it was the first time the subject was mentioned between them after the talk in April when Congressman Lorimer told him he would not be a candidate for the senatorship. Senator Lorimer locates the date of this telegram between the 20th and 25th of May, and Mr. Hines puts the date May 23, 1909.

Mr. Hines testifies that matters ran on for a few days, and that Senator Aldrich again sent for him and urged him to go to Springfield and see the governor personally and impress upon his mind the importance to the administration of the election of a Republican, and if Mr. Lorimer could be elected to have him assist in accomplishing it. This was on the morning of May 25, 1909, and Mr. Hines left for Springfield via Chicago that afternoon.

While the committee find some confusion in the testimony on the question whether there were two interviews between Senator Aldrich and Mr. Hines regarding the election of Mr. Lorimer and the mission of Mr. Hines in connection therewith, they are of the opinion that Mr. Hines's memory is the more accurate, and that such was the case; but if, as Senator Aldrich thinks, there was but one interview, it must have been on the night of May 24, 1909, for before leaving Washington the following day, May 25, Mr. Hines sent the following telegrams to Mr. Lorimer, who was at Springfield:

MAY 25, 1909.

WILLIAM LORIMER,
St. Nicholas Hotel, Springfield, Ill.:

Aldrich authorizes governor calling him up telephone. Confirm my message; conference last night; governor requested cooperate bring about result; can bring message to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25.

WILLIAM LORIMER,
St. Nicholas Hotel, Springfield, Ill.:

Leaving for Chicago to-day; can go direct to Springfield. Bring message confirming conference held last night, showing highest authorities want you elected before legislature adjourns. Important Republican Party Illinois politics have strong experienced man, friendly to powers here, elected immediately; needed here now. Telegraph answer quick, duplicate, care limited train, Harrisburg depot.

In both of which messages, as will be observed, he refers to a conference held the night before.

These conferences between Mr. Hines and Senators Aldrich and Penrose impressed Mr. Hines with the importance of the matters under discussion as well as the importance of his activities in connection with them. He understood that in the investigations and reports which he made to them he was carrying out their wishes, that in the end they had reached the conclusion that Mr. Lorimer was the only person upon whom the different factions of the legislature could unite, and they were anxious that he should not only consent to become a candidate but that he should use his best efforts to be elected. In these conferences Gov. Deneen's name had been mentioned as an important factor in the election of a Senator, and Mr. Hines understood, after his last interview with Senator Aldrich at the latter's house, that he was authorized to convey to Mr. Lorimer the wishes of the Senators named, the attitude of the President as to his candidacy, and to urge Gov. Deneen to aid in his election. The telegrams indicate his understanding of the situation and of his mission, and he understood that in carrying this message he was representing the gentlemen with whom he had been in conference, and that he was authorized to refer anyone wishing for further information as to their attitude or that of the President to Senator Aldrich.

Mr. Hines was very much impressed with the importance of his selection as the medium through whom this message was to be carried to Illinois, and he entered with zeal upon the undertaking.

The evidence indicates that Senators Aldrich and Penrose were the only persons with whom Mr. Hines was working or cooperating in the effort to break the deadlock in the Illinois Legislature by the election of a Republican Senator; that the only real interest he had in the matter was aroused by his frequent interviews with those gentlemen; the evidence also shows that neither he nor they had any candidate whom they specially cared to have elected—any Republican would have been satisfactory, and their purpose was to discover some person upon whom the different factions in the legislature would unite, and to that end they called upon Mr. Hines for assistance. Concerning this, Senator Penrose in his testimony says:

"If Mr. Hines had been staying at home and attending to his business in Chicago, and the tariff had not been up, and he had never seen me or a lot of people who were interested in politics night and day, I do not imagine he would ever have gotten interested in the senatorial fight." (Penrose, 1801.)

Mr. Hines left Washington on May 25, 1909, and reached Chicago between 8 and 9 o'clock on the morning of May 26, 1909. It had been his intention to continue the journey to Springfield, in order, as he testified, "to carry out the request made by Senator Aldrich and see the governor and see other leading Republicans, members of the legislature, to impress upon their minds the importance of trying to unite on some Republican as Senator from Illinois." (Hines, 832.)

But upon reaching Chicago he was met at the station by Mr. Wiehe (Hines, 832; Baker, 1476) with a message from Mr. Lorimer to call the latter on the telephone from Chicago instead of continuing his journey to Springfield as intended. Mr. Hines therefore proceeded at once to the Continental Commercial National Bank, and from there put in a long-distance telephone call for Mr. Lorimer at Springfield. (832.) While waiting for this connection, he sent from the bank the following telegram:

CHICAGO, May 26, 1909.

WILLIAM LORIMER, Esq., Springfield, Ill.:

Just arrived; trying to get you telephone; Aldrich, Penrose, and higher authority, as telephoned you from Washington, want you elected; authorized have governor others call Washington telephone; confirm this; can be there to-night.

EDWARD HINES.

(Hines, 833.)

Very soon thereafter Mr. Lorimer called him on the telephone and said:

"I would like to have you immediately call up Gov. Deneen on the long-distance telephone, and emphasize to him as strong as possible what you told me from Washington. * * * When you get through talking with Gov. Deneen, call me up on the telephone and let me know what he says." (834.)

Referring to this telephonic conversation with Mr. Hines, Senator Lorimer in his testimony says:

"I told him that the reason I did not want him to go to Springfield was that the governor was not friendly to my candidacy, and that if he came down to deliver the message it would be too late before he arrived, but probably if he delivered the message to him over the long-distance telephone it might have some influence with him. I had not any idea in the world that it would, but I feel when you are in a campaign you ought to do the last thing, and in his case it was the last thing." (Lorimer, 7464.)

Mr. Hines testified that he also called up Gov. Deneen from the bank (Hines, 834; Carroll, 1015–1017, 1030) and said, as he remembers the conversation:

"This is Mr. Edward Hines, at Chicago. I have just come in this morning on the limited train from Washington, and was on my way to Springfield to bring the message to you from Senator Aldrich and the President, urging upon you to do all you possibly can to assist in the election of a Senator at the earliest moment possible. They understand that Congressman Lorimer can be elected if you will assist." (Hines, 834.)

Mr. Hines testified that the governor did not seem to recognize his voice at first, and there was some suggestion of calling Mr. Reynolds, president of the bank, to identify him, but that finally the governor appeared to recognize his voice and said that would be unnecessary (835), and, continuing his conversation, Mr. Hines said then to him, "How soon can you see Congressman Lorimer?" (835); that the governor replied, "I will see him within 10 minutes," (835); and then Mr. Hines asked him the following question, "Can we rely on your assistance?" (835) and understood the governor to say "Yes."

In regard to this Gov. Deneen testified:

"Mr. Hines called me up and asked me whether I had received a message from the President—President Taft—in reference to Senator Lorimer. He stated that President Taft had sent a message to me to support Senator Lorimer, and asked me if I had received the message. I told him no. He said: 'Well, President Taft has sent the message, and I intended to come down myself. I have just arrived this morning, in Chicago;' and my best recollection is that he stated that his train was late, had a five-minutes' connection, and the Pennsylvania train had missed connections. But, in any event, he said that he had intended to come, and did not come, could not come; and he said President Taft had sent that message to me, and I would get it. I said: 'Did President Taft send that message to me? Did he tell you?' He said 'No.' I said 'That is a rather remarkable message to send.' He said 'Well, he is to send it through Senator Aldrich.' He said 'Of course, the President would not send a message to you on such a matter where it would become a public matter; but Senator Aldrich is to convey the message to you.' I said 'Through whom?' He said 'Mr. George Reynolds, of the Continental Commercial Bank, will call up and deliver the message.' I said 'Very well.'" (Deneen, 1147.)

Gov. Deneen says he did not tell Mr. Hines that he would see Mr. Lorimer within a few minutes, or within 10 minutes (1148), and says there was nothing in regard to calling Mr. Reynolds to identify his voice; that he was not sufficiently acquainted with him to recognize Mr. Hines's voice, and doubted personally whether Mr. Hines was telephoning (1148).

While they differ regarding many things which it is claimed were said during this conversation, which is easily accounted for by the difficulty attending a long-distance telephone conversation, they both agree that no reference whatever was made to money matters, and that Mr. Hines said nothing about going to Springfield and taking with him all the money that was necessary to bring about the election of Mr. Lorimer as testified by the witness Cook. (Deneen, 1148.) Gov. Deneen testified that on May 26, 1909, he did not see or communicate in any way with Mr. Lorimer until after his election, when the latter called upon him about 2 o'clock. (Deneen, 1148.)

On the contrary, Senator Lorimer testified that Gov. Deneen called him on the telephone on the morning of May 26, 1909 (7459), 7464, and said:

"That he had talked with Mr. Hines over the telephone, and that Mr. Hines had delivered a message to him to the effect that Senators Penrose and Aldrich and the President were anxious that I should be elected." (7464.)

And in answer to the question: "What response did you make," Senator Lorimer testified:

"I thanked him for it. I knew the interview Mr. Hines had had with the governor had had no influence with him." (7464.)

And Senator Lorimer says in his testimony that the only reason he did not desire Mr. Hines to go to Springfield was because he could not reach there in time, he having concluded to allow his name to be presented that day (7464), and he understood the only assistance Mr. Hines could render was to deliver the message (7464); that the governor made no comment with reference to the message, and in this respect testified. Mr. Lorimer testified:

"I thought the governor just delivered a message. I got an impression that the governor either felt that it was his duty to call me up and let me know, or that he had been requested to call me up and let me know, what had occurred." (7465.)

Senator Lorimer further testified that up to the night of May 25, 1909, he had not been advised that the President or Senators Aldrich or Penrose had authorized anyone to verify their support, or their desire in regard to having a Republican elected. (7466.) Senator Lorimer further testified that he got the impression from the way Gov. Deneen talked to him over the telephone on the morning of May 26, 1909, that he was—

"just doing what he regarded as a duty, or extending a courtesy to the person he had previously spoken to over the telephone.

"He did not commit himself; and I knew from the way he talked that the message had no influence over the governor." (7467.)

Senator Lorimer testified to a subsequent conversation with Mr. Hines as follows:

"I talked with him over the telephone—quite a while after that, and told him the governor had told me of the message that he delivered to him. When I say 'quite a little while after that,' I mean it may have been 10, or 15, or 20 minutes." (7467.)

After his telephonic conversation with Gov. Deneen from the Continental Commercial National Bank, Mr. Hines went to the Grand Pacific Hotel to meet Messrs. Cook and O'Brien upon a purely business matter, which meeting had been arranged by his subordinates (835), and while in Mr. Cook's room had a second conversation with Mr. Lorimer over the telephone, in which he said in substance:

"I have just talked with the governor, and he said he would see you immediately. The Congressman replied, 'He has already seen me.' I then said, 'Now, if I can do any good I will come down on the afternoon train.' He replied not to come down until he would telephone me. He said, 'If my name goes before the legislature to-day, you could not assist any in time to come here. If you could assist to-morrow, I will let you know late in the afternoon by telephone.'" (Hines, 836; Baker, 1429, 1479; Wiehe, 1749; Carroll, 1028–1030.)

At this point the activities of Edward Hines in connection with the election of William Lorimer ceased. He did not go to Springfield, and the only person whose action he attempted to influence was Gov. Deneen, and in doing that he simply undertook to deliver what he understood to be the message from Senators Aldrich and Penrose.

The significant facts brought out by all the testimony upon the question of Mr. Hines's connection with Mr. Lorimer's election are:

(a) That he had no special personal interest in the matter, and did not visit Springfield at any time during the session of the legislature.

(b) That he was not urging the candidacy of any particular person.

(c) That during the two months in which the situation in Illinois was discussed between him and Senators Aldrich and Penrose the names of several men of reputation and character were considered and dropped, and the name of Mr. Lorimer was not mentioned between them as a candidate until three or four days before his election, and not until after his probable candidacy had been under discussion in Springfield and it was believed there that he would become a candidate. It was practically certain Hopkins could not be elected.

(d) That the only object entertained by Messrs. Aldrich and Penrose was to have the deadlock broken and a Republican elected.

(e) That to accomplish this Mr. Lorimer was not objectionable as a candidate either to the President or to them, and various names had been tested and it was found that Mr. Lorimer could command more votes than anyone considered.

(f) That Mr. Hines was authorized and requested to report these facts to Mr. Lorimer, Gov. Deneen, and other public men, and to refer to both Senators Aldrich and Penrose as his authority.

(g) That it flattered Mr. Hines to be consulted by Senators Aldrich and Penrose, and his sense of the importance of the matter was greatly enhanced when he knew that they had been in conference with the President, and that Mr. Lorimer's candidacy would not be objectionable to him, and that to be intrusted with the responsibility of making known their wishes and explaining the attitude of the President to Gov. Deneen and to Mr. Lorimer was a great personal honor.

(h) That he believed when the election followed so closely these events that he had been instrumental in bringing it about and was correspondingly elated.

The only testimony before the committee that in any way connects the name of Edward Tilden with the alleged fund raised to aid in the election of William Lorimer is incorporated in the statement reluctantly made by Mr. Funk when he says: "Mr. Hines said, 'Just send the money to Ed. Tilden.'" Not a witness has testified to any fact tending to establish the existence of such a fund or to Mr. Tilden's connection with any such fund. But the committee saw fit to summon Mr. Tilden as a witness and in his testimony he denied with great emphasis any knowledge of the existence of such a fund, or having any connection with it, and stated that the first time he heard his name mentioned in that respect was when he read in the newspapers an account of Mr. Funk's testimony before the Helm committee at Springfield.

To further determine the question whether Mr. Hines had been a contributor to or had any part in it, and whether Mr. Tilden had received or disbursed the same, the committee employed the firm of Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co., certified public accountants of New York. Mr. Ritchie of that firm made an examination of the accounts of the Edward Hines Lumber Co. and all its subsidiary branches and of the companies controlled by it, including the North Wisconsin Lumber & Manufacturing Co.; Hayward Mercantile Co.; First National Bank, Hayward, Wis.; Mason State Bank, Mason; White River Lumber Co.; Iron River Lumber Co.; Virginia & Rainy Lake Co., covering the period from April 1, 1909, to December 31, 1909, as well as the personal books of Edward Hines for the year ending December 31, 1909, and reported to the committee as follows:

"(a) That there was no evidence of the Edward Hines Lumber Co. or any of its subsidiary or controlled companies having received or disbursed any moneys in connection with the election of Mr. William Lorimer, on May 26, 1909, to the United States Senate from the State of Illinois.

"(b) That there was no evidence of Mr. Edward Hines as an individual having received or disbursed any moneys in connection with the aforesaid election.

"In order to ascertain whether or not Mr. Hines might have negotiated a loan from one or other of the banks in Chicago with which he was connected, or with which he had business relations, I visited the following banks and trust companies: Continental National Bank, Hibernian Banking Association, Fort Dearborn National Bank, Northern Trust Co., Corn Exchange National Bank, Metropolitan Trust & Savings Bank.

"At each of these banks I examined their record of notes discounted during the last week in May, 1909, and the first part of June, 1909.

"I am able to report, therefore, that at none of these banks, in the period under review, did Mr. Hines discount any note or notes, either as drawer or as indorser."

An examination was also made of the books of Mr. Edward Tilden, and after reciting the method of the same and the theory upon which it was conducted, Mr. Ritchie reported to the committee that—

"There was no evidence that Mr. Tilden had been custodian of the fund alleged to have been raised in connection with the election of Mr. William Lorimer to the United States Senate from the State of Illinois." (6233.)

The Burgess-Wiehe incident.

The only other incident to which reference is made in the so-called newly discovered evidence tending to show the existence of a fund raised to aid in the election of Mr. Lorimer is that related by William M. Burgess, of Duluth, Minn., who testified that on the evening of March 8, 1911, he boarded the Winnipeg Flyer at Duluth at about 10 minutes past 7 o'clock to go to Virginia, Minn., a run of about two hours (1335); that when he boarded the train he went to the smoking room of the sleeping car, where he remained until he reached his destination (1335); that during that time the compartment was occupied by others as well as himself, among them Mr. C. F. Wiehe, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Cusson, Frederick J. Weyerhaeuser, Rudolph Weyerhaeuser, Mr. Harper, and Mr. McGowan, whom he described as a "young Canadian," and with whom he had some conversation (1335). The testimony of Mr. Burgess indicates that all of these gentlemen were in the compartment "at various times during the trip" (1335), and that at some period of the ride, when only the witness, Mr. McGowan, and Mr. Wiehe were present, the conversation between himself and the latter drifted onto the subject of Mr. Lorimer's election, concerning which the witness said:

"I remember making some remark regarding the election of Mr. Lorimer, and Mr. Wiehe asked me what I knew about Mr. Lorimer's election, and I told him my knowledge consisted of information gained from the Duluth News-Tribune and the Duluth Evening Herald and the Chicago Examiner. And he made the remark that I did not know very damn much about it. * * * He said that Mr. Lorimer had not spent any of his own money for his election; but there was, as he called it, a jack pot raised for Mr. Lorimer's election; and he made the remark—this remark he made at the finish of the conversation—he says: 'There was a jack pot raised for Mr. Lorimer's election. I know what I am talking about, because I subscribed $10,000 to it myself.'" (1336.)

And further:

"Mr. Wiehe said it was impossible to get anything of merit through the Illinois Legislature without the use of money." (1337.)

Mr. Burgess, Mr. Wiehe, and Mr. McGowan were all absolute strangers to each other; they had never met before; had no introduction at that time, and were ignorant of each other's names. It was not until after reaching the hotel at Virginia that night that Mr. Burgess learned that the gentleman with whom he says he had this conversation was Mr. Wiehe, a brother-in-law of Edward Hines.

Mr. Burgess had never had any business relations with the Edward Hines Lumber Co. except once, in 1906, concerning which he testified as follows:

"The Edward Hines Lumber Co. had banked a certain quantity of pine logs on the Black River, which is about 10 or 11 miles south of West Superior, and that portion of the Black River was controlled by the Black River Water Power Co., of which I was secretary and treasurer. On the land that we own there are two falls, one of 55 feet and one of 190 feet, and there is a dam at the top of the highest fall. This dam was built there by some company prior to our obtaining the fee of the land. The Edward Hines Lumber Co. were going to use the dam to float those logs out, and our man that looks after the property over there notified us that they were going to use the dam. I notified Mr. Cusson that the using of that dam was worth a certain sum.

"Mr. HYNES. How much?

"Mr. BURGESS. At the first conversation I told him I did not know what it was worth; that it was something I knew nothing about; that I would notify Mr. Sargeant, who knew more about that business.

"Mr. HYNES. What did you do?

"Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Sargeant told me to ask him $150, and to get all I could—not less than $25.

"Mr. HYNES. Not less than $25? How much did you ask?

"Mr. BURGESS. I asked $150.

"Mr. HYNES. Is that all?

"Mr. BURGESS. That is all.

"Mr. HYNES. Was it not $250?

"Mr. BURGESS. Well, it might have been. It was a long time ago. My recollection is $150, but it might have been $250.

"Mr. HYNES. To get $250 if you could get it, and to take $25 if you could not?

"Mr. BURGESS. Yes; I was following Mr. Sargeant's advice, and he knew more about it than I did. I think we got $75.

"Mr. HYNES. That was his advice, to ask that amount and take $25 if you could not get the other?

"Mr. BURGESS. Yes; that was it exactly.

"Mr. HYNES. That was his idea of the value of it?

"Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

"Mr. HYNES. Did you at any time ask him $1,000? Think before you answer.

"Mr. BURGESS. Oh, I do not know.

"Mr. HYNES. You do not know whether you did?

"Mr. BURGESS. No; I do not know whether I did or not.

"Mr. HYNES. Did you at one time talk about $2,500?

"Mr. BURGESS. No; I do not think it was that bad; I do not know.

"Mr. HYNES. You do not think it was any worse than a thousand?

"Mr. BURGESS. I do not know. I do not remember; that is, I can not remember the details. It is quite a while ago. I should say it was 8 or 10 years ago. I could not give the dates, even.

"Mr. HYNES. When you say it was not that bad, in what sense do you use that word 'bad'?

"Mr. BURGESS. If I had asked $1,000, that would have been extremely gally, that is all.

"Mr. HYNES. That would depend upon the supply of gall on hand, would it not, whether it was extreme or not? What were you finally paid?

"Mr. BURGESS. I think it was $75.

The evidence shows that the controversy over the amount to be paid extended from early in May, 1906, until the 27th of July, following, and letters from the Hines Lumber Co. to their agent authorizing a settlement of the claim indicate that Burgess had, in fact, demanded $2,500.

Mr. Wiehe denies with great positiveness that any such conversation as mentioned by Mr. Burgess was had between them, and denounced him as "an absolute liar when he makes the statement." (1643-1645.) He further testified that he had no conversation with Mr. Burgess regarding the Lorimer election, or about any jack pot or any other fund to be used in connection with such election, or concerning any contribution by him to such a fund (1643) and that he did not have any specific conversation with Mr. Burgess. (1642, 1645, 1760.)

The testimony shows that at the time of the alleged conversation Mr. Burgess sat diagonally across the compartment from Mr. Wiehe (1642) and that no conversation could have been had with him which others there would not have heard.

It is admitted that Charles McGowan did not leave the room during that ride; he testified, "I was there all the time" (1489, 1513–1516) and heard every word that was said by everyone (1493) and testified that nothing was said that he did not hear (1496); he denies with positiveness the entire Burgess story, further testifying that there was no time during the entire trip when he, Mr. Wiehe, and Mr. Burgess were alone in that compartment (1491), and that there was nothing whatever said about Mr. Lorimer's election (1489–1490).

Mr. Cusson testified that he entered the smoking compartment about 20 minutes after the train left Duluth, and remained there until Virginia was reached (1604); that Mr. Burgess, Mr. Johnson, Mr. F. E. Weyerhaeuser, Mr. Wiehe, and one or two or three strangers were in the compartment when he entered; that he sat between Mr. Wiehe and Mr. Weyerhaeuser on the leather couch; that Mr. Wiehe sat on his left (1604) and that Mr. Burgess sat in a chair directly to the right of the couch (1605); that Mr. Wiehe remained in the smoking compartment possibly 15 minutes after his entrance, when he was called out by Mr. Hines, and that he did not again return to the compartment that night (1605).

Mr. Cusson remembers that among other topics of conversation was the tariff and Canadian reciprocity, but that nothing was said about the election of Senator Lorimer, and he denies in detail the statements contained in the testimony of Mr. Burgess as to the Lorimer case; that nothing of the character was said; that he sat right next to Mr. Wiehe, and not to exceed 2 or 3 feet from Mr. Burgess. (1606.)

Mr. Johnson, a most intelligent witness testified that he entered the smoking compartment soon after the train left Duluth (1522); that Mr. Wiehe, he thinks, came in after he did; that he remained in the compartment during all the time Mr. Wiehe was there, and followed him when he went out, as he desired to discuss a matter of business with him; that during the time he was in the compartment nothing was said by either Mr. Wiehe or Mr. Burgess with respect to the election of Senator Lorimer, nor about the existence of a jack pot or any fund of $100,000 being raised for the election of Senator Lorimer, or about any other amount of money being raised to aid the election of Senator Lorimer, and that Mr. Wiehe did not say that he had contributed to any such fund; in short, he denied everything to which Mr. Burgess testified. (1523, 1524, 1542, 1544–1546, 1549.)

Mr. Price testified that upon entering the train he carried his grip to his berth and immediately went to the smoking compartment (1551), where he remained for perhaps half an hour, when he went out to look after his grip, and was gone just long enough to go to his seat in the other car and return; that he then remained in the smoking compartment until 10 or 15 minutes before the train reached Virginia; that when he went out to look after his grip Mr. Burgess, Mr. Johnson, and Mr. McGowan were in the smoking compartment, and he tells where and how they were sitting. He thinks Mr. Weyerhaeuser was sitting with Mr. Cusson immediately next to him, and that when he returned Mr. Wiehe had taken his seat, and that he was obliged to stand for some time and until Mr. Wiehe was called from the room by Mr. Hines. (1551.) This is confirmed by Mr. McGowan, who testified that Mr. Wiehe was called out by Mr. Hines. (1489.)

In his testimony Mr. Price tells of other subjects which were discussed, but says nothing was said by any person present regarding the election of Senator Lorimer, and denies everything that has been testified to by Mr. Burgess as having occurred on that occasion. (1552–1553.)

Mr. Harper, who was also present and observed those in the compartment, heard no such conversation. (2240–2241.)

Mr. Wiehe is not a talkative man. He appears rather cautious. It is not reasonable to suppose that he would declare to a stranger who happened to be in the same smoker on a railway train that he had contributed to a corruption fund which had been used in the election of a Senator from his State. He is not a light or foolish man, and the committee is unable to ignore his testimony and that of all the other persons in the smoker, aside from Mr. Burgess, and accept the latter as the only truthful one among them.

Mr. Burgess's story, as set forth in his letter to Mr. Kohlsaat (Record, 1787) which follows, varies materially from his testimony. He appears anxious to get into the controversy, and his account of what occurred in the smoker is as improbable as his "hearsay" regarding the telegram from President Taft. Mr. Wiehe had not then heard of the Father Green episode referred to and could not have mentioned it.

DULUTH, MINN., April 10, 1911.

"Mr. H. H. KOHLSAAT,

"Care of Chicago Record-Herald, Chicago, Ill.

"DEAR SIR: The writer has been following up the various items in the papers regarding the Kohlsaat-McCormick-Lorimer scandal, or, I should have said, the Hines-McCormick-Lorimer scandal.

"The writer is somewhat interested in this controversy. The writer also notices that Mr. Hines denies the statements made by the representatives of Mr. McCormick's interests, and that is what interests the writer. He will explain.

"On the night of March 6 a train leaving Duluth at 7 o'clock for Virginia, Minn., contained the writer; Mr. Hines, of Chicago; three gentlemen by the name of Weyerhaeuser; Mr. Hornby, of Cloquet; W. H. Cook, William O'Brien, and others. As the train left Duluth the writer was sitting in the smoking compartment of the Winnipeg sleeper. A gentleman entered the smoking compartment dressed in a gray suit of clothes, black stiff hat, and wore a black beard. Conversation started among the occupants of the smoker. After awhile conversation drifted over to politics, and Mr. Lorimer's name was mentioned. The writer made some uncomplimentary remarks regarding Mr. Lorimer and the way his actions were being whitewashed by the Senate, and the gentleman in gray clothes and black whiskers called the writer to account regarding his remarks. The writer stuck to his ground, and the gentleman in gray defended Mr. Lorimer in the strongest kind of language. Now, what I want to get at in as few words as possible is, this gentleman made the statement, among other things that were said during the controversy, that Mr. Lorimer did not spend any of his own money to elect himself, but that there a large jack pot was raised to elect Mr. Lorimer, of which he, the man with the black whiskers, subscribed $10,000 to the fund.

"He made the statement that there couldn't any measure, either of merit or not, be gotten through the Illinois Legislature without the use of money, and that in order to elect Lorimer that they had to raise a large jack pot, which he called it, of which the man of the black whiskers subscribed $10,000, or, in other words, he of the black whiskers gave $10,000 in cold cash toward the electing of Mr. Lorimer.

"The writer afterwards learned that the man of the black whiskers was a Mr. Wiehe, I think, and that he is a brother-in-law of Edward Hines. The train arrived at Virginia that night at 9.10 o'clock, and about 10 o'clock the writer met Mr. W. T. Bailey in the hotel at Virginia and asked who the man in the gray suit and black whiskers was, and Mr. Bailey informed me that he was Mr. Wiehe, a brother-in-law of Mr. Edward Hines; I think that is the way the name is spelled, but I am not positive. The writer then told Mr. Bailey what the conversation had been on the train with the man of the black whiskers.

"I think there is more information to be gotten in Duluth regarding the Hines-Lorimer controversy should you desire it. There is a gentleman in Duluth who was in Mr. Hines's office some time ago—that is, during the investigation of the Senate of Mr. Lorimer's election—when a telegram was received from President Taft by Mr. Hines regarding this investigation. The writer has been told that this telegram requested Mr. Hines to get the matter hushed up as quickly as possible. This information regarding the telegram is only hearsay on the writer's part, but I think that the writer can get this information should you desire it.

"If this letter is of any use to you and the information contained in this letter of any use to you, kindly let the writer know, but the writer does not care to have it known that he has written you this letter, although he stands ready to make good all statements.

"Yours, truly, "WM. BURGESS."

With the foregoing convincing array of evidence in denial of all the facts contained in Mr. Burgess's testimony, and in view of the improbability that a man of Mr. Wiehe's intelligence and business experience should, in a public place and to an utter stranger, have confessed to having part in an infamous proceeding, this committee can not do otherwise than discard the testimony of Mr. Burgess as proof of any facts alleged.

Attempt to impeach McGowan.

Mr. McGowan testified before this committee on July 18, 1911. Immediately thereafter Mr. Beck, one of the editors of the Chicago Tribune, conveyed information to counsel for the committee to the effect that one Stewart, a friend of Mr. McGowan, had made loose statements as to the latter's purpose in appearing before the committee, and counsel employed the Burns Detective Agency to investigate the situation and ascertain whether his testimony was impeachable.

An investigator of that company, Arthur C. Bailey, was, on July 20, 1911 (8020), assigned to the work, and followed Mr. McGowan to Saskatchewan, Canada, where he met him at the Grand Hotel, Regina, on August 7, 1911, and adopted all the typical methods of detectives to get into confidential relations with him. He reported from time to time to counsel for this committee until October 24 or 25, 1911. At that time a bill for services and expenses amounting to $2,500 had been run up, and counsel reported to the committee then in session in Chicago that they were "not getting anywhere," that if they continued that sort of service it would simply develop this condition of testimony; the statement of Mr. Bailey on the one hand, and a denial, perhaps, by Mr. McGowan on the other, and it was their judgment that the service ought to be discontinued. (7996.) Counsel for the committee assumed the entire responsibility for discontinuing the service at that time, saying, in a subsequent statement, "It was upon our recommendation, with full knowledge of all that had transpired, so far as the service of Mr. Bailey was concerned, that the service was discontinued." (7997.)

Immediately thereafter the Burns Detective Agency was employed by the Chicago Tribune to further pursue such investigation, and such services culminated at a meeting between the witness McGowan, Detective Bailey, and one Kerr, whose expenses he paid (8056–8057, 8143–8182) at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on the evening of January 6, 1912. A dictograph had been secreted in a room to which Mr. McGowan had been invited by Messrs. Bailey and Kerr, from which a wire with a telephonic receiver attached led to an adjoining room where one Sheridan, another employee of the Burns Agency, was stationed to take down in shorthand any conversation which might be had in the other room relative to the Lorimer case. This young man, James E. Sheridan, afterwards appeared as a witness before this committee, with his original shorthand notes claimed to have been taken on that occasion, which he read into the record. Doubt was expressed as to his ability to hear and write under the conditions described, and a test of his ability to do so was made by order of the committee. Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Bailey were permitted to make all the arrangements for the same, so as to reproduce as nearly as possible the conditions under which the work was done in Toronto. They used the same instruments and expressed themselves as satisfied with conditions, but the results were so disastrous to the claims made by Mr. Sheridan in his testimony as to satisfy the committee that no dependence whatever can be placed upon his testimony.

As before stated, the so-called newly discovered evidence on which this investigation was ordered consisted of the alleged declaration of Edward Hines to Clarence S. Funk on May 27, 1909, and an alleged declaration by Mr. Wiehe to Mr. Burgess on a railway journey from Duluth to Virginia, Minn., on March 8, 1912, hereinbefore fully set forth.

The committee has in its investigations secured all available evidence bearing both upon the question whether such declarations were in fact made, as claimed by Mr. Funk and Mr. Burgess, and whether the fund mentioned in such alleged declarations was in fact raised and used as alleged, and having considered such evidence finds nothing in it which in any degree sustains the assumption that such a fund ever existed or that either Edward Hines or C. F. Wiehe ever had any knowledge of such a fund.

Former adjudication conclusive.

Before the public hearings in this case closed counsel for Mr. Lorimer raised the contention that all of the issues relating to the election and qualifications of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois had been adjudicated and finally determined by the Senate of the United States by its action on the 1st day of March, 1911; that such former adjudication and final determination of the issues was in law and justice a bar to any further proceedings designed to call in question the validity and legality of the election of Mr. Lorimer and his right to his seat in the Senate.

Your committee is of the opinion that all such issues touching the election and qualifications of William Lorimer were so finally adjudicated, and that the action of the Senate on the 1st day of March, 1911, recognizing the right of Mr. Lorimer to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States is a bar to any further proceedings in the Senate.

Upon this question the committee invites attention to—

The judicial character of the proceeding.

Article I, section 5, of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

"Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member."

Article I, section 3, of the Constitution provides that the Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. And Article II, section 4, enumerates as the persons subject to impeachment the President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States.

All these functions are judicial in character. The authorities are numerous in support of the proposition that the determination by the Senate of the election and qualification of the Members is an exercise of a judicial function.

Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries on the Law, said:

"Each House is made the sole judge of the election, return and qualification of its Members. The same power is vested in the British House of Commons, and in the legislature of the several States, and there is no other body known to the Constitution to which such a power might safely be trusted. It is requisite to preserve a pure and genuine representation, and to control the evils of irregular, corrupt, and tumultuous elections; and, as each House acts in these cases in a judicial character, its decisions, like the decisions of any other court of justice, ought to be regulated by known principles of law and strictly adhered to for the sake of uniformity and certainty." (1 Kent's Commentaries, p. 235.)

Judge Cooley said:

"In determining questions concerning contested seats the House will exercise judicial power, but generally in accordance with a course of practice which has sprung from precedents in similar cases. (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 190.)

"The occasional intermixture of legislative and judicial powers in the Senate is not objectionable as in violation of the Montesquieu maxim on the necessity of a separation of legislative, judicial, and executive functions." (1 Story on the Const., sec. 749; Madison, The Federalist, No. XLVII; Webster's speech in the Senate, May,7, 1834.)

The Supreme Court of the United States has expressly decided that each House of Congress is exercising judicial power vested in it by the Constitution when it is judging of the elections of its Members. (In re Loney, 134 U. S., 372; Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S., 168.)

See, also, the decision of the Supreme Court of Florida in State of Florida ex rel. Fleming, governor, v. Crawford, secretary of state (28 Fla., 441; 14 L. R. A., 253), where the court said:

"Neither the secretary of state nor the Supreme Court of Florida has power to pass upon the legality of an election of a United States Senator by the legislature, or of an appointment of a Senator by the executive of the State. The power is in the United States Senate alone."

The supreme courts of various States have decided that each House in deciding as to the validity of elections acts in a purely judicial capacity. (People ex rel. Hatzel v. Hall, 80 N. Y., 317; People ex rel. Mahaney, 13 Mich., 481; State ex rel. Benton v. Elder, 31 Nebr., 169, 191; The opinion of the justices of the Supreme Court of Maine, 7 Me., 481, 491; the opinion of the justices of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, 10 Gray, 613, are to the same effect.)

The Senate itself has frequently declared, through its committees and by its decisions, that the power to judge of the elections of its members is a judicial power and is to be exercised in accordance with known principles of law and established precedents.

In the election case of Matt W. Ransom v. Joseph C. Abbott in the Forty-second Congress, the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, consisting of Senators O. P. Morton, John A. Logan, A. G. Thurman, and Joshua Hill, said in their report, after quoting the provision of the Constitution as to each House being the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members:

"The duty which devolves upon the Senate in deciding cases that arise under this clause of the Constitution is in the nature of a judicial proceeding, and the cases must be decided upon the evidence presented, and in accordance with legal principles, as established by former parliamentary and judicial proceedings and decisions."

The minority of the committee in that case, consisting of Senators Matt H. Carpenter and B. F. Rice, said:

"The duty cast upon the Senate by this provision of the Constitution is judicial in character. We may not inquire or consider what party interests demand; whether it would appear impartial to decide against a political friend, or whether a decision in his favor would be condemned in political circles. The question to be determined is one of strict right, depending upon legal principles, as settled by former decisions, parliamentary and judicial; and we have no more right than a judge upon the bench to turn away from the law to consider the political or partisan interests involved in the case or to be affected by the decision." (S. Repts., 2d sess. 42d Cong., No. 58.)

To the same effect is the report of the committee in the case of Fitch and Bright v. Lane and McCarthy in the Thirty-fifth Congress. (Rept. No. 368.)

In the case of Henry A. du Pont, of Delaware, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, the Committee on Privileges and Elections unanimously said:

"It is clear that the word 'judge' in the Constitution was used advisedly. The Senate in the case provided for is to declare a result depending upon the application of law to existing facts, and is not to be affected in its action by the desire of its Members or by their opinions as to public policies or public interest. Its action determines great constitutional rights—the title of an individual citizen to a high office and the title of a sovereign State to be represented in the Senate by the person of its choice."

Senator Edmunds, in his remarks in discussing the election case of Senator Henry W. Blair, March 10, 1885, said:

"The Senate in sitting upon such a question sits as judges. The Constitution says so. We are not defining policies; we are not setting up expediencies; we are not carrying on party warfare; we are sitting as the solemn judges sworn to try and determine the election and qualifications of a gentleman who presents himself to be a Member of this body."

This proceeding can not be deemed in any sense a legislative proceeding because exclusive jurisdiction of it is possessed by the Senate alone. The Senate alone is invested with no legislative power. In New York Indians v. United States (170 U. S., 1, p. 23) the Supreme Court of the United States said of a resolution adopted by the Senate alone:

"It can not be considered as a legislative act since the power to legislate is in the President, the Senate, and House of Representatives."

Consequently the decision of the questions raised by the resolution must depend upon legal principles and be in accordance with the evidence. In the language of the authorities from whom we have quoted, we can not consider party interests or expediency. We are sitting as the solemn judges sworn to try and judicially determine purely legal rights. The jury system is sometimes attacked because on occasions juries do not enforce the law. Mob violence is everywhere deplored because by it the law is set at defiance. If Senators were unmindful of the law in settling this case their action would be a reproach, and an example for and encouragement of all forms of disobedience to law.

Under all the authorities we have been able to find, the Senate acts in this matter in a judicial character and its decision is of the same nature as the decision of any regularly constituted court of justice, and has the same force and effect. We are here exercising a judicial function. This being true, the doctrine of res adjudicata applies in this case.

The question of res adjudicata.

One of the most elementary doctrines of the law, perhaps the one most universally accepted, is the doctrine of res adjudicata. Bigelow on Estoppel defines that doctrine as follows:

"The fundamental principle concerning judgments is that an issue once determined by a court of competent jurisdiction may be relied on as an effectual bar to any further dispute upon the same matter, whether by the parties to the litigation or by those who, termed privies, claim under them; this conclusiveness including, of course, as well the law as the facts involved in the case. We speak of this as fundamental because it is the very object of the institution of courts to put an end to disputes—'Interest reipublicae ut litium finis sit.' This is, of course, true under every system of justice; it is peculiar to none. It would therefore be wide of the truth to speak of the doctrine of judgments in the English law as derived from the principles of any other system of law. On the other hand, it would be arrogant and false to assert that the principles of the English law in regard to the effect of judgments had been wholly worked out from within, regardless of that great system of law which Rome developed and gave for an inheritance to most of the continental nations of Europe, and for a light to all the world." (I Bigelow on Estoppel, 37, 38.)

Herman explains the fundamental reason on which the doctrine is based as follows:

"This rule of conclusiveness, this doctrine of estoppel, is one of the most inflexible principles of law, and has its foundation in this fundamental principle, 'Interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium.' When a cause of action is so far the same that a former judgment can be pleaded in bar, or when the matters in controversy in the suit can be shown by record evidence to have been examined and decided in another, there is every reason why that which has attained the highest degree of certainty known to the law should not again be litigated between the same parties; for it concerns the peace and welfare of the community that there should be an end to litigation. Justice requires that every cause should be once fairly tried, and the public tranquillity demands that having been once so fairly tried all litigation of that question between those parties should be concluded forever. Were it otherwise, there would be no security for any person, and great injustice might be done under color and pretense of law. To ascertain the grounds and motives which may have led to the final determination of a question once settled by the jurisdiction to which the law has referred it would be extremely dangerous, and it is better for the general administration of justice that one individual should be inconvenienced than that the whole system of jurisprudence be overthrown and endless uncertainty introduced." (I Herman on Estoppel, sec. 100, p. 101.)

The rule of res adjudicata is in force in every American court and in every governmental body or organization that performs, even though but incidentally, judicial functions. The Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure cites the following bodies, boards, and officers whose judgments have been held to constitute res adjudicata (vol. 23, pp. 1219–1221):

Courts-martial; church judicatories; Commissioner of Patents; Comptroller of the Currency; collector of customs; Board of Land Commissioners; road commissioners in adjudicating upon the necessity of a road and in locating and making assessments for it; the common council of a city in canvassing election returns; board of city police commissioners acting as a court for the trial of members of the police force. All these subordinate and merely quasi judicial agencies, and many others of similar character, are bound by the law of res adjudicata when they seek to review their former decisions in a matter involving the exercise of a judicial function.

The Senate has held that the doctrine of res adjudicata is applicable to election cases and in numerous instances has enforced and applied that doctrine.

The leading case is that of Senators Fitch and Bright and Lane and McCarty, of Indiana, in the Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Congresses. In the Thirty-fourth Congress the election of Senators Fitch and Bright was assailed on the ground that the joint sessions of the two houses of the Indiana Legislature that elected Messrs. Fitch and Bright were illegally organized. At the first session of the Thirty-fifth Congress a resolution that Senators Fitch and Bright were not entitled to their seats was determined in the negative by a vote of yeas 23, nays 30, and the Senate then adopted a resolution that Senators Fitch and Bright were entitled to their seats. Some months later the Legislature of Indiana proceeded by a concurrent vote of the two houses to elect Henry S. Lane and William M. McCarty Senators from the State of Indiana. At the second session of the Thirty-fifth Congress there was presented to the United States Senate a memorial of the Legislature of Indiana representing that it was the wish and desire of the State that said Lane and McCarty be admitted to seats in the Senate as the only legally and constitutionally chosen Senators of the State of Indiana. This memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee, in a report concurred in by Senators Bayard, Pugh, Benjamin, Green, and Clingman, reported that, in its opinion, the resolution adopted as the first session of the Thirty-fifth Congress "(no motion having been made to reconsider it) finally disposed of all questions presented to the Senate involving the respective rights of Hon. Graham N. Fitch and the Hon. Jesse D. Bright to their seats in the Senate as Senators from the State of Indiana." In conclusion the committee said:

"The decision of the Senate, made on the 12th of June, 1858, established finally and (in the absence of a motion to reconsider) irreversibly the right of the Hon. Graham N. Fitch as a Senator of the State of Indiana until the 4th of March, 1861, and the right of the Hon. Jesse D. Bright as a Senator from the same State until the 4th of March, A. D. 1863.

"The decision was made by an authority having exclusive jurisdiction of the subject; was judicial in its nature, and, being made on a contest in which all the facts and questions of law involving the validity of the election of Messrs. Fitch and Bright, and their respective rights to their seats, were as fully known and presented to the Senate as they are now in the memorial of the Legislature of Indiana, the judgment of the Senate then rendered is final, and precludes further inquiry into the subject to which it relates."

The report of the case (Senate Election Cases, 244) shows that Messrs. McCarty and Lane submitted to the committee a brief in which they argued that the doctrine of res adjudicata did not apply, for the following alleged reasons: Because their rights or titles could not be barred by a decision had before they were created; because it was denied that the judicial power of the Senate was capable of self-exhaustion; because courts are never estopped by their own actions; because sovereigns are not estopped; and because Indiana was not a party to the proceeding in the Senate and had no opportunity to allege or elicit the true facts. The brief of the contestants was embodied in a report to the Senate. The question was debated at length in the Senate and finally the following resolution was adopted by a vote—yeas 30, nays 15—

"Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the State of Indiana, and that the resolution of the Senate adopted June 12, 1858, affirming the right of Graham N. Fitch and Jesse D. Bright as Senators elected from the State of Indiana, the former until the 4th day of March, 1861, and the latter until the 4th day of March, 1863, was a final decision of all the premises then in controversy, as conclusive, as well upon the Legislature of Indiana and all persons claiming under its authority as upon the Senators named in the resolution."

Thus the Senate adopted the law of res adjudicata as applicable to such proceedings. The case reviewed was a contest between two different sets of persons claiming to be elected as Senators from a State. The rule of res adjudicata was applied even though the parties contesting the election had not been heard in the former proceeding, had not been parties to it. The theory of the decision of the Senate was, however, that the contesting parties derived their claims from and through the Legislature of the State of Indiana and that the Legislature of the State of Indiana had been bound by the first decision. It is further to be noted that the decision of the Senate which was held to be res adjudicata was made at the same Congress as that in which the contest was renewed. In the case at bar the decision claimed to be res adjudicata was rendered at a different Congress. In the Fitch and Bright case the Senate held that the adjudication became final after the end of a single session of Congress. Much stronger reasons support the contention that a judicial decision made by the Senate in one Congress is final upon the Senate in a subsequent Congress, when its membership has been changed, as in the case at bar.

The doctrine of res adjudicata was again applied by the Senate in the case of Francis W. Sykes and George E. Spencer, decided by the Senate in the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses. (Senate Election cases, 611–633.) The Sykes-Spencer case was a contest between Mr. Spencer and Mr. Sykes, each claiming to have been elected by the Legislature of Alabama. March 7, 1873, Mr. Spencer was sworn in as a Senator. December 8, 1873, the memorial of Mr. Sykes, which had been presented to the Senate before Mr. Spencer was sworn in, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. April 20, 1874, the committee reported in favor of the election of Mr. Spencer. On May 28, 1874, the Senate determined in the negative by a vote—yeas 11, nays 33—a motion to amend the resolution so that it should declare that George E. Spencer had not been elected a Senator by the lawful Legislature of the State of Alabama. The Senate thereupon adopted a resolution discharging the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of the memorial of Francis W. Sykes. Those proceedings took place in the first session of the Forty-third Congress. In the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, on December 16, 1875, the Senate adopted a resolution instructing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate and inquire whether in the election of Mr. Spencer there were used, or caused to be used, and employed corrupt means or corrupt practices to secure his election. On May 20, 1876, the Committee on Privileges and Elections submitted its report; the committee consisted of Senators Morton (chairman), Logan, Mitchell, Wadleigh, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Saulsbury, Merriman, and Cooper. The committee found in favor of Mr. Spencer on the charges of corruption and said, with reference to the former decision of the Senate in the first contest:

"The question having been definitely settled, it was considered by the committee that it was not competent for the committee or the Senate to reopen it, and that it must be treated as res adjudicata."

The committee asked leave to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and memorial. No minority report was filed. No further action was taken by the Senate. The effect of nonaction was to adopt the report of the committee and to permit Senator Spencer to retain his seat.

In the case of David T. Corbin v. M. C. Butler, of South Carolina (Senate Election cases, 637–660), the respective credentials of Mr. Corbin and of Mr. Butler were presented to the Senate in 1877 and both were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. November 26, 1877, the Senate, by a resolution, discharged the Committee on Privileges and Elections from a consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, and on November 30, 1877, Mr. Butler was sworn in as a Senator in accordance with a motion which had been determined in the affirmative—yeas 29, nays 28. On February 4, 1879, Senator Cameron, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report, accompanied by a resolution, that David T. Corbin had been duly elected Senator for the seat then held by Senator Butler. This report of the committee was in response to a reference by the Senate to the committee on March 26, 1878, of a petition presented by Mr. Corbin to the Senate. In the committee Senator Butler objected to the hearing of Mr. Corbin's petition, on the ground that the decision of the Senate November 30, 1877, authorizing him to be sworn, was res adjudicata. The majority of the committee overruled the plea, not on the ground that res adjudicata was not a good defense in the Senate, but because the committee held it was not supported by the facts in the case. The committee held that Mr. Corbin had never been heard and that the controversy had not been determined upon a consideration of the merits. The majority of the committee seem to have overlooked the proposition laid down in the Fitch and Bright case, supra, that the fact that the contestant had not been heard was not controlling, because the judgment of the Senate established the status of the senatorship and was a judgment in rem. The minority, consisting of Senators Merriman, Saulsbury, and Hill, presented to the Senate their views, in which they took the position that the former action of the Senate on November 27 and November 30, 1877, did constitute res adjudicata. The Senate sustained the minority of the committee, and on February 25, 1879, determined in the negative the resolution reported by the committee declaring David T. Corbin duly elected. The vote of the Senate rejecting the majority report in the Corbin and Butler case and upholding the defense of res adjudicata, was yeas 25, nays 36.

A recent case in which the Senate has declared the doctrine of res adjudicata is that of Hon. Henry A. du Pont, of Delaware. (Senate Election cases, 818–874.) At the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress there was presented to the Senate the petition of Mr. du Pont, claiming a seat in the Senate for the full term commencing March 4, 1895. The validity of his election was attacked on the ground that he had not received a majority of all the votes cast, and that contention turned upon the question whether the vote of William T. Watson as a State senator was valid and legal. It was claimed by Mr. du Pont that Watson had ceased to be a State senator by reason of the fact that, before the vote in question on the election of United States Senator, Watson had been inaugurated as governor of the State of Delaware. The majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, consisting of Senators Mitchell, Hoar, Chandler, Burrows, and Pritchard, held that Mr. du Pont's election was legal. A minority, consisting of Senators Turpie, Pugh, Gray, and Palmer, filed their views to the effect that Mr. du Pont did not receive a majority vote of the whole number of members of both houses of the Delaware Legislature. The question was debated at length in the Senate, and on May 15, 1896, a resolution that Mr. du Pont was not entitled to a seat in the Senate was agreed to by a vote of yeas 31, nays 30. At the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress memorials were presented to the Senate praying that the question of the validity of Mr. du Pont's election again be investigated and reconsidered by the Senate. These memorials were again referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. On March 1, 1897, the committee presented to the Senate its report, signed by Senators George F. Hoar, William E. Chandler, J. C. Pritchard, J. C. Burrows, George Gray, David Turpie, James L. Pugh, and John M. Palmer. The committee unanimously reported that the adoption by the Senate, by a majority vote, on May 15, 1896, of the resolution that Mr. du Pont was not entitled to a seat in the Senate was final and conclusive and barred subsequent action by the Senate. The committee in its report said:

"The majority of your committee now, as then, are of the opinion that this decision of the Senate was wrong; but the Senate is made by the Constitution the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its Members, and its judgment is just as binding in law, in all constitutional vigor and potency, when it is rendered by one majority as when it is unanimous.

"It is clear that the word 'judge' in the Constitution was used advisedly. The Senate in the case provided for is to declare a result depending upon the application of law to existing facts, and is not to be affected in its action by the desire of its Members or by their opinions as to public policies or public interest. Its action determines great constitutional rights—the title of an individual citizen to a high office and the title of a sovereign State to be represented in the Senate by the person of its choice. We can not doubt that this declaration of the Senate is a judgment in the sense in which that word is used by judicial tribunals. We can conceive of no case which can arise in human affairs where it is more important that a judgment of any court should be respected and should stand unaffected by caprice or anything likely to excite passion or to tempt virtue. When the Senate decided the question it was sitting as a high constitutional court. In its action we think it ought to respect the principles, in giving effect to its own decision, which have been established in other judicial tribunals in like cases and which the experience of mankind has found safe and salutary."

The committee further said, with reference to the importance of adherence to the doctrine of res adjudicata:

"It seems to us very important to the preservation of constitutional government, very important to the dignity and authority of the Senate, very important to the peace of the country, that we should abide by this principle. There are few greater temptations which affect the conduct of men than the temptation to seize upon political power without regard to the obligation of law. To act upon the doctrine upon which this petition rests would expose the Senate to the temptation to reverse its own judgments and to vacate or to award seats in this Chamber according as the changing majorities should make possible. If such practice should be admitted it would, in our opinion, go far to weaken the respect due to this body and the respect due to constitutional authority." (Congressional Record, vol. 29, pp. 2524, 2525.)

When the Senate held, on the first hearing of the du Pont case, that the election of Mr. du Pont was not legal, the Legislature of Delaware elected to fill the vacancy the Hon. Richard R. Kenney. When the Senate committee unanimously reported that the first decision of the Senate in the du Pont case was a bar to reopening the matter, the Senate unanmiously admitted Senator Kenney. This action of the Senate was equivalent to a unanimous declaration that the doctrine of res adjudicata applied. It is to be inferred from the reports of the committee that at the time of the second application the complexion of the Senate had so changed that those upholding the legality of Mr. du Pont's election were in the majority. It is expressly stated in the report that such was the line of division in the committee itself. Nevertheless, both the committee and the Senate unanimously yielded their personal views of the propriety of Mr. du Pont's election and enforced the important principle of res adjudicata.

Senator Lorimer, by his counsel, in this case claims the benefit of the doctrine of res adjudicata. Before this committee such a claim was made, setting up that the legality and validity of his election were finally adjudicated by the Senate during the Sixty-first Congress, when the Senate pronounced final judgment on the question by determining in the negative the resolution that William Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Illinois. No formal plea is necessary in such a matter. In actions where strict pleading is not required, former adjudication need not be specially pleaded. Lord Mansfield decided, in Bird v. Randall (3 Burr., 1345), that in actions on the case no plea of former adjudication is necessary. This is the general rule in this country. (2 Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 231.)

In any event, counsel for Senator Lorimer might well have withheld filing the plea until some resolution was offered declaring the election invalid. The resolution appointing this committee directed an investigation of the election. If, as a result of that investigation or otherwise, any resolution should be hereafter offered to the Senate declaring that the election of William Lorimer as a Senator from Illinois was illegal and invalid, when such a resolution is offered it would be in order for Senator Lorimer to invoke the defense of res adjudicata. Until such a resolution is offered and under consideration in the Senate there would be no occasion, measured by the analogies of a pleading in a court of law or in equity, for a Senator formally to present his defense. The Senate by the adoption of the resolution appointing this committee did not vacate or attempt to vacate the former judgment. The Supreme Court of the United States (In re Chapman, 166 U. S., 661) said of a resolution of the Senate:

"It was certainly not necessary that the resolution should declare in advance what the Senate meditated doing when the investigation was concluded."

And the court there pointed out that no one could tell what action would be taken or contemplated by the Senate until the investigation was concluded. And so here, neither Senator Lorimer nor anyone else could know what the Senate meditated doing when the investigation was concluded—could not know whether or not any resolution would even be offered assailing the validity of the election in question. But the plea serves to call to the attention of this committee the question of res adjudicata; and this committee deems it its duty to present to the Senate the facts and the contentions bearing on that question so that the Senate may, as the defense of res adjudicata is made, understand that any resolution which may be offered would be subject to the defense of res adjudicata.

In the argument submitted to this committee on behalf of Senator Lorimer it is said:

"There was in the case at bar (A) a final judgment (B) by a competent tribunal invested with complete jurisdiction to try the issue; (C) the parties to the former judgment are the same parties as are now in controversy, and (D) the issues and causes of action were precisely the same. When these elements are present the former judgment is a bar not only to what was actually litigated in the former suit, but to all matters that might have been litigated under the issues thereof."

That argument then takes up the subjects of the enumerated elements. We agree with the contention that each of those enumerated elements is present in the case before us, so that a resolution declaring against the validity of Senator Lorimer's election would be subject to the defense of res adjudicata.

(A) The adjudication by the Senate, by its action of March 1, 1911, on the resolution, was final. By that action the Senate finally adjudged that Senator Lorimer was duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States. As pointed out by counsel for Senator Lorimer, "If the resolution had been adopted Senator Lorimer would have been unseated, and he could not have asked the Senate at the Sixty-second Congress to rehear him and change its judgment." Manifestly, the judgment, if against him, would have been final, and equally plain is the fact that the judgment for him was also final. No contention can be made that the form of the resolution prevents its being considered a final judgment.

Black on Judgments says:

"In considering the effect of a judgment as res adjudicata its actual form or style is not very material, provided it embodies the essential features of an actual sentence or decision of the court."

The sentence or decision of the Senate in all contested election cases and in all expulsion cases has been made by resolution. Counsel cites many cases in the Senate by some of which the title of a Senator to his seat has been confirmed and by others of which expulsion has been defeated, where the judgment of the Senate was expressed by the determination of a resolution in the negative. We deem it unnecessary to review these cases. It is sufficient to refer to but one, namely, the unanimous report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the du Pont case, supra, where the committee said:

"We can not doubt that this declaration of the Senate is a judgment in the sense in which that word is used by judicial tribunals."

The courts have decided that the determination of a matter of election by the adoption of a resolution in a legislative body constitutes a final adjudication. (State of Maryland v. Jarrett & Harwood, 17 Md., 309; Opinion of the Justices, 56 N. H., 570.)

(B) The Senate was a tribunal competent to render the judgment.

The numerous decisions of the courts and of the Senate itself cited of this report establish that the Senate, in passing upon an election case, is a court exercising purely judicial functions. Moreover, the jurisdiction of the Senate in such a matter is exclusive.

Herman on Estoppel says (sec. 131, p. 143):

"A much more conclusive effect is given to judgments of courts of exclusive jurisdiction than to judgments of courts which have only concurrent jurisdiction."

The fact that the judgment was rendered by a divided court does not detract from its conclusiveness as res adjudicata. It has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States, and by many other courts, that the fact the former judgment was pronounced by a divided court, or even a court equally divided, as sometimes happens in cases of affirmance by operation of law in courts of appellate review, makes the judgment none the less binding. (Durant v. Essex County, 7 Wall., 107; McAllister v. Hamilton, 61 S. C., 6; 39 S. E., 182; Kolb v. Swann, 68 Md., 516; 13 Atl., 379.)

(C) The parties to the proceeding are the same.

In cases of judgments in rem identity of parties is not an element essential to the application of the doctrine of res adjudicata because in such a case the former judgment concludes not only the parties, but the whole world. In the Fitch and Bright case the Senate treated the former judgment as a judgment in rem. When the judgment is in personam the law requires that the parties in the second proceeding be the same as the parties in the proceeding leading to the former judgment. In any proceeding against the validity of the election of William Lorimer the plaintiff would be the Senate itself in its inquisitorial or prosecuting capacity and the defendant would be, of course, William Lorimer. Much of the law of res adjudicata has been borrowed by modern jurisdictions from the civil law of Rome. In the Roman law the respective parties were known as the actor and the reus. In legal contemplation the judgment pronounced by the Senate, March 1, 1911, was in the action of the United States Senate, actor, v. William Lorimer, reus. The Government and its branches and agencies are subject to the operation of the law of res adjudicata the same as individuals. (See the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. California & Oregon Land Co., 192 U. S., 355.)

(D) If, as a result of this investigation, there should be presented to the Senate a resolution that the election of William Lorimer was invalid, then the issue raised by that resolution would be precisely the same as that in the proceeding leading to the judgment of March 1, 1911, whereby the Senate adjudicated that the election of William Lorimer was valid and legal. Beyond all question, complete identity of issue is shown by the record.

Your committee, therefore, concludes that both on principle and by authority the action of the Senate March 1, 1911, deciding that the election of William Lorimer was valid and legal, constitutes res adjudicata as against any subsequent attempt to have the Senate decide that the election was not valid and legal.

In this connection it is well to direct attention to the fact that the principle of res adjudicata embraces not only what was actually determined, but extends also to every matter which, under the issues, the parties might have litigated. As pointed out in the briefs submitted, there is some misunderstanding as to the law of res adjudicata, due to attempts to cover the whole subject by definite rules intended to be applicable to all cases. Where the issues are the same the bar of the former judgment extends not only to points actually decided but to all the points and questions which could have been litigated under the issues in the former proceeding. Where the issues are not the same and where a former judgment is relied on simply as an estoppel on some limited issue that is common to both proceedings, then the law is that the former judgment is conclusive only as to what was actually decided. But the latter principle has no possible application here because, beyond all question, the issue would be the same as it was in the former proceeding in the Senate, namely, whether the election of William Lorimer as a Senator from Illinois was valid and legal. The rule that where the former judgment was upon the same issues it is a bar not only as to what was actually litigated and decided, but as to everything that might have been litigated under the issues in the former proceeding, has, as said by Herman on Estoppel (sec. 125, pp. 133, 134), "not only gone unchallenged for more than half a century, but a uniform and unbroken line of cases has given it approval."

In the brief filed by counsel for Senator Lorimer, in order to show the universality of that rule, counsel has reviewed many decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and has cited decisions of the highest courts of each of the eight States represented in the Senate by members of this committee. An examination of the general digests shows that the same rule is in force in practically every State of the United States.

The doctrine that the effect of a judgment as a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second action upon the same claim or demand is a bar not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, bu as to every other matter which might have been offered for that purpose, was elaborately explained by the Supreme Court of the United States in Cromwell v. Sac County (94 U. S., 351). It appears that the decision on that point has been cited and followed by the Supreme Court in more than 40 subsequent decisions. Counsel has reviewed many decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which establish the doctrine, but it is unnecessary to cite more than the following: Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Slaght (205 U. S., 122); Green v. Bogue (158 U. S., 478); Werlein v. New Orleans (177 U. S., 390); National Foundry, etc., v. Oconto Water Supply (183 U. S., 216).

Everything that has been brought forward in the present investigation could have been presented and litigated in the former proceeding under the issues thereof. The existence of the evidence with the taking of which the present hearing was begun, namely, the testimony of Clarence S. Funk, was known to some Senators at the time of the former hearing of this matter before the Senate. Mr. Kohlsaat, the editor of the Chicago Record-Herald, sent telegrams and letters to a number of Senators advising them of the existence of that evidence during the pendency of the question before the Senate and before its final action. The former committee permitted the Tribune to be represented before it by counsel. The editor of the Tribune knew from Mr. Kohlsaat of the existence of that evidence while the subcommittee was sitting in Chicago engaged in taking the testimony. (Record, 2001–2003.) No effort was ever made by those who undertook to present all the evidence and who knew of the Funk story to present in that proceeding any phase of the subject covered by the testimony of Mr. Funk. Manifestly no judicial tribunal should encourage the trying of a case by piecemeal. The very object of courts is to put an end to controversy. And no court would permit a party who has knowledge of his evidence to withhold it at the first trial for the purpose of getting a second trial if defeated in the first.

As an application of the principle established by the authorities last referred to, the law is clearly to the effect that newly discovered evidence furnishes no ground for avoiding the bar of a former final judgment. Some of the laity may have the impression that a former judgment can be nullified by bringing forth at a second hearing newly discovered evidence. No law author and no court recognizes any such exception to the doctrine of res adjudicata. The Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, in Southern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States (168 U. S., 1), said:

"We can not concur in the view that the evidence upon this branch of the case is of such nature as to compel the court, in the interest of truth and justice, not only to consider it but to pass again upon the issue made in the former suits as to the character of the maps of 1872. Whatever is new in the evidence now before us, touching that matter, is simply cumulative on the one side or the other. The application to consider that evidence is practically an application for a rehearing as to things directly determined in the former suits between the same parties, and which adjudication has never been modified. Such a course of procedure is wholly inadmissible under the settled rule of res adjudicata."

In Hubbell v. United States (171 U. S., 203), at page 209, the Supreme Court declared that the development of a different theory or state of facts on the second trial does not change the rule of res adjudicata. The court said:

"But, even if a somewhat different theory or state of facts were developed upon the trial of the second case, the former judgment would not operate the less as an estoppel, since the patentee can not bring suit against an infringer upon a certain state of facts, and after a dismissal of his action, bring another suit against the same party upon the same state of facts, and recover upon a different theory. The judgment in the first action is a complete estoppel in favor of the successful party in a subsequent action upon the same state of facts."

The Supreme Court of Illinois has forcefully expressed the same view in the recent case of Marie M. E. Church v. Trinity M. E. Church (253 Ill., 21).

Black on Judgments (vol. 2, sec. 731) says:

"The parties to a suit must make the most of their day in court, and bring forward all claims and demands properly belonging to the cause of action as well as all other evidence and all necessary parts of their case or defense, on pain of being barred in a subsequent controversy."

To the same effect are 1 Van Fleet on Former Adjudication (p. 209, sec. 83); 23 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, 1291, citing decisions from the Federal courts of California, Colorado, Louisiana, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, Wisconsin, and England.

The authorities make it plain that the Senate is barred by the rule of res adjudicata from reopening and rehearing this case on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

But the newly discovered evidence question is not one of great importance in this matter, for the reason that even if the doctrine of res adjudicata were not in the way no case whatever has been made out that would warrant the granting of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. In that class of cases where the courts set aside verdicts and grant new trials for newly discovered evidence, there are certain well-defined limitations upon granting new trials on that ground. The granting of new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence is a power cautiously exercised by the courts, and the strictest rules are applied in examining an application on such a ground.

In the first place, the evidence newly discovered must be "of such a character and strength that it is reasonably certain that it would have produced an opposite result if produced at the trial;" the new evidence must be incontrovertible and conclusive. (29 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, 900–902, and several hundred decisions cited in notes; 23 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, 1031.) "The evidence must not be merely cumulative or corroborative or merely intended to impeach some of the witnesses at the former trial." (Same authorities, and 29 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, 907–918.)

In the next place, the evidence must actually have been discovered after the time of the former trial, and the party seeking the new trial must excuse his failure to produce the new evidence by showing that he failed to discover it, notwithstanding the exercise of due diligence by him. Of course, if the party knows of the new evidence at the time of the former trial, such knowledge is a complete bar to the granting of a new trial on this ground. (29 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, 885, 886, et seq.; 23 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, 103.)

The record clearly shows in the present proceeding that the existence of the principal new evidence which it may be claimed was the occasion for making the new inquiry was known to some Senators at the time of the former hearing before the Senate. See testimony of Mr. Kohlsaat and letters and telegrams of Mr. Kohlsaat to divers Senators. (Record, vol. 1, pp. 438, 445, 451, 455, 467–473; vol. 8, pp. 7332–7335.)

Moreover, the granting of new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence is usually to the party defendant. (6 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, edition of 1905, sec. 661; 23 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, 1030.) Few, if any, cases can be found where such relief was granted to one who occupied the position of plaintiff in the former trial. The reason for this is that it generally lies within the power of the party plaintiff to dismiss his proceedings and to start them anew if he deems his evidence insufficient, especially if he had any intimation that additional evidence could be produced.

The new evidence introduced on this hearing was mainly of these three classes: (1) Rumor, gossip, and opinion about various members of the Illinois Legislature; (2) evidence such as the testimony of Clarence S. Funk as to talk of a fund in connection with the senatorial election, which we show elsewhere, was known by those urging this reinvestigation while the former one was in progress; (3) evidence favorable to Senator Lorimer, contradicting certain testimony adverse to him, and explaining many circumstances not explained on the first investigation.

Of course, the evidence of the third class furnishes no newly discovered evidence to overturn the former judgment.

No one could say that the evidence of the first class was conclusive. It was not even evidence in any legal sense. Thousands of pages of the record contain testimony of this kind, which would not have been competent under any rules governing the admissibility of evidence, but which was received by this committee in order to obtain every possible matter of information bearing on the situation. For example, there was evidence that some members of the Illinois Legislature, several months after the senatorial election, were seen in possession of a number of $100 bills. The possession of such money was no evidence that it was acquired corruptly, for it is at least as reasonable to infer that it was obtained honestly. But if it appeared the member was unable to account clearly for the possession of the money, and if there were anything to indicate a possibility that the money was obtained as a result of corrupt practices, there is no reason whatever for inferring from the fact of possession of the money by such a member that the money was received as a payment for voting for Senator Lorimer. Such a member voted on several hundred measures in the session. One of the laws enacted at that session limited the hours of work for women in factories to 10 hours. It would be absurd to say that the possession of the money was proof that a member who voted for that law was paid for so doing. It is equally absurd to contend that the mere fact that some member of the legislature not in any way otherwise subject to any imputation of corruption in voting for Mr. Lorimer, was in possession of money several months after the election, was evidence that he had received that money for voting for Senator Lorimer. All the evidence of this class was lacking in that conclusiveness essential to the granting of new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

The Funk testimony was also lacking in conclusiveness. In fact, it has been taken cum grano salis by nearly everyone who has heard it. Mr. Funk himself admitted that he thought his story would not be believed. His associates, to whom it is claimed he told the story at the time, did not take it seriously enough to report it to any of the public authorities or to the committee of the Senate that shortly afterwards was in session across the street from the office of Mr. Funk and his associates, and these associates of Mr. Funk who testified that they heard from him the story profess to be very good citizens. Mr. Kohlsaat did not have enough confidence in the story of Mr. Funk to insist upon the right to give it full and unqualified publicity. He did make the story known (without revealing Funk's identity) to several Senators some time before the final action of the Senate in the former proceeding. No Senator thus advised treated the information as of enough importance to ask for a reference back to the committee or the reopening of the taking of evidence, though all knew Mr. Kohlsaat could not refuse to reveal the name of his informant if Mr. Kohlsaat were called as a witness. When Mr. Funk did give his testimony its very improbability was its most marked feature. It was wholly uncorroborated. His version was contradicted in its various parts by many witnesses. No one could say it was sustained by the preponderance of the evidence. The testimony of others as to the gossip regarding a fund used in the senatorial election was speculative and worthless and wherever it had any tangibility it was conclusively contradicted and refuted.

So, even if it were proper to vacate the former judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence, there is no newly discovered evidence to which attaches conclusiveness and the other elements uniformly recognized by the courts as necessary to be present in order to warrant granting a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

It is a general rule that no court has a right to vacate its judgment after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered. The Senate has no fixed terms, but in the Fitch and Bright case, supra, and in other res adjudicata cases of the Senate, the expiration of a session of Congress has been treated as the lapse of a term. In this case the second investigation is at a different Congress and a considerable portion of the membership of the Senate is changed.

In Anderson v. Dunn (6 Wheat., 204) the Supreme Court of the United States held that a House of Congress ceases to exist the moment of its periodical adjournment or duration.

The Supreme Court of the United States is a tribunal of last resort, and there would be no power in the Government to overrule it if it should choose to grant a rehearing on any ground after the expiration of the term at which it renders a judgment. Yet that court has always refused so to do. In Bronson v. Schulten (104 U. S., 410) the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"In this country all courts have terms and vacations. The time of the commemcement of every term, if there be half a dozen a year, is fixed by statute and the end of it by the final adjournment of the court for that term. This is the case with regard to all the courts of the United States, and if there be exceptions in the State courts they are unimportant. It is a general rule of the law that all the judgments, decrees, or other orders of the courts, however conclusive in their character, are under the control of the court which pronounces them during the term at which they are rendered or entered of record, and may then be set aside, vacated, modified, or annulled by that court.

"But it is a rule equally well established that after the term has ended all final judgments and decrees of the court pass beyond its control, unless steps be taken during that term, by motion or otherwise, to set aside, modify, or correct them, and if errors exist they can only be corrected by such proceeding by a writ of error or appeal as may be allowed in a court which by law can review the decision. So strongly has this principle been upheld by this court that while realizing that there is no court which can review its decisions it has invariably refused all applications for rehearing made after the adjournment of the court for the term at which the judgment was rendered. And this is placed upon the ground that the case has passed beyond the control of the court." (Brooks v. R. R. Co., ante, 91; Public Schools v. Walker, 9 Wall., 603; Brown v. Aspden, 14 How., 25; Cameron v. McRoberts, 3 Wheat., 591; ex parte Sibbard v. U. S., 12 Pet., 488; U. S. v. Glamorgan, 2 Curtis, 236; Bradford v. Patterson, 1 A. D. Marsh, 464; Ballard v. Davis, 3 J. J. Marsh, 656.)

Many authorities on this proposition are collected and reviewed in Phillips v. Negley (117 U. S., 665).

If a tribunal will not respect its own judgments it can not expect others to do so. This committee submits the enforcement of the doctrine of res adjudicata is essential to uphold the dignity of the court pronouncing the judgment in this case. The reasons which call for the enforcement of the doctrine of res adjudicata by the courts apply even more strongly to the Senate.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Southern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States (168 U. S., 1), at page 49, said:

"This general rule is demanded by the very object for which civil courts have been established, which is to secure the peace and repose of society by the settlement of matters capable of judicial determination. Its enforcement is essential to the maintenance of social order; for the aid of judicial tribunals would not be invoked for the vindication of rights of person and property if, as between parties and their privies, conclusiveness did not attend the judgments of such tribunals in respect of all matters properly put in issue and actually determined by them."

Our conclusion is the doctrine of res adjudicata applies here and the former judgment of the Senate rendered March 1, 1911, herein is conclusive.

Under the principles laid down by the highest judicial tribunals in the land, the Senate of the Sixty-second Congress would not question the title of Mr. Lorimer to his seat, the right to which was determined in the Sixty-first Congress, even though new evidence had been produced to impeach it. This committee, however, would not feel inclined to follow this rule implicitly, and if new and substantial evidence had been discovered, showing clearly that he had secured his election by corruption, we would recommend a reconsideration in order that the honor and integrity of the Senate may be maintained. Absolutely no new and substantial evidence has been discovered impeaching his title, and for the Senate under such circumstances to reconsider its action taken in another Congress would be to invoke the rule of might instead of the rule of right, and would violate the uniform and universal rule of action followed by all the courts of Christendom and the unbroken precedents of the Senate itself.

The jack pot.

This committee was specially instructed to inquire fully into and report upon the sources and use of the alleged jack-pot fund, or any other fund, in its relation to and effect, if any, upon the election of William Lorimer to the Senate.

The committee has hereinbefore specifically reported its inability to find any evidence of the existence of a jack-pot or any other fund raised or used for the purpose of affecting such election.

Whether corruption existed in the General Assembly of Illinois of 1909 or in previous legislatures affecting general legislation is a question concerning which it is difficult to secure definite information. This is apparent from the nature of the case, for no one participating in it would willingly admit his guilt.

Many members of the legislature of 1909 testified that they had never heard the question discussed; others that it had been discussed, but in a joking way; that if a man changed his vote on any question or if a bill passed or failed to pass some one would inquire, "What was there in it?" or make other inquiries of that character. But there were witnesses who testified to gossips and common report that in previous legislatures and in the legislature of 1909 corruption was practiced either to secure or retard legislation.

For instance, Mr. Hinman, editor of the Inter-Ocean, while having no personal knowledge on the subject, testified that it was a matter of common report and it was his opinion and belief that there has been a jack pot in every legislature since he has lived in Illinois, a period of 12 years (Hinman, 203, 209), and that common report connected the liquor interests with such jack pots (209–210). Mr. Keeley, editor and manager of the Chicago Tribune, testified that he heard charges that there were jack pots; that various bill were hold-up bills; that money had been paid or solicited for their passage (record, 1908); that the liquor interests had contributed; that it was a matter of common gossip, but not of knowledge; that in his experience of 20 years in the newspaper business it has been common gossip, but apparently incapable of proof (1916). Mr. Kohlsaat, editor of the Chicago Record-Herald, testified that it was the general impression that the jack pot has been an established institution in the Legislature of Illinois for years, although he has no definite knowledge of the fact (495).

Speaker Shurtleff in his testimony (record, 4585–4586) states that during his service in the legislature he heard many statements regarding corruption, some of which he thinks were seriously made and others in a jocular way, but in the spring of 1909 he was invited to a dinner by certain gentlemen from different parts of the country who were connected with railroads, at which the subject of railroad legislation was freely discussed, and protests made against the nature of bills that were introduced in the legislature, and they sought his cooperation in the assembly of 1909 against bills and proposed legislation which they deemed radical. He does not remember the language used, but says that he absorbed the impression that in years back the railroads had felt that they had been blackmailed or compelled to pay tribute (4585–4586) and that the dinner was by way of a declaration of independence from such legislation, and to ask his assistance in the effort they were making to protect themselves against being held up and blackmailed. No particular bill was discussed and no specific instance alleged.

Gov. Deneen testified, in substance, that there is a general understanding that they began in 1897 and have continued ever since. Concerning the existence of jack pots, he did not profess to have any personal knowledge or to be able to state any definite fact, but he testified that it is the general understanding in Illinois that money is paid; that it accumulates in the hands of several men and is distributed according to the judgment of the men who control (1122). He further testified that he did not know upon what principle the fund was distributed, but assumed that the men who create, who gather the fund, certain leaders, have the determining power as to how it shall be done. He testified that he had heard that the railroads have contributed for years to protect themselves against legislation; that the gas companies, or gas company, of Chicago, and the electric light company, the liquor interests, and the stock yards companies and the elevator companies, he thought, and the Pullman company and the street car companies have contributed (1123); that such is the general running rumor, but that he does not know that it is based on facts at all (1123); that he never made an investigation and had no power or facilities to do so (1123).

It further appears from Gov. Deneen's testimony that in the forty-sixth general assembly (that of 1909) railroad presidents from different parts of the country asked him to meet them, saying that bills were being presented that went to the extent of confiscation of their property; and that, under the Federal laws, their books were examined to such an extent that they could not do what they were going to be asked to do, even if they wanted to; that they were against such practices, except in self-defense, where the men "held them up" at the point of a gun (1131).

The governor testified that he told them that the only way to do would be to call in the leading men and have them go down to Springfield in such numbers as to overcome the influence of the other men, and that they said that they intended to make a stand against the practice, and that they would cease to be "held up" by them.

Gov. Deneen testified that according to the newspapers they sent a thousand men down there at one time, and that they were greatly excited about the situation and appealed to him for aid (1131). Further testifying, the governor said that the implication was that the railroads had been previously "held up" and that they took that method of defeating legislation instead of contributing to a jack pot (1132).

From all the evidence secured it is clear that the term "jack pot," as used by the people of Illinois and by the newspapers of that State, refers to a supposed fund created by contributions from persons or corporations with a purpose either to secure or defeat pending or proposed legislation, such fund to be corruptly used for one of those purposes and to be distributed according to the judgment of men in control and, ordinarily, a considerable time after the adjournment of the legislature.

Without definite proof of the existence of specific jack pots the committee can only report that a general belief exists among many classes in Illinois that corruption funds which have recently come to be known as jack pots have been more or less common, in connection with legislation in that State.

Was there a jack pot in 1909?

If a jack pot was made up during the session of the Illinois Legislature of 1909, the evidence goes to establish the fact that it was of the ordinary character of jack pots referred to in the foregoing statements—that is to say—made up of contributions from those interested in special branches of legislation, but there is no evidence showing the existence of any fund, whether it be called jack pot or otherwise, which was contributed to for the purpose of aiding in the election of Mr. Lorimer to the Senate. The evidence is conclusive that Mr. Lorimer not only was not a candidate, but steadfastly refused to entertain any suggestion to become a candidate for the position of United States Senator until about 10 or 12 days before his election, and the only evidence hinting at the creation of such a fund after that time is the Funk story, already discussed in this report, the investigation of which not only disclosed no evidence of the existence of such a fund, but resulted in the discovery of conditions and circumstances conclusively disproving its existence. And there is no evidence of any character that representatives of any special industry or industries were acting in Mr. Lorimer's behalf.

Aside from the testimony of White, Beckemeyer, Link, and Holstlaw there is no evidence of any corruption fund during the session of 1909 or after its adjournment.

White, Link, and Beckemeyer say that they received $1,000 each from Mr. Browne and $900 each from Mr. Wilson. In this respect they stand on a common basis. Of these three so receiving $1,900 each, Beckemeyer and Link have insisted from first to last, and under extraordinary inducements, to connect the receipt of such money with the election of Mr. Lorimer, that they never received a dollar by reason of having voted for him. They have not only refused to admit that they received any money in consideration of their votes for Mr. Lorimer, but they have at all times positively sworn that they did not, and that they were not promised and did not expect any compensation for their votes.

It is evident from all the circumstances that the $1,900 paid to each of the three—White, Beckemeyer, and Link—all came from the same source.

Mr. Link had long been an admirer of Mr. Lorimer and was much interested in the plans which he advocated to accomplish the construction of the much talked of deep waterway between the Lakes and the Gulf. (Record, 7307.) In 1908 he heard Mr. Lorimer speak three times in Madison County, on which occasions he exhibited charts and made full explanation of the plans and the practicability of the project, and Mr. Link was so much interested and so much impressed by his arguments that he followed him to Granite City and to Edwardsville, where meetings were held. (Record, 6196.) He also heard Mr. Lorimer discuss the waterway question before the Legislature of Illinois and determined that if he could help elect him Senator he would do so, provided a Democrat could not be elected. (6197–97.) Mr. Link testified that he thought Mr. Lorimer could do more in the United States Senate than any other man to carry into operation the plan and as a result of this, about 10 days prior to his election, he met Mr. Lorimer in Springfield and assured him of his support (Record, 6173–75, 6205–06), and later on when Lee O'Neil Browne asked him he if would vote for a Republican, he replied, "It is according to what Republican you have in view," and when Mr. Browne asked him how Mr. Lorimer would suit him, he told him that he had promised Mr. Lorimer personally a week or 10 days before that he would vote for him. (6173–74, 6201.)

Mr. Link has steadfastly insisted in the most positive terms that he was never promised any money or any thing of value in consideration of his vote for Mr. Lorimer (Record, 7307), and there is no evidence to the contrary. Although he freely admitted having received $1,000 from Lee O'Neil Browne and $900 from Rovert E. Wilson, he has always stated that it had no connection whatever with his vote for Mr. Lorimer.

Early in the proceedings Mr. Beckemeyer sent a telegram to the Chicago Daily News, in answer to an inquiry from that paper, in which he said:

"No one ever talked to me about money for voting for Lorimer. I did it of my own free will and accord. I know nothing of a jack pot that was distributed, nor did I ever hear of it." (2898.)

Before this committee he was specially interrogated regarding the contents of that telegram, and among other the said that nobody ever talked with him about money for voting for Mr. Lorimer before he did so vote; that nobody ever intimated to him at any time or place that if he voted for Mr. Lorimer he would receive money or any other thing of value; that he did not have any understanding of any kind from any source that if he did vote for Mr. Lorimer he would receive money or any other thing of value or any other consideration whatever therefor; that the first element in that telegram was true, but upon being questioned concerning the second element in the telegram the following testimony was given:

"Judge HANECY. You say, 'I know nothing of a jack pot that was distributed.'

"Mr. BECKEMEYER. No, sir; that is not true, because I did know about it at that time." (2899.)

Mr. Beckemeyer further testified that the statement in the telegram that he never had heard of the jack pot was a lie, and that he knew it was a lie when he sent the telegram. (2899.)

The only testimony that can be said to contain even a suggestion that the money paid Beckemeyer by Browne was not jack-pot money, within the meaning of the term as used by Beckemeyer in the foregoing testimony, in his statement that when Lee O'Neil Browne handed a him roll he told him that it was a thousand dollars, and said, "This is the Lorimer money and there will be some more in the future." (2840.)

This statement was first made to State's Attorney Wayman after Beckemeyer had been three times before the Cook County grand jury, on neither of which occasions had he mentioned it. In the meantime, for two days he had been constantly in the custody of Officer Keeley and had been subjected to every kind of pressure to induce him to testify to various matters. When not before the grand jury he had been permitted to drink heavily, and the preceding night had been taken by Officer Keeley to public resorts about Chicago, and late that night when grossly intoxicated had been taken by Officer Keeley to a house of ill fame, where they both remained for the balance of that night. Beckemeyer's wife was then critically ill in a hospital in St. Louis, and he was in dire distress because of prospective indictments against him, and because of his fear of exposure of his conduct in Chicago. The statement was made after repeated conferences with the State's attorney as to the testimony he intended to give regarding the part he had taken in receiving money from Browne and Wilson (Record, 5761), in which he was assured by Mr. Wayman that he could not be indicted in Illinois for what occurred in St. Louis, and the further assurance on the part of Mr. Wayman of full immunity for any offense committed in the State of Illinois, which promise has been faithfully kept. Even when Beckemeyer made this statement to Mr. Wayman, according to the testimony of the latter, it was accompanied by the claim that he had no understanding with Browne before he voted for Mr. Lorimer (5765); that he was not expecting any money because of his vote for Mr. Lorimer, "but his supposition was that it was sort of understood that whatever there was in anything down there would be distributed, and they relied upon the integrity and honesty of their leader" (Wayman, 5765), "and that the balance of the jack pot or the fund could not be distributed until something else was attended to" (Wayman, 5765), which fully accords with Beckemeyer's testimony that at that time he knew there was a jack pot, and with his unbroken insistence that his vote for Mr. Lorimer had no connection therewith.

The committee is convinced that Browne never mentioned "Lorimer" in connection with the $1,000 Beckemeyer says he received, and that Beckemeyer brought Mr. Lorimer into the statement he made to Mr. Wayman in order to insure immunity.

Charles A. White is the only one of the three who ever asserted that the money he received from Mr. Browne was for voting for Mr. Lorimer, and it is a significant fact that he has always contended that the remaining $900 received through Mr. Wilson was from the jack-pot fund, and he complained because he did not get more, and Mr. Beckemeyer admits that he had knowledge of the jack pot.

The only legal evidence tending to show that it had any connection with the election of Mr. Lorimer is the testimony of White, given a year after the transaction and after he had, in consideration of $3,500, sold to the Chicago Tribune his "jack-pot story," in which for the first time he made this claim.

The testimony given by White before the grand jury of Cook County, the courts of that county, the first senatorial investigating committee, and this committee, is substantially as follows:

"Mr. MARBLE. Who first asked you to vote for Mr. Lorimer for Senator?

"Mr. WHITE. Representative Lee O'Neil Browne.

"Mr. MARBLE. Had you discussed the possible election of Mr. Lorimer with any other person before that request was made?

"Mr. WHITE. No, sir.

"Mr. MARBLE. Had you heard him discussed by members of the legislature prior to that request?

"Mr. WHITE. Not to my knowledge; no, sir.

"Mr. MARBLE. When was that request made by Lee O'Neil Browne?

"Mr. WHITE. The first time he talked with me about it was the night of the 24th of May, 1909. * * * In his room at the St. Nicholas Hotel, in Springfield, Ill. * * * He called me over the phone. I was in my room and he called me over the phone and told me he would be up in a little while. He wanted to see me. * * * It was late at night. I would not want to fix the exact time; possibly between 10 and 12 or 1 and 2 o'clock; somewhere in that time. He came up to the room afterwards, and invited me to go to his room." (2463–2464.)

Mr. White says that Mr. Browne came to his room possibly 30 minutes after telephoning; that he came alone, and that Otis V. Yarbrough and Sidney C. Yarbrough were in bed in his room at the time; that Mr. Browne entered the room and made some remark about three sleeping in one room; that there were some jokes passed, and Mr. Browne told him he wanted to have a little talk with him and invited him to his (Browne's) room (2464); that he did so, where the following took place:

"Mr. WHITE. He asked me if I could vote for a Republican. I replied, 'Yes; I can vote for anything.' Then he asked me if I could vote for Lorimer for Senator. He might have said 'Mr. Lorimer' or 'William Lorimer.' I told him I could. He wanted to know whether he could depend on me or not. I told him yes. Then I think the question came up—I asked him how many men were going to vote for Mr. Lorimer, if I remember correctly, and I mentioned a few names. I asked him if certain members of the house were going to vote for Mr. Lorimer. About some he replied, 'Yes' and about some he replied, 'No.' He told me it was strictly under my hat. He said, 'Now, it won't be any chicken feed, either.' (White, 2465.)

"Mr. MARBLE. What members were mentioned?

"Mr. WHITE. I asked him if Mr. Naylor was going to vote for Mr. Lorimer. He said, 'No.' I asked him if Mr. Morris was. He said, 'Yes.' I asked him if Mr. Fahy was. He said, 'No.' I asked him if Mr. Wilson was. He said, 'Yes.' I asked him if Mr. Abrahams was. He answered, 'Yes.' I asked him if Mr. McGuire was. He said, 'Yes.' I might have mentioned a few more." (2466.)

And he adds:

"I think there might have been something suggested to the effect that he would let me know when to vote." (2466.)

And continuing Mr. White testified:

"Mr. Browne cautioned me again about being quiet. He said he was suspicious of a little place above there that they called Joliet." (2466.)

Mr. White testifies that on the following day, May 25, in the afternoon, after the house adjourned, he had a further conversation with Lee O'Neil Browne in his room in the St. Nicholas Hotel, during which Browne said:

"'Charlie, old boy, what seems to be troubling you?' I told him, 'Nothing, Lee, only I would like to know what the members are getting out of this proposition, or what I am to get out of it.' I do not remember the exact language now. He said, 'Can't you trust that to me, old boy?' I said, 'Yes; I can do that, but I want to know.' He said, 'You are to get $1,000, and it is ready cash, too.' I told him all right; that that was what I wanted. He cautioned me again about keeping quiet. He said, 'Don't talk to anyone. Keep this under your hat;' and he remarked again that he was suspicious of the little place above there that they called Joliet." (White, 2469.)

Mr. White further testified:

"During that conversation I did ask him what there was from the other resources. He said, 'The jack pot won't be distributed for about three months after the legislature adjourns. There will be about that much or possibly a little more later on.'" (2469.)

The following day, May 26, White testifies that Mr. Browne came to him in the house of representatives and said:

"This comes off on the first ballot; now, don't forget."

And that he told him "All right," and Mr. Browne told someone at the rear of White the same thing. (2470.)

The weight to be attached to White's story.

In considering the weight which should be attached to White's story it is to be observed that his testimony was given nearly a year after the date of the alleged interview, during which time White had confessedly spent his legislative salary, $2,130, the money received from Browne and Wilson, $1,900, amounting in the whole to $4,030, together with various sums borrowed, and at a time when he was badly in need of funds. It was given after he had vainly attempted to extort $75,000 from Mr. Lorimer on false pretenses, as shown by the correspondence between them which will hereinafter appear.

Up to the time that he became the legislative agent of certain labor organizations before the legislature of 1907 the highest rate of wages he had ever received was $65 per month as street car conductor; during that session of 1907 while a member of the labor lobby at Springfield he received $6 per day and his expenses, and as a result he quickly acquired extravagant habits and became dissipated. White was elected a member of the general assembly through the support and influence of the labor organizations, and when he entered the legislature in January, 1909, he was $200 in debt on account of election expenses; he was 28 years of age, and the extravagant habits contracted during his service and experience as a lobbyist in the session of 1907 were renewed when he returned to Springfield and established himself again at the St. Nicholas Hotel. He drew his entire salary, amounting to $2,132, including mileage and stationery, in two or three installments, before the last of February (2460) and was borrowing money by the 1st of May. (2461.) His corrupt mind and vicious purposes are shown by the testimony of various witnesses, among them Thomas Curran, chairman of the house committee on labor, who testified that after Mr. White, who was also a member of that committee, had joined with the committee in favorably reporting out the women's 10-hour bill, and who was publicly for and secretly opposed to the bill, approached him with a proposition to "hold it up," and, as he understood, smother the bill, and that when he refused to do this, White said, "Well, I thought you were a good fellow." (6251.) In the testimony of Mr. Webb, an attorney, with whom White consulted as to "the legal status of a man who had accepted a portion of what he termed jack-pot money," and in which he said he had received $850 or $900 as his pro rata share of the jack pot (R., Webb, 7288), the following interpretation of the term "good fellow" is found:

"Mr. HANECY. Did he say from whom he received the $850 or $900?

"Mr. WEBB. No, sir; he did not except that he was a member of what he termed the 'good-fellow gang.'" (7288–7289.)

Mr. Curran further testified that White during the same conversation asked him "what was doing on the senatorial business yesterday" [the day Mr. Lorimer was elected]. Curran said he knew of nothing; that if there was anything doing he (White) ought to know, and said "Why do you ask?" White said, "Well, I thought Browne was double-crossing us." (6251–6252.)

William M. Rossell testified that during the forty-fifth assembly, when he was a labor lobbyist, White proposed to him to take pictures of members of the house and senate in compromising positions and then go through the State, Rossell to lecture and he to show the pictures on a screen and so make barrels of money. (6783–6787.) (6667.) This condition of mind is further shown by his own confession of actual corruption in receiving jack-pot money and converting it to his own use.

While in his testimony White lays great stress upon his virtuous intention to expose corruption, there is not a single instance showing that he tried to carry out this high purpose, and the only exposure he ever attempted had for its sole purpose the extortion of money for the suppression of his manuscript, or the receipt by him of a large sum of money for the sale of the same.

The legislature adjourned June 4, 1909, following which White visited O'Fallon and East St. Louis, but had no work, no position, and no income. About the middle of June he visited Chicago, where he alleges he received from Lee O'Neil Browne $900, which, with the $100 previously received from him, made the $1,000 to which reference has been made. (White, 2483–2485.) He testifies that a month later he met Robert E. Wilson in St. Louis and received from him $900 which he admits had no connection with Mr. Lorimer's election, but states that it was from the jack-pot fund.

(2499.) He made another trip to Chicago the last of July or first of August, and about 10 days later, accompanied by Lee O'Neil Browne and Fred T. Zentner, took certain lake trips, during which there was much dissipation and a reckless expenditure of money. (2508.) At that time he had received from legislative sources $2,130 and from Browne and Wilson $1,900, and had borrowed sundry sums from various individuals, but according to his own testimony he had when he started on these trips from Chicago only $550. Out of this sum he loaned Browne $220. During the following days of dissipation the balance was so recklessly spent that in order to pay his hotel bill he borrowed $20 from Browne. (2508, White.)

The conception and growth of the story.

It was at this point, following a period of gross dissipation, when his funds were exhausted, that White, upon his return from the lake trips, in the barroom of the Briggs House, in Chicago, on August 19, 1909, first conceived the idea of rehabilitating himself financially by charging that the money he received from Lee O'Neil Browne was in consideration of his vote for Mr. Lorimer for Senator. At this time, in the presence of William H. Sturmer and Fred Zentner, White said that he was going to take a trip in the fall and winter; going to his home in O'Fallon first, then down to New Orleans, then to Cuba, and up to New York; that he was going to have a big time in New York, and then come back home again.

Zentner remarked that he must have a lot of money to spend. White said, "No; I have not a lot of money, but I am going to get it, and I am going to get it without working." * * * "Well, that Lorimer crowd and our old pal Browne, too, have got to 'come across' good and hard when I say the word, and I am going to say it." Mr. Zentner then asked him if he had anything on them.

White replied: "No; I ain't. I got the worst of it down there in Springfield, but that makes no difference. I voted for Lorimer, and I am a Democrat, and I can say I got money for voting for Lorimer. Do you suppose they can stand for it a moment? I guess they will cough up when I say the word to them." Mr. Zentner said, "God, you would not treat Browne that way, would you?" to which White replied: "I am looking out for White, and besides Browne would not have to pay. That bunch behind him would have to, and it would not hurt him." (6355–6357, 6359–6361, 6364, 6367, 6371, 6373–6377.)

(Zentner. 6402.)

So far as the evidence shows, this was the first inception of the jack-pot story afterwards written by Charles A. White and published in the Chicago Tribune April 30, 1910.

White testifies that he commenced to prepare the manuscript about the last of August or first of September, and immediately a search for a publisher began. (2567.)

At the time his statement was made it was considered by Sturmer an idle boast, because White was intoxicated (Zentner, 6380), but it appears as a matter of fact that it did have foundation in White's mind, and that he saw in the fact that he, a Democrat, had voted for a Republican, a basis for fabricating such a charge, because immediately thereafter he began the preparation of his jack-pot story (White, 2567), and as early as September 7 following, only three weeks after he had asserted his purpose, he wrote Doubleday, Page & Co. and on September 9, Everybody's Magazine inquiring in what manner they published articles of the character indicated, and in other letters he fully informed them of the nature of his manuscript. The correspondence with these companies continued from time to time down to February 11, 1910, at which date he turned the manuscript over to Doubleday, Page & Co. for examination.

While engaged in the preparation of his story, White, on two or three different occasions, talked with Katherine A. Woods, owner of cigar stand in the Illmo Hotel, East St. Louis, with whom he had been on most friendly terms, telling her that he was writing a history of his life and of the Illinois Legislature; that he expected to make a fortune out of it, and that the Lorimer bunch would have to pay him enough money to keep him the rest of his life, and if the Lorimer bunch did not do it, he would make it hot for Lorimer; that he was going to run for Congress; that rich people of Chicago were backing him; that he had spent $3,000 and a lot of time in making the history of his life and of the Illinois Legislature, and that he was going to get it back. (7006–7007.)

White further told Miss Woods that he was going to get a lot of money out of the Lorimer bunch—enough to take care of him the rest of his life, and that he was going to get something on Congressman Rodenberg and was going to put him out of business, and that he (White) would then run for Congress and settle down and get married. (7007.)

The following letter to Hon. Roger C. Sullivan, Democratic national committeeman for Illinois, discloses another scheme on the part of White to obtain money.

FORTY-SIXTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY, STATE OF ILLINOIS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
O'Fallon, Ill., September 19, 1909.

Hon. ROGER C. SULLIVAN,
Chicago, Ill.

MY DEAR SIR: My friends, by the score, are urging me to enter the race in this congressional district for Congress.

I have failed to give any one of them any satisfactory answer as to what my future plans would be.

Two of the leading daily newspapers have also been urging me to enter the race, and want to begin booming me as a probable candidate.

What is your opinion of the matter?

Do you think it advisable for me to permit them to use my name?

I feel confident that Wm. Rodenberg, our present Representative in Congress, will be a candidate for reelection. I realize it will take a large sum of money to put up the right kind of a fight and do not know that much money could be raised here.

I would not consent for the use of my name unless there was the proper assurance of sufficient funds to carry on a stampede campaign.

I feel more than confident that I could carry St. Clair and Madison Counties, and, with sufficient backing, could get an even break in Bond County, and a little better than an even break in the remaining counties.

Kindly drop me a line and express your opinion on the subject.

With best wishes, I remain,

Respectfully, yours,

CHAS. A. WHITE.

And the answer, dated September 23, 1909, is as follows:

SEPTEMBER 23, 1909.

Hon. CHAS. A. WHITE,
O'Fallon, Ill.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 19th instant received and contents noted. I really do not know how to advise you in reference to your candidacy for Congress. I realize you would make a strong run, and the district is not overwhelmingly Republican. In reference to finances, will say the State committee has no funds whatever to give to any candidates, the treasury being completely exhausted, and I know of no place outside of your district where funds could be secured.

Wishing you all the success in the world, I remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

ROGER C. SULLIVAN.

(Record 4386–4387.)

About Thanksgiving time, 1909, he told Miss Woods that he had been to Chicago several times; to watch the Chicago papers, for he was going to make enough out of the Lorimer bunch to live comfortably, and that when he got the trouble started he was going on a trip to Europe and to let them fight it out. (7008.)

About centennial week, in St. Louis, 1909, White told Miss Woods, "I have got it in for Lorimer, Senator Lorimer and his bunch, and they will have to come across or I will make them pay dearly for it. I have spent $5,000 this session having a good time and looking up the dope on them. I have a friend in Chicago who will back me up and furnish me all the money I want." (7008, 7009.)

The last conversation between Miss Woods and White on these matters was on April 20, 1910, when he told her to watch the newspapers; that it would come out in the newspapers in about two weeks.

Meantime, soon after his Thanksgiving talk with Miss Woods, having failed to secure from Mr. Sullivan any promise of "a large sum of money" and having also failed in his efforts with the publishing companies, on December 4, 1909, Mr. White, pursuant to the plan and purpose indicated, addressed to Senator Lorimer the following letter:

O'FALLON, ILL., December 4, 1909.

Hon. WILLIAM H. LORIMER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am preparing to place before the people of this country an article I have written giving my true experiences as a member of the Illinois Legislature. The article will appear either in book form or will be published in one of the largest magazines in the United States.

I have just completed the manuscript, which contains about 30,000 words, giving in detail my absolutely true experiences as a member of the forty-sixth assembly. As yet I have not closed a deal with any publishing house, but when my terms a e acceptable will dispose of it.

I have been offered a sum sufficient to value the manuscript at about $2.50 per word.

Believing that you would be more deeply interested in the works and actions of the members of the last session of the Illinois Legislatiure, owing to the fact that possibly your experience with that general assembly will be one of the questions freely discussed, and assuring you that I have severed all connections with the party leaders, as well as am to be independent in the future in all my political dealings, I am,

Respectfully, yours,

CHAS. A. WHITE.

Senator Lorimer replied as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
December 13, 1909.

Hon. CHARLES A. WHITE,
O'Fallon, Ill.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of December 4, in which you advise me that you have manuscript ready to place with the publishers, treating on your experience as a member of the Illinois Legislature. I would be very glad, indeed, to note your success as an author.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours, very truly,

WM. LORIMER.

(2556–2557.)

White testified before the committee that he had then received no offer for the manuscript, but that he hoped to receive a reply from Mr. Lorimer that would be of advantage, adding, "I had no evidence against Senator Lorimer directly and had no dealings with him," and before the first investigating committee he testified that if Senator Lorimer had met his demand and paid him $75,000, he would have surrendered the manuscript to him. (Burrows, record, 164.)

Late in February, Doubleday, Page & Co. returned the manuscript to White, with the statement that it would take at least six months to investigate the story, and they did not have men whom they could spare to do that work. Thereafter White was looking for a purchaser for his story, and was eventually brought into contact with James Keeley, editor and general manager of the Chicago Tribune, which paper had for 20 years or more been opposed to Mr. Lorimer politically, its policy being, as stated by Mr. Keeley, to drive William Lorimer out of politics in Chicago and Illinois because they thought he was a malign influence.

The committee does not undertake to determine the merits of the controversy between the Tribune and Mr. Lorimer, concerning which there is much testimony, but finds the fact that Mr. Keeley, the present manager of the Tribune, was so intent upon carrying out the policy of his paper that he was glad to secure at large expense any information which would enable him to accomplish that result.

In this connection it should be stated that State's Attorney Wayman, to whose examination the manuscript had been submitted, testified that he called Mr. Keeley's attention to the fact that it would be a very expensive proposition to investigate, and Mr. Keeley replied that the Tribune would be willing to pay the expenses of such investigation. (5743, 5809.)

After several conferences between Mr. Keeley and Mr. White, in which White first demanded $50,000 for the manuscript, the jack-pot story was finally purchased by the Tribune in consideration of the payment to White of $3,500, and his agreement "to devote my time and services to substantiate the story referred to as and when requested by you so to do and in such manner as you may direct."

The complete contract appears hereafter in this report. The story was published in the Chicago Tribune on April 30, 1910. Immediately following its publication White was called as a witness before Cook County grand jury.

The evidence shows that in the prosecutions which followed, and which were based upon White's story, the county of Cook expended the sum of $18,952.43 (record, 5913) and the Tribune co. in and about the same purpose expended about $20,000. (Record, 2033.)

Circumstances under which White testified.

It was upon White's testimony that Lee O'Neil Browne was indicted on the charge of having bribed him to vote for Mr. Lorimer; it was upon White's testimony that the State relied at both trials of Lee O'Neil Browne upon such charge, and of which charge Mr. Browne was acquitted and discharged. White also testified before the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate, in the months of September and October, 1910, as well as before this committee.

In considering the value of the testimony so given by White on all these different occasions the fact should not be overlooked that he was in charge of an officer detailed by the State's attorney of Cook County, in whose custody he remained day and night durin the entire period extending from April 29, 1910, when the con ract for the sale of the jack-pot story between the Tribune and White was signed, dow to December 23, 1910—a period of eight months—with all of his living and traveling expenses paid by Cook County, and he was not discharged from custody until two days after the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections had been made to the United States Senate, although the last trial of Lee O'Neil Browne ended on September 9, 1910, and the hearings of the subcommittee in Chicago ended October 8, 1910.

The methods adopted to hold White to his obligation and the expense thereby incurred and paid by Cook County are found in the following affidavit:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Cook, ss:

"Walter Kossack, being duly sworn, on oath deposes and says that he is bookkeeper and cashier in the office of the State's attorney of Cook County, and held s ch position during all of the year 1910; that he has made an investigation of the accounts on file in the office of the State's attorney of Cook County to determine the total expense of the maintenance of one Charles A. White, a witness in the case of People v. Browne and others, and that he finds the fact to be that the witness, Charles A. White was, on May 5, 1910, placed in charge of James Kerr, a police officer of the city of Chicago, assigned to duty in the State's attorney's office, and remained in charge of such officer until August 16, 1910; and that on August 16, 1910, Officer Kerr was relieved of that duty, and the witness, White, placed in charge of Officer Oakey, and remained in charge of Officer Oakey until September 26, 1910, when Officer Oakey was relieved of that duty, and the witness, White, placed in charge of Officer Hepp until December 23, 1910, when he was relieved; and upon December 23, 1910, until January 16, 1911, the witness, White, remained at the Lexington Hotel not in charge of any officer, but at the expense of Cook County.

"Affiant further states that the total expense thus incurred was twenty-five hundred thirty-one dollars and fifty-two cents ($2,531.52); and

"Affiant further states that this amount covers the expense and keep of both White and the officer during the period above named, and that the rooms alone at the Lexington Hotel, exclusive of board, cost ten hundred sixty-eight dollars and seventeen cents ($1,068.17), and that the officer while in charge of White paid for he meals both of White and himself, and also this amount covers railroad fare and expense while the officer and White were out of the State.

"And further affiant says not.

"WALTER KOSSACK.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of November, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] "BERT E. BETTS,

"Notary Public."

(Record, 6120.)

Mr. White's testimony was first given before the grand jury of Cook County within a week after he had entered into and become bound by a contract with the Tribune Co., which reads as follows:

"THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, OFFICE OF PUBLISHER,
"Chicago, Ill., April 29, 1910.

"TO CHARLES A. WHITE:

"You offered to sell to us for publication a story written by you, which story gives your experience while a member of the House of Representatives of Illinois during 1909–10, and giving also certain information as to what transpired by reason of your voting for certain measures, etc., while a member of such house.

"We refused to pay you for that story or to print the same unless such story was verified and corroborated by persons selected by the Tribune.

"For more than four weeks we, with your cooperation, through different agencies have caused your story to be fully investigated.

"For the sole and exclusive right hereby granted by you to the Tribune Co. to publish this story, or a revision thereof, or excerpts therefrom, in the Chicago Tribune and copyright it either in your name or in that of the Tribune Co., but in which shall be at our election, and also in full compensation for the time already spent by you in assisting us in obtaining corroborative evidence of the facts contained in this story and in full payment for all your time which shall be devoted by you to further substantiate this story at any time, which time you hereby agree to devote to that purpose as and when called upon so to do, the Tribune Co. hereby agrees to pay you $3,250, of which said sum $1,250 shall be paid upon the printing of the said story or the first installment thereof, $1,000 30 days after said first payment, and $1,000 60 days thereafter.

You reserve to yourself all book or other rights to the story other than the exclusive newspaper rights hereinbefore referred to, which belong under the terms hereof to the Tribune Co.

J. KEELEY, Vice President Tribune Co.

CHICAGO, ILL., April —, 1910.

To the Chicago Tribune and the Tribune Co.

GENTLEMEN: I have read the above and foregoing and agree to the terms thereof and to accept the sums of money as therein set forth, and I further agree to devote my time and services to substantiate the story referred to as and when requested by you so to do and in such manner as you may direct.

CHARLES A. WHITE.

At the time the Tribune Co. contemplated the purchase of White's jack-pot story they were advised by Mr. Wayman, the State's attorney, that White, being an accomplice, would discount his evidence 50 per cent; the Tribune buying the story would discount it 30 per cent more, so that White would be a 20 per cent witness. (Wayman, 5809.)

The estimate thus placed upon the story by Mr. Wayman was undoubtedly a fair one from his viewpoint at that time, but in the light of all of the circumstances which have since developed, the committee is of the opinion that the story is a pure fabrication so far as it relates to the election of Senator Lorimer.

As he makes his case, it is this: He never heard the name of William Lorimer mentioned in connection with the Senatorship prior to the night of May 24, 1909, two days before his election. By four witnesses this is disproved, and his own conduct corroborates these witnesses. (Lorimer, 7646; O'Neill, 6648–6654, 6655, 6656; Shaw, 6283, 6818, 6819, 6820; Browne, 4918.)

To Mr. Browne's inquiry whether he could vote for a Republican, White answered without hesitation that he would vote for Mr. Lorimer; he did this before he knew who among his Democratic friends would do the same; that it was not until after he had promised to vote for him, and assured Mr. Browne that he could be relied upon, that he had the curiosity to inquire regarding other of Browne's followers in the legislature. There was not the slightest need for Mr. Browne to mention "chicken feed" to him or to hold out any inducement. That such is the case is apparent from the face of the story.

From the foregoing history of its inception, its development, and the uses to which it was put, Mr. White's story is so thoroughly discredited that it could have no weight in any court of law. The acquittal of Lee O'Neil Browne by an impartial jury is an evidence of this fact. It is a significant fact that when White testified at the first trial of Lee O'Neil Browne, which occurred in June, 1910, and resulted in a disagreement of the jury, no attempt was made to corroborate his story of the interview which he claims to have had with Lee O'Neil Browne on the night of May 24, 1909, by the production, as witnesses, of Otis V. and Sidney C. Yarbrough, who, it is now contended, were present when Browne visited White's room. They first made their appearance at the second Browne trial, which occurred in Chicago late in August, 1910, and which resulted in his acquittal. It is also a significant fact that the Yarbroughs were not produced as witnesses before the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, which convened in Chicago in less than two weeks after the acquittal of Lee O'Neil Browne, before which committee Mr. Austrian, counsel for the Tribune, conducted the prosecution, and who submitted to that committee the names of witnesses to be called.

Both Sidney C. and Otis V. Yarbrough were brought before this committee, and both testified that they spent the night of May 24, 1909, in the room of Charles A. White in the St. Nicholas Hotel in Springfield and were there when Lee O'Neil Browne entered that room and invited White to go to his room, where the alleged interview with Browne was held. The production of these witnesses, it seems to the committee, destroys the story of White. They attempt to corroborate White's statement of what occurred in his room on that occasion, while the evidence conclusively establishes the fact that Sidney Yarbrough was not in the city of Springfield at that time.

Both the Yarbroughs testify that they went to Springfield from East St. Louis on Monday, May 24, 1909, Sidney being positive that he went up on White's pass on the Illinois Traction (5086–5092), and Otis claiming that he probably went that day and met Sidney in the lobby of the St. Nicholas Hotel that evening about 9 or 10 o'clock. (5081–5083, 5515–5517, 5170–5175, 5214–5250.)

On the other hand, Lee O'Neil Browne not only denies having any such interview with White, but the testimony conclusively establishes the fact that Sidney Yarbrough was in Chicago that night and that neither of them could have been from East St. Louis that day. It is shown conclusively that White and the two Yarbroughs were in Chicago from the Saturday, May 22, and that they spent Sunday and Monday in that city in dissipation, and, according to their own admissions, a portion of the time in a house of ill fame. (Otis Yarbrough, 5195–5202.) It is clear that Otis Yarbrough and White did not leave Chicago until Monday night, May 24 (Gloss, 6444–6491, 6567), and the train was so late that they did not reach Springfield until 11.41, instead of on schedule time, which was 11.15; and it is shown that White did not register and was not assigned to a room until after midnight.

White intended to vote for Lorimer.

It is clear that White intended to join the great throng of Democrats who intended to vote for Mr. Lorimer, for the reason that a Democratic Senator could not be elected, and they were unalterably opposed to the reelection of Senator Hopkins. This is made clear by the first expression given by White after the election explaining the reason for his vote in the following letter, which was written before he conceived the idea of extorting money by blackmail:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., May 29, 1909.

Hon. FRED J. KERN, Belleville, Ill.

MY DEAR MR. KERN: I received the copy of your paper, the News-Democrat, and read with great interest your editorial relative to the position of the Democratic members of the legislature taken in settling the longest drawn-out senatorial contest ever experienced in the history of the State of Illinois.

It gives me pleasure to know that there are men in public life prominent in the Democratic Party who can look upon a situation of this character with as broad and liberal views as you have expressed yourself through the editorial of your valuable paper. The Republican Party of this State is, as has been demonstrated in this present session of the legislature, divided in such a manner that it was practically impossible, beyond any reasonable doubt, for them to settle this long and expensive drawn-out contest; and, feeling that the State of Illinois should be represented in the United States Senate during these critical moments by a man from this State, I felt it a public duty, after careful conference with older and more experienced workers in the Democratic ranks, to cast my vote for the Hon. William Lorimer for United States Senator.

This contest has been carried on now for five months, and I voted upon each ballot for a Democratic candidate, and realizing that the State has been put to an expense of many thousands of dollars through the disruption in the Republican ranks, I believed that it was a charitable act, in the interest of the taxpayers and the whole people of the State of Illinois, for the Democratic Party here in the house and senate to step in and settle their unsolved and uncompromising difficulties, and relieve the State of the suspension and anxiety connected with torture and extravagance which they have carried on here for these long-drawn-out months.

I again wish to express my sincere thanks to you and your editorial staff for the kind sentiment you have expressed publicly in defense of the Democratic Party's action here. True, I expect condemnation from both Democrats and Republicans for my action here in voting for a Republican; but, however that may be, I presume that no man in public life is exempt from criticism at some time or other, and knowing that I was here, where the situation was constantly before me, and that it was my duty to take step in the interest of the people, I did the best my judgment would permit me to do under the prevailing circumstances. You may state, if you desire, the substance of my communication to you through your press, that there may be no misunderstanding as to the motive of not only myself, but of the 53 loyal Democrats that voted for a Republican for United States Senator. With best wishes, I remain,

Your friend,

CHAS. A. WHITE.

(Record, 2475.)

For more than a week prior to the election of Mr. Lorimer and before his alleged interview with Browne it had been the intention of White to vote for him if an opportunity to do so occurred.

Mr. Lorimer testified—

"About 10 days before I was elected—8 or 10 days—I met him in the house of representatives, and he volunteered that he was going to vote for me. He said he understood that I was going to be a candidate, and if I was he would vote for me." (7646.)

Mr. Lorimer stated in that connection that 95 per cent of the street car men in Chicago always voted for him, because of the fact that he had been one of them, and he received the impression that White was going to vote for him (7646) for the same reason.

John O'Neill, business agent of the Firemen's Association of Chicago, who represented the Chicago Federation of Labor before the forty-sixth general assembly in 1909 and who became acquainted with White during that time, testified (6648–6654) that in conversation with White about a week before the election, he expressed the wish that they might break the deadlock because all their legislation was tied up by it. White said he thought it would not last much longer, and inquired "Who do you think will be the man?" To which Mr. O'Neill replied:

"I do not know, but if you ask me, Charlie, as a Democrat, I will tell you what I think: If I was a Democrat and a member of the house, knowing Mr. Lorimer as I do, and from what I hear of Senator Hopkins, I certainly would not hesitate in voting for Lorimer if there is not any possible chance of electing a Democrat." (6655.)

White then asked him if he knew Mr. Lorimer very well, and he replied, "I have known him pretty nearly all my life." White said:

"A great many of the boys seem to think the same of him, and I would not be surprised if a great many of them will vote for him—meaning the Democratic members." (O'Neill, 6655–6656.)

Homer A. Shaw, Democrat, and a banker, who was chairman of an organization of Democrats who were endeavoring to hold their forces in sufficient numbers to make impossible the election of Mr. Lorimer (6283), testified that three or four days before, or possibly a week before, the election of Mr. Lorimer, Mr. White made to him the assertion "that he would vote for Bill Lorimer if he got a chance" (6818), and Mr. Shaw says "I told him that I thought it would be a very unwise thing for him to do; that he was a new man in his district and was undoubtedly well thought of there at the time; and that knowing, as I did, the character of the people in his district, I thought it would be a very unwise thing for him to do. He made the remark, in substance, that he did not give a damn what the people thought about it; he was going to do it anyway. I think I told him, to the best of my recollection, that if he did do this and went back to O'Fallon, his best friends would not have anything to do with him—would not speak to him." (6819.)

Mr. Shaw took this position not because of any personal opposition to Mr. Lorimer, but because he considered it bad policy; "just simply a matter of party politics." He "thought it was a very bad idea for any Democrat to vote for a Republican for Senator." (6818–6819.)

Further testifying, Mr. Shaw says that on the first or second day of the first extra session of the forty-sixth assembly (which was in the autumn of 1909) he had a talk with White in his seat in the Illinois House of Representatives, at which time White "grunted" at him in response to his greeting, and after finishing his mail Mr. Shaw turned and said:

"What is the matter with you, Charlie?" "Oh," he said, "I am sore at myself and sore at the world and sore at everybody in general." I said, "What has gone wrong with you?" He said, "Well, about everything that you told me would happen to me if I voted for Lorimer has happened to me, and a great many more." I said, "Why, what else has happened to you?" He said, "My best friends walk across the street to keep from speaking to me." (6820.)

Lee O'Neil Browne testified that the only conversation worthy of the name relative to the matter of candidacy of Mr. Lorimer which he had with Mr. White occurred in the lobby of the St. Nicholas Hotel, something in the neighborhood of a week before the election, and in this connection Mr. Browne says:

"I do not just now recollect how the conversation came up, whether I asked him if he could vote for Senator Lorimer or whether he first broached the subject; but in any event he said to me that he felt very kindly toward Senator Lorimer, felt favorable to his candidacy, and that he was going to vote for him and had told Mr. Lorimer that he was going to do so—had already told him so himself. I do not think he told me where he had told him that. He further said to me, 'Lorimer is a good friend of organized labor, or the labor men tell me so, and for that reason I feel very kindly toward him. I understand that he has been a street-car man and came up from a street-car man, and,' he said, 'I am one, too, and for these reasons I am going to vote for Senator Lorimer.' * * * And because he had made up his mind to vote for Senator Lorimer I am inclined to think that he was the one who broached the subject to me instead of me broaching it to him." (Browne, 4918.)

From a most exhaustive examination and painstaking consideration of all the testimony in the case, the committee finds that White was one of the 53 Democrats in the Legislature of Illinois who for good and valid reasons felt justified in voting for Mr. Lorimer in order to break the deadlock which had existed in that body for so many months, and that White's attempt to enrich himself at the expense of his own reputation was the result of an afterthought and of a purpose which he conceived at a time when he had reached the lowest depths of degredation.

Daniel W. Holstlaw.

The case of Daniel W. Holstlaw, member of the State Senate of Illinois, stands alone and is independent of all others. He is a landowner, country banker, and cattle jobber, and was worth from $100,000 to $200,000.

Senator Holstlaw was elected as a Democrat and during the long senatorial contest which continued month after month, he consistently supported the Democratic nominee for United States Senator, Mr. Stringer. It appears, however, that like most of the members of the legislature, he became exceedingly weary, and about four weeks prior to the election of Mr. Lorimer he discussed with a considerable number of his friends in his district the probability of ending the struggle, and the manner in which this might possibly be accomplished. The project of selecting some Republican other than Senator Hopkins, whom the Democrats could support was one of the plans proposed. Among these friends was Mr. J. B. Lewis, editor of the Democrat, a newspaper published in his district, who evidently favored the plan last outlined, because the evidence is that he requested Senator Holstlaw to support Mr. Lorimer for the Senatorship if the time came when he could, and Senator Holstlaw assured him that he would do so. Senator Holstlaw stated to several of his friends that if a Democrat could not be elected he intended to vote for some Republican rather than remain in Springfield very much longer, and added that if such an opportunity came he would favor Mr. Lorimer. (Record, 3017.) Among those with whom he had similar conversations were Mr. J. J. Bell, Democrat, and Mr. John Eddings, Republican. (3017.)

The committee is fully convinced that Senator Holstlaw intended for a considerable time before the deadlock ended to support Mr. Lorimer, if the opportunity should offer. From the testimony of Senator Holstlaw it appears that for some days before May 26, 1909, the Democrats in the legislature were generally willing to adopt that course; that he found from inquiry that there were more who felt that way than he had supposed; that they were worn out by the long strain, and (in view of the fact that the salary of members of the general assembly is fixed by law at $2,000 for the entire term) the burden of remaining so long in Springfield at their own expense was felt, so that, all things considered, they deemed it good policy on the part of the Democrats to elect Mr. Lorimer rather than to continue the deadlock, and they were not sure they could prevent the election of a Republican who might be less acceptable to them. Senator Holstlaw, in common with the other Democrats, cast his vote for Mr. Lorimer on the last ballot. No question of his honesty in so doing would ever have arisen had it not been for the fact that during the same session of the legislature he had become a member of a commission to select and purchase furniture—chairs and desks—for the senate and house (3051), and during the investigations made by the State's attorney of Sangamon County soon after the publication of White's jackpot story a letter had fallen into his hands which had been written by Senator Holstlaw to Mr. Knox, a representative of a furniture company, arranging a meeting between them regarding this furniture deal. Senator Holstlaw was summoned before the grand jury of Sangamon County. (3037–3038, 3079, 5568.) The evidence discloses the fact, which Senator Holstlaw freely admits (3049–3057), that he entered into a corrupt agreement with the representative of a furniture company by which he was to receive $1,500 in consideration of favoring the bid made by the company so represented.

When Senator Holstlaw appeared before the grand jury of Sangamon County he swore that he had not written such a letter to Mr. Knox, and upon this testimony he was once indicted for perjury, and placed under arrest within two hours after he left the grand-jury room. (3038.) He was much alarmed by his arrest, and immediately asked the deputy sheriff who had him in custody to convey his request to the State's attorney to be permitted to go again before the grand jury and correct the mistake he had made, but he testifies that he received word in reply that he would not be allowed to do so unless he "would tell all about the Lorimer deal," because the State's attorney felt that he knew something about it. (3038.) This message from the State's attorney caused him still greater agitation, but suggested a way of escaping from his troubles. By the advice of the officer in whose custody he was he at once retained the firm of Gillespie & Fitzgerald, attorneys at Springfield, as counsel, who arranged for his bail by the deposit of his personal check for $5,000, and for a professional consultation the next morning. (3039.) During the night that followed Senator Holstlaw was deeply distressed, and it appears from his testimony that his thoughts centered around the problem of how best to free himself from his difficulties. His sin in connection with the furniture deal had found him out, and as it now appears, he was also conscious that after the adjournment in June, 1909, of the legislature he had received from Senator John Broderick, of Chicago, the sum of $3,200 for the payment of which he had never given any reasonable or legitimate explanation.

The consideration for such payment to him by Broderick does not directly appear in the evidence and can only be surmised. Whatever it may have been, Senator Holstlaw saw in the fact of having received the money an opportunity to take advantage of the intimation of the State's attorney and save himself. The result was that on the following morning he informed his counsel, so he testifies, that he wanted to make a clean breast of the matter and secure immunity from further prosecution of himself. (3043.) The predominant thought in his mind was to secure immunity. He testified to this over and over again, and he was willing to do anything to secure it. After consultation with his counsel (3043) they prepared a statement setting forth in the form of questions and answers the story of his infamy, from which it appears he was to receive $1,500 as soon as the furniture was delivered. Among other things contained in that statement was the following:

"Q. You are a Democrat, are you not?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you vote for Lorimer for United States Senator?—A. I did.

"Q. Before the voting came off was anything said to you about paying you anything for voting for Lorimer?—A. There was.

"Q. Who talked to you on that subject, and what was said?—A. Senator Broderick, of Chicago. He said to me: 'Mr. Lorimer is going to be elected to-morrow'—that is, as well as I remember the date, and he said: 'There is $2,500 for you if you want to vote that way'; and the next morning I voted for him.

"Q. Did you tell Mr. Broderick that you would vote for Mr. Lorimer?—A. I do not know whether I did or not, but I think I did." (Record, 3046.)

In his testimony before this committee, as well as before the other senatorial committee, and upon the trial of John Broderick, Senator Holstlaw completely reverses the foregoing statement, and says that before Mr. Broderick made the remark, "There is $2,500 for you if you want to vote that way," he had told Senator Broderick that he was going to vote for Mr. Lorimer, and throughout his testimony he insists that such is the fact; that it had been his determination for days and weeks before the election, if an opportunity to vote for Mr. Lorimer presented itself, to do so, and that he would have voted for him under any circumstances and conditions, so strong was his desire to do so. (3047.) And he further testifies that he was not influenced by what Senator Broderick said, because he intended to vote for Mr. Lorimer anyway. (3019.)

John Broderick was afterwards indicted for having bribed Holstlaw to vote for Mr. Lorimer, tried in Sangamon County, and acquitted of the charge. In that trial Mr. Holstlaw testified as he did before this committee, as follows (referring to Senator Broderick):

"He was standing out in front of the St. Nick, and I happened to step out, and we were talking, and he said 'Senator Lorimer will be elected to-morrow.' I said, 'I think so, and I am going to vote for him.' He said, 'You are?' I said, 'Yes, sir.' He said, 'If you want to vote that way, there is $2,500 for you.'

"Mr. MARBLE. What did you say?

"Mr. HOLSTLAW. I did not say a word." (3018.)

And he testified that no further conversation followed.

Senator Broderick stoutly denies that any such conversation ever took place between them, and while the committee is satisfied that Broderick did pay Holstlaw $2,500 at one time and $700 at another time in the summer of 1909, there is nothing whatever in the evidence connecting these payments with Senator Holstlaw's support of Mr. Lorimer for the Senatorship. The evidence shows conclusively that Senator Holstlaw's only reason for linking Mr. Lorimer's name with that transaction was to satisfy the State's attorney of Sangamon County, and through him to secure an order of immunity from the court, in which he was successful. He testifies that his attorneys told him he would have to sign that statement to satisfy the State's attorney, and that without it the latter would not grant him immunity or dismiss the indictment pending against him. (3081.) He further testifies that after this consultation, and before the statement was prepared, his attorneys conferred with the State's attorney, and brought him word that if he wanted to go ahead and tell the whole story to do so and he would get immunity. (3047.)

It was under these circumstances that the statement was prepared and presented to the State's attorney, and Holstlaw also testifies (3048) that Mr. Fitzgerald went with him to the office of the State's attorney, turned over to the latter the statement, whereupon Mr. Burke asked him to go with him before the judge and have the immunity order entered, and that was done, and he was discharged and never again heard about the indictment. (3048.) Mr. Fitzgerald corroborates this. (4705–4732.)

The committee is satisfied that Broderick never suggested to Holstlaw that there would be $2,500 for him upon his statement that he was going to vote for Lorimer, and that he never received it, was promised, or expected to receive a dollar for such vote. (3086–3087.)

Senator Holstlaw testifies that he would not have voted for any Republican other than Lorimer for anything on earth. (3087.)

The circumstances connected with the election of Senator Holstlaw to the State senate may throw some light upon the probable source of the money he received from Senator Broderick. As before stated, Senator Holstlaw is a man who professes to stand for good things, and in regard to the liquor problems which have challenged public attention in Illinois, poses as a "dry"—an advocate of the temperance cause. The district which he represented in the State senate was composed of four counties, two "wets" and two "drys." Efforts were made to ascertain the approximate amount of his campaign expenses, but he evaded giving this information. While admitting that it was a considerable amount, he would not swear it was not $5,000 (5550–5552), but intimated that it might have been in the neighborhood of $3,000 (5551), which sum would, in the opinion of the committee, look like an enormous price to him to be paid for an election, upon which he was to have a return of $2,000 in salary. In Marion, his home county, and in Clay, both "dry" counties, he ran far behind, and was defeated by over 5,000 majority; but in Effingham and Clinton, both "wet" counties, he received a majority large enough to overcome the loss sustained in the other two counties, and to elect him to the general assembly, Clinton being the county in which he made his greatest gains. (550–555.)

Although a Democrat and a candidate of the Democratic Party, he received the enthusiastic support of G. N. Welch, a Republican, and a saloon keeper in Clinton County, as well as that of his numerous friends. (5557.) All the circumstances lead to the conclusion that Senator Holstlaw was elected to the Illinois Senate by the so-called "wets" of his district, a most suggestive fact, when considered in connection with the other fact that the $3,200 was paid to him by John Broderick, likewise a Democrat, and a saloon keeper of 17 or 18 years' standing in Chicago. (3903–3904.) This is particularly significant in view of the fact that Senator Holstlaw, grasping as he is in financial matters, could not or would not make any definite statement to this committee concerning the expenses incurred by him in his campaign, nor did he see fit to give any reason why Senator Broderick should pay him $3,200. In his confusion and desperation he set up the claim that he regarded it as a gift, but did not know why it was made, and did not care to know (2110); that he had no curiosity to know (3111); that he did not tell his family, and after studying about it, felt a delicacy about saying anything concerning it; that it did not impress him as improper at the time (3114), but finally admitted it "might be a little improper." (3114–3117.)

From a consideration of all the circumstances, the committee is satisfied that Holstlaw was the candidate of the liquor interests in his senatorial district and was elected by them; that he was subjected to large campaign expenses, and money being dearer to him than his reputation and feel convinced that he would not be likely to incur such expenses unless assured that he would be reimbursed. It is conceded that liquor legislation has been one of the prominent and continuing elements in the Illinois General Assembly, and John Broderick, being a saloon keeper in the city of Chicago, was naturally a representative of the liquor interests, and money passing from him to Holstlaw is a feature of the case so suggestive, in the absence of any other consideration for its payment, as to raise a strong presumption at least that its payment had some connection with the election of Mr. Holstlaw to the Senate of Illinois.

Everything connected with the evidence given by Senator Holstlaw indicates that his love of money is a consuming passion; that it dominates his judgment, deadens his conscience, and destroys his regard for truth.

Testimony of Coan before Helm committee.

In the debate on the reopening of this case in the Senate particular reference was made to the testimony of M. B. Coan, employed as an investigator by the Helm committee, given before that committee, in which he named certain persons who were supposed to be possessed of valuable information bearing upon the question at issue, in view of which the committee summoned such persons as witnesses without securing any evidence of the character indicated by Mr. Coan in his testimony. (Record, O'Brien, 688–700–705; Jones, 705–720; Culver, 721–742; McLean, 742–747; McLeod, 748–755.)

Political conditions in Illinois and the influences which led to the election of Senator Lorimer.

In the Senate and throughout the United States there has been an unprecedented interest in the circumstances connected with the election of Mr. Lorimer to the United States Senate. The evidence taken before this committee sheds light on many of these circumstances, removing some misapprehension heretofore prevailing and establishing certain facts heretofore unknown and demonstrating that Mr. Lorimer's election was the natural outcome of the political conditions then existing in Illinois, and that it was brought about without resorting to corrupt practices either on his part or the part of his friends.

All the evidence tends to show that the personal popularity of Mr. Lorimer had given him a remarkable following throughout the State, and particularly in Chicago. On the other hand, he was the object of the most bitter opposition from certain newspapers and certain influential persons.

When political conditions so developed in the Forty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Illinois that the different factions of the Republican membership of that body could not unite in the election of any other person as Senator from that State, his election followed as a natural consequence.

A glance at the political situation in Illinois during the four years preceding Mr. Lorimer's election to the Senate helps to disclose the conditions existing at the time of his election. For many years prior to 1904, as well as since, most of the Chicago newspapers, led by the Chicago Tribune, had persistently opposed Mr. Lorimer politically. The relation between Mr. Lorimer and Gov. Deneen prior to that year was that of warm personal and political friendship. (Deneen, 1221; Lorimer, 7441.)

In 1904 Mr. Yates, then governor of Illinois, was a candidate for renomination before the Republican State convention. Mr. Deneen was a candidate for the same position before that convention. Mr. Lorimer, who had previously been his warm political friend, would not support him at this time for the reason, as he says, that he had received definite information that Mr. Deneen had gone over to the newspaper people (Lorimer, 7678), thus breaking the political affiliations before that time existing between them. In that convention Mr. Lorimer actively supported the candidacy of Mr. Lowden for governor. The convention was unexampled both in length and character. A deadlock developed early in its history which extended over a period of about 4 weeks, during which time a recess of 10 days was taken. Mr. Yates, while unable to secure the nomination for himself, held the balance of power and was able to direct the nomination of either of his principal opponents. In his testimony he says:

"My friends * * * had the power to nominate in that convention either Mr. Lowden or Gov. Deneen. We decided that we would support Gov. Deneen (227), and Charles S. Deneen was nominated in my stead and by my votes" (226).

While Gov. Yates says that no promises were made him before such action on his part, he asserts as a fact, which Gov. Deneen denies, that after he had told Gov. Deneen of his intention to support him for the governorship the latter assured Gov. Yates that he would support him for United States Senator in 1906. Whatever that fact may have been, Gov. Deneen failed to do so, and there arose upon the part of Gov. Yates and his friends a feeling of bitterness against Gov. Deneen which has continued ever since and which was specially manifest during the session of the legislature in 1909.

In the years following 1904 the Republican Party in Illinois was divided into two factions, Gov. Deneen being most prominent in one and Mr. Lorimer being most prominent in the other. Although Mr. Yates had for a time felt unkindly politically toward Mr. Lorimer because of his failure to give him his support for the governorship in 1904 and because he had supported Senator Cullom for reelection to the Senate of the United States in 1906, he entertained no lasting feeling against him, for the reason, as he testified, that Mr. Lorimer never deceived him "in word or deed at any turn of the road." On the other hand, the indignation of Gov. Yates toward Gov. Deneen because of his failure to support him for the United States Senatorship in 1906 knew no bounds, and his dislike for him personally and politically was extreme.

In 1908 Mr. Yates was again a candidate for governor against Mr. Deneen, and Mr. Lorimer was his strong and active supporter throughout the primary contest, which was bitter in character and waged with great vigor throughout the State. The contest was complicated by the candidacy of Mr. Hopkins for the United States Senatorship, and it is claimed by both Mr. Lorimer and Mr. Yates that Mr. Hopkins and his friends promised them that in this contest Mr. Yates would have his and their warm support in his fight for the governorship nomination; that, relying upon these assurances, they did everything in their power to secure the indorsement of the people for the candidacy of Mr. Hopkins.

As the result of this primary Mr. Deneen was nominated for governor and Mr. Hopkins received a plurality nomination for the Senatorship. In the meantime, however, the fact developed that Mr. Hopkins had been conducting his campaign without reference to the effect it might have upon the political fortunes of either Mr.

Yates or Mr. Deneen in their contest for the governorship. He states in his testimony that he had determined not to mix up in State politics, and that in making his canvass he did so with reference to his own election as Senator alone and without reference to the candidates on the State ticket. As a result of Senator Hopkins's failure to aid Gov. Yates in his campaign, the relations before that time existing between him on the one hand and Messrs. Lorimer and Yates on the other, became strained; they felt that he had failed to keep faith with them, and they lost interest in his election. Gov. Yates's feelings toward Senator Hopkins were undoubtedly bitter; Mr. Lorimer would have been glad to join with anybody to defeat his election by the legislature but did not think it could be done. He did not, however, conceal his unfriendliness toward Senator Hopkins, with whom he avoided an interview which the latter attempted to arrange through the telephone, and when Senator Hopkins sought him in Washington and inquired of him as to his attitude on the question of his (Hopkins's) candidacy before the legislature, Mr. Lorimer frankly told him that there was no use in discussing the matter.

Gov. Deneen's attitude of mind toward Mr. Hopkins is indicated by his statement to the committee, as follows:

"Senator Hopkins at that time, I think, was against me, opposed my nomination both times, and fought it with Federal patronage." (1134.)

On the other hand, Gov. Deneen, having been an advocate of direct primaries, felt compelled to nominally, at least, support Senator Hopkins before the legislature as the plurality candidate.

Organization of legislature.

When the legislature of 1909 convened the political conditions were both peculiar and complicated.

At the November election President Taft had carried the State of Illinois by a majority of 179,000, while Gov. Deneen had received only about 23,000 majority, and it was known that the Democratic candidate for governor, Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, would contest the election before the legislature. The Forty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Illinois met in Springfield January 6, 1909; both political parties as represented in that body were badly disorganized.

In view of the probable contest between him and Mr. Stevenson which was to come before the legislature, and his desire to carry out certain policies, Gov. Deneen was keenly alive to the necessity of having the legislative organization in the hands of his friends. Edward D. Shurtleff had twice been speaker of the Illinois House of Representatives, first in 1905 and again in 1907, on both occasions enjoying the friendship of Gov. Deneen, and when in 1908 Mr. Shurtleff announced his candidacy for membership in the house a third time, it was plain that he would, if elected, be again a candidate for the speakership. In the meantime, differences had arisen between him and Gov. Deneen regarding various matters of policy, and the latter had become unfriendly to his candidacy.

A majority of the Republicans in the senate were Gov. Deneen's political friends and were able to organize that body in a manner satisfactory to him. A majority of the Republican members of the house were also undoubtedly Gov. Deneen's friends; but among them were several who aspired to the speakership of that body, and the result of a party caucus, if called under such conditions, was feared by him and his friends. It was therefore agreed to hold a conference of the Republican members of the house who were favorable to Gov. Deneen for the purpose of uniting upon some one man for speaker before a caucus should be called. This conference was held on the evening of the Monday preceding the convening of the legislature on Wednesday, January 6, and to it were invited only those known to be Deneen adherents. The process of elimination was invoked, and one after another of those who had aspired to the speakership dropped from consideration until it was agreed to support Mr. King for that position.

Then followed a call for a caucus of all the Republican members of the house to be held on the following evening; but learning that the Deneen Republicans had taken the action above mentioned, Mr. Shurtleff and his friends declined to enter that caucus, and the following day he was elected speaker, receiving 85 votes—25 Republican and 60 Democratic. The Democratic support, which secured his election, was accounted for by different factions in different ways. It was stated by practically all the Democrats appearing before the committee that it was because he had been fair and impartial in his rulings; that he had established a reputation for fair treatment of the minority in previous legislatures, thereby endearing himself to the Democrats, and that inasmuch as it was impossible to elect a Democrat to that position they much preferred Mr. Shurtleff to any other Republican for speaker. Many Democrats also, having in mind the contest which it was known Mr. Stevenson proposed to make of

Gov. Deneen's election, resented the efforts which it was understood the latter was making to control the organization of the house, and before the voting for speaker began it was understood that the Democrats would, almost as a body, vote for Mr. Shurtleff. (Donahue, 3307.) Gov. Deneen also attributed this action of the Democrats to the fact that the contest over the governorship would come before the legislature and they did not want him to control the organization; also that in the preceding legislature the Democrats had agreed to an investigation of his administration with reference to charitable institutions and that Speaker Shurtleff had made this possible by cooperating with them.

Gov. Deneen admits that there was a bitter feeling against Speaker Shurtleff on the part of his friends. That there was an equally strong feeling against him, Deneen, on the part of the Democratic membership of the house is unquestioned.

The prospective gubernatorial contest between Gov. Deneen and Mr. Stevenson was undoubtedly a strong factor in the organization of the house. While it was not intended, nor was it supposed it would in any way affect the election of Senator Hopkins by the legislature, it did in fact lead to his defeat after a deadlock extending over a period of more than four months. The friends of Gov. Deneen felt that Senator Hopkins's friends intended to join the movement to deprive him of the office of governor; not with the approval, however, of Senator Hopkins. For this reason several of Gov. Deneen's friends refused to vote for Senator Hopkins when the voting began, and his election was postponed until the settlement of the governor's contest. This was done with Gov. Deneen's consent and at his instance. As a result of this procrastination, which extended from January 19 to March 22, an opportunity presented itself for uniting all the various influences existing against Senator Hopkins, and as a result there was a common effort to secure his defeat.

Senator Hopkins had failed to carry Cook County in the primary election, as well as Kane, in which county he had his residence; he also failed in Sangamon and some other counties, and, as already stated, there existed in the Republican Party a considerable degree of unfriendliness toward him. His own legislative district had been carried against him and was represented in the house by a Democrat, George W. Alschuler, a resident of his home town, Aurora, who accepted the election for the express purpose of defeating Senator Hopkins; and he devoted all his energies during the entire session to that end. The feeling against Senator Hopkins was so general and so pronounced among the Democrats that Gov. Deneen, in his testimony, says:

"I think a number of Democrats would have voted for me before they would vote for Senator Hopkins."

Representative Shaw, a prominent Democrat, stated that Senator Hopkins was extremely unpopular with the Democrats. "He could not have been more so." Representative Donahue confirmed this, and gave as a reason that Senator Hopkins always assailed them; that in his speeches he "said everything mean that he could about the Democrats." Representative Alschuler testified that if the Democrats could voice their sentiment he would not get 100 votes in the Democratic Party; that he never had a kind word to speak of a Democrat; that he had vilified them; that he was vicious toward the Democratic Party at all times; and that there was ill will toward him in his community. Representative Copley, a Republican, the present Representative from the Aurora district in the National House, testified that Senator Hopkins was disliked by the Democrats; that he had been so offensive to them that he did not know a single Democrat who was not bitterly opposed to him, and, although a Republican himself, Col. Copley was opposed to him.

The testimony also shows much opposition to him among the Republicans. He was not personally popular and, though he had carried the primaries by a small plurality, there was a strong impression that he had not intended to abide the result if it had been against him.

Attention is called to these conditions to indicate the general sentiment of the legislature toward Senator Hopkins and to show how the long delay resulting from the gubernatorial contest operated to render his election impossible.

The evidence does not indicate that Mr. Lorimer had anything to do with the organization of the Illinois Legislature. As before stated, this body convened on the 6th day of January, 1909, at which time Mr. Lorimer was in Washington, and he had not visited Springfield at any time between the election in November, 1908, and the election of Mr. Shurtleff as speaker. On the 15th day of September previous he became ill and remained at his home until after the November election; immediately thereafter he went to the Pacific coast to recuperate, was again taken ill and obliged to submit to an operation while in Oregon. On November 28 or 29 he started East, accompanied for the greater part of the journey by his physician. Congress met December 7, 1908, and Mr. Lorimer was in Washington shortly after if not on the opening day, where he remained until the Christmas holidays, when he returned to his home in Chicago. During this recess Mr. Lorimer met in Chicago Messrs. Shurtleff and Shanahan, members elect of the Illinois Legislature, and a conference was had regarding the speakership. It was stated that Gov. Deneen had suggested Mr. Chiperfield, who was then a member of his military staff, in connection with the position, and that Mr. Chiperfield had been twice to Chicago to confer with Mr. Shurtleff in regard to his proposed candidacy. Although Mr. Chiperfield had not been one of his political friends, Mr. Lorimer expressed the opinion that in the interest of party harmony the selection of Mr. Chiperfield for the speakership was a proper course to pursue and that he would ask his friends to cooperate in securing his election; but as Gov. Deneen subsequently declined to support Mr. Chiperfield, nothing resulted from the conference.

That is all that Mr. Lorimer had to do with the organization of the Illinois House of Representatives, and with the exception of that interview the evidence does not show that he ever conferred with any member of the legislature regarding such organization. In his testimony, Mr. Lorimer states that he did not know that Mr. Shurtleff was a candidate until he had been elected to the office of speaker, and there is no evidence that he had anyone acting for or representing him in any way in the organization of the legislature.

Mr. Lorimer was again in Washington on January 4 or 5 and was present at the sessions of the House between that time and the 8th of January and did not reach Springfield until January 11 or 12, five or six days after Mr. Shurtleff was elected speaker.

No one connected with the legislature has suggested that Mr. Shurtleff's election as speaker was intended or expected to have any connection with Mr. Lorimer's election as Senator. He was not a candidate. But he and his friends expected that Senator Hopkins would be chosen by the Republican majority to that office to succeed himself, and he would undoubtedly have been so elected had it not been for Gov. Deneen's "postponement" of his election for a period of two months or more, as before stated.

The only definite suggestion to the contrary appears in the following:

In answer to a question by Mr. Kenyon as to whether Mr. Shurtleff's election was the first step in the election of Mr. Lorimer, Gov. Yates testified:

"I did not try to elect Speaker Shurtleff for the purpose of electing Mr. Lorimer as Senator."

And he further says:

"I was for Ed. Shurtleff. I wanted to see him speaker, and I did have the desire all the time, as I stated before, that it might come Mr. Lorimer's way; but when you asked me if that was the first step, the vital step, in a prearranged plan to which I was a party to bring about the election of Mr. Lorimer, that is incorrect."

Gov. Yates also testified that he did not know of any such arrangement and had nothing to do with it, and that the election of Mr. Lorimer was never mentioned in connection with the election of Speaker Shurtleff. The only ground upon which any such claim could be based so far as Gov. Yates is concerned is the testimony of Edward O. Phillips, a reporter for the Chicago Tribune, who testified that Gov. Yates had told him at the time of Mr. Shurtleff's election that this meant the election of Mr. Lorimer to the Senate. Mr. Phillips was at that time employed on the Record-Herald and was assisting in covering the legislature for that paper, and had written an article for the Record-Herald which appeared January 7, 1909, based on the statement of Gov. Yates, which on the day of Mr. Lorimer's election he showed to Gov. Yates and others in the speaker's room, and Gov. Yates said it was good information or something of that sort. Gov. Yates stated in his testimony before the committee that he had no recollection of making this statement, but thought he did say it if Mr. Phillips said he did; and while this would tend to lend color to the theory that the election of Mr. Shurtleff as speaker was a part of a prearranged plan, Gov. Yates's statement that there was no such arrangement, and that the election of Mr. Lorimer was never mentioned in connection with the election of Speaker Shurtleff, is supported by all the other testimony in the case.

Roger C. Sullivan, Democratic national committeeman for Illinois, stated to the committee that—

"They happened to elect the speaker by Democratic votes. There was not any material objection to it so far as the public is concerned, or anybody else. Then I think that some of these Republican leaders took advantage of that situation to go on and help to stop the election of Mr. Hopkins as Senator; and then after they had got that far and got that stopped to their satisfaction, the selfishness of mankind asserted itself and made them commence to look around and wonder if there was not some chance for themselves or somebody else, and then they started in and tried to elect a Senator. I think those three stages surely came about." (4379.)

Many prominent members of the legislature testified that the election of Speaker Shurtleff was no part of such a plan and was never mentioned by anyone. Speaker Shurtleff said: "I never heard it mentioned in any way whatever." (4561.)

Thomas Tippit, leader of one faction of the Democrats in the house, testified: "There was no thought of it." (4255.)

Representative De Wolf (Democrat) testified that he heard no intimation at the time the speaker was elected that the senatorial election was involved. (5399.)

Mr. Espy (Democrat) testified that the election of speaker had no sort of reference or relation to the senatorial election. (4328.)

Mr. Donahue (Democrat), testified:

"Mr. HEALY. Did you have any understanding of any sort with reference to the election of Mr. Shurtleff which in any way affected the Democratic membership of that body?

"Mr. DONAHUE. No. Mr. Shurtleff stood pretty well throughout the State as being a very fair speaker. He was very popular with the Democrats, and they thought he was the fairest speaker Illinois had had for many years. That was the general impression among the Democrats. It was discussed, and it was said that former speakers, be they Democrats or Republicans, would not recognize the minority at all in any legislation or in any way; but Mr. Shurtleff broke over that rule and gave every member a fair show to get measures through if he could. He did not recognize any politics in so far as general legislation was concerned. That was the feeling among the Democrats throughout the State. There was talk of a contest over the governorship, and the Democrats felt that if Shurtleff was speaker they would probably get a recount of the votes." (3302.)

It also appears that 17 members of the house who voted for Senator Hopkins also voted for the election of Mr. Shurtleff (7408). Senator Hopkins testified that personal friends of his and supporters who voted for him all the way through also voted for Mr. Shurtleff for speaker (314, Hopkins), though the majority of his supporters favored Deneen's candidate (314), and that he regarded the speakership as a controversy between Gov. Deneen and Mr. Shurtleff at the time; he thinks there was no general talk to that effect, and his friends did not suggest that the senatorship was involved, though he says, "as a matter of fact I discovered that it did involve the senatorship to quite a large extent, later" (315). In answer to a direct question by Senator Fletcher as to whether from knowledge he then had or since acquired he would say the election of speaker had any connection with or reference to the election of Senator, he testified:

"I could not say, Senator, whether that is so or not. I only can judge of results. I know the result was that it was very detrimental to my candidacy. Whether that was in the mind of Shurtleff and the men that supported him at the time he was elected, I do not know." (327.) (Hopkins, 372–373.)

Following the election of Mr. Shurtleff as speaker on the 12th day of January, 1909, a meeting of the Republican State central committee was held in Springfield. Roy O. West, its chairman, was a close political and personal friend of Gov. Deneen. The meeting was called to devise means to induce the Republican members of the house of representatives to support the governor in an effort to have the appointment of the house committees taken away from the speaker, but the committee refused to thus cooperate with the governor, and the feeling of Gov. Deneen toward Speaker Shurtleff became extreme.

Meetings between Gov. Deneen and Mr. Lorimer.

In an attempt to secure party harmony Mr. West then arranged a meeting between the governor and Mr. Lorimer for January 13. Gov. Deneen testified that he and Mr. Lorimer had not previously met for five or six years except on the street, and on this occasion they met about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, remained in conference at the executive office until about 9 o'clock in the evening, when they went to the mansion, there remaining together until about midnight. According to the testimony of Gov. Deneen, they discussed waterway legislation, an anticipated decision nullifying the primary law, their previous relations, political conditions generally, the senatorial situation, and the organization of the house. (Deneen, 1099, 1106.) Mr. Lorimer testified that they talked about the committee that would probably be appointed to investigate Gov. Deneen's election, and the organization of the house only to the extent of discussing that committee (7415–7416); that subsequently, at another interview (the latter part of January) (7412–7416), the governor positively stated that he should try to defeat Hopkins, and in that connection asked Mr. Lorimer to suggest to Speaker Shurtleff in the appointment of a committee to visit charitable institutions of the State he should select only Hopkins men, their duties as members of such committee would take them away from Springfield for a couple of weeks and tide over the period of voting on the senatorship (7415); Mr. Lorimer understood that the committee was so constituted, he having carried the governor's suggestion to the speaker, who called upon the governor the following day to discuss it (7415). This was the only time Mr. Lorimer ever discussed the organization of the house with the governor, and only the membership of this committee was discussed between them (7416).

Gov. Deneen complained to Mr. Lorimer of the harsh treatment by Senator Hopkins in not giving him support, and particularly of his lack of support from Senator Hopkins and his friends at the State committee meeting, over which he felt much chagrin. (Lorimer, 7400.)

Gov. Deneen and Mr. Lorimer had a second conference on January 18 (Lorimer, 7401–7402), following which Mr. Lorimer left Springfield. He was not there on the first two days of the balloting for the senatorship, when 15 Republican members of the house, friends of Gov. Deneen, failed to vote for Senator Hopkins on the first ballot taken in separate houses, and when 13 of the same element failed to vote for him on the first joint ballot, thus inaugurating the plan of Gov. Deneen and his friends to, as he testified, "postpone the election of Senator" until the gubernatorial contest was settled.

Mr. Lorimer returned to Springfield about January 27, 1909, and thereafter had number of conferences with Gov. Deneen, in which the governor said he would not not help in reelecting Senator Hopkins, and grew firmer in that determination as time progressed. By that time the opposition to Senator Hopkins was so strongly crystalized that his election had become improbable. It has already appeared in this report that Mr. Lorimer had energetically supported Senator Hopkins in the primary in 1908 and was indignant when he found that Senator Hopkins had not lent his assistance to Gov. Yates in his candidacy for the governorship, as it was claimed he had had promised to do. He afterwards told Senator Hopkins frankly that he would not support him before the legislature. He did not, however, formulate any plan to defeat Senator Hopkins, and in fact did not believe it possible to do so until after his conference with Gov. Deneen about the middle of January.

Men and measures discussed.

As these interviews between Gov. Deneen and Mr. Lorimer continued their relations became more cordial, and, according to Gov. Deneen, the old friendly feeling had been restored, and the opposition of both to Senator Hopkins's candidacy grew more firm.

They frequently conferred together as to the advisability of breaking the deadlock by bringing forward some person other than Senator Hopkins who could command a majority of the votes of the joint assembly. In February after they had discussed the possible candidacy of Gov. Deneen the latter suggested that they cooperate in putting the election of Senator over until after the 4th of March, when the seat would be vacant and the people insistent that it be filled, thereby creating a condition under which Gov. Deneen could accept the place. About March 15 Gov. Deneen suggested that it would be embarrassing for him to make arrangements to become a candidate for the Senate, and Mr. Lorimer suggested that he have his friend Roy O. West come to Springfield the following week and he (Lorimer) would discuss the plan with him (7417, Lorimer). This was done and plans made between Messrs. Lorimer and West to bring about the election of Gov. Deneen, it being agreed that his name would be presented to the legislature on March 24. On the evening of March 23, Mr. West informed Mr. Lorimer that the governor would not be a candidate.

When this statement was subsequently confirmed by Gov. Deneen personally, they began discussing whom they could support, and Mr. Lorimer suggested Speaker Shurtleff; the governor said he thought Mr. Lorimer ought to become the candidate, as he had insisted from their first interviews. This was considerably discussed between them, the governor strongly urging Mr. Lorimer to permit his name to be used instead of urging Mr. Shurtleff (Deneen, 1269). When Mr. Lorimer first suggested the candidacy of Mr. Shurtleff, the governor said he would let him know in about a week, and thereafter told him that he could not support Mr. Shurtleff because his newspaper and Chicago friends would not agree to it, and he could not afford to break with them on that account (Lorimer, 7422).

Mr. Lorimer then presented for the consideration of the governor the names of other men, among them Congressman Boutell, Lowden, McKinley, and Rodenberg, as well as A. C. Bartlett, and the possible candidacy of William J. Calhoun, whose name was suggested by Mr. Beale, trustee for the Joseph Medill estate and Chicago Tribune. At these conferences, although Mr. Lorimer expressed the opinion that Senator Hopkins could not be elected (Lorimer, 7425–7426), Gov. Deneen found reasons for refusing to support any of the persons named. Gov. Deneen testified that Mr. Lorimer, about March 20, again urged him strongly to become a candidate, and he urged Mr. Lorimer to become a candidate, saying that if he could elect Mr. Shurtleff he could elect himself; that he was a greater power than the latter. (Deneen, 1269). By that time it seemed to be understood by most people having knowledge of the situation that Senator Hopkins could not be elected, and representatives of the various men mentioned as possible candidates had appeared in Springfield to sound the sentiment of the general assembly. Mr. West had ambitions to be named for the senatorship, but Mr. Lorimer refused to support him (7423–7424), and the governor told Mr. Lorimer he was embarrassed by West's attitude. These general conditions continued for some considerable time; the situation was discussed in the newspapers and it seemed that no one among those mentioned was developing any strength; several State senators, some of whom were friendly to both Mr. Lorimer and Gov. Deneen, importuned Gov. Deneen to enter the race. And after the situation had been generally discussed for some time in the public press and otherwise, Mr. Lorimer again took up with the governor the question of his becoming a candidate, strongly urged him to enter the field, and assured him that he and his friends would support him. Gov. Deneen testified that the "Senator urged me very strongly to take it," stating that it was a position where "I must expect criticism," but that it was the only opportunity "I would ever have to go to the Senate, because if I did not the party would be organized on other theories and it would be impossible to overcome the difficulties." (1113–1114, Deneen.) Senator Curtis had presented the matter to Gov. Deneen and discussed it with him several times, urging as a reason the harmony which his candidacy would bring to the party, and that it would quiet the disturbances which had existed there for years. Mr. Lorimer also assured him that he would receive all but 15 of the Republican votes in the general assembly and most of the Democrats.

Gov. Deneen's reluctance to enter the contest was based in part on the fact that he had been responsible for the primary law, and notwithstanding the feeling he entertained regarding the attitude of Senator Hopkins toward some of his wishes he would not allow himself to be made the means of breaking down the law itself.

It appears from the testimony of Hon. Frederick Lundin, former member of the Illinois State Senate, and also of Congress, that he had frequent conferences with Gov. Deneen regarding the senatorial situation; that as late as the first week in May in a conference between them the governor thought it would be a good plan and good politics to make the deadlock secure and not elect a Senator at that time (6634); that the object of the conference at that time was to get four or five Hopkins supporters to agree with others to vote for some one else; that the resaon Gov. Deneen wanted this done was that he did not really know whether he wanted the Senatorship or not; that he would like it, but was not just sure that he dared take it; that while he wanted it, he supposed that the newspapers—the Record-Herald, Tribune, and Daily News—would not let him take it. (6638–6639.)

Mr. Lundin testified that during these conferences Gov. Deneen said that the men with whom he had worked in past years had not done right by him; that if Senator Lorimer's friends and his friends should work together, there would be no question but that they would be the controlling element in the Republican Party in the State; that he thought that Senator Lorimer could afford better than any other man to take the senatorship; that it would injure him less, and, in fact, he said it might be a good solution of the deadlock to have Mr. Lorimer elected by Democratic votes.

History of Mr. Lorimer's candidacy.

There seemed to be no doubt in the mind of Gov. Deneen that Mr. Lorimer was strong enough in the Illinois Legislature to be elected Senator at any time, but Mr. Lorimer declined to become a candidate because the importance of establishing the great waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf was more to him than a seat in the United States Senate, and he felt he could render greater service to that great undertaking in the House than in the Senate. Mr. Shurtleff testified that it was for this reason that Mr. Lorimer refused until late in the session to become a candidate.

The conferences which were held between the governor and Mr. Lorimer attracted much attention and became the subject of comment in the public press, particularly for the reason that for years they had been regarded as political foes.

About this time in the session Col. John R. Thompson, Col. Chauncey Dewey, and Col. Copley, all members of the governor's staff and his warm personal and political friends, men who were influential leaders in the Republican Party, became active in their efforts to induce Mr. Lorimer to become a candidate for the Senate. As the deadlock continued and it became apparent that Mr. Lorimer was probably the only person upon whom the different factions could unite, he finally determined to become a candidate.

In addition to those last mentioned he had the support of Gov. Yates and Speaker Shurtleff, who had been urging him very strongly to accept Democratic votes and accept the election (4581). Many other prominent Republicans were anxious to support him, and he also developed strength among the Democratic members, but it was not until two or three weeks before the election, which occurred May 26, 1909, that Mr. Lorimer's candidacy began to be seriously considered, and he thinks it was about the 10th or 12th of May when he determined to ascertain whether he could be elected. (Lorimer, 7584.) This substantially accords with the testimony of Gov. Deneen (1136–1137); Mr. Stringer, Democratic nominee for Senator (2276); Lee O'Neil Browne, Democratic minority leader of the house (4886); and Senator Hopkins (307), and his candidacy was first mentioned in the Chicago Tribune May 11, 1909. From that time forward Mr. Lorimer was willing to become a candidate, and be voted for in the legislature, provided he could be assured that he would be elected; otherwise he would not permit his name to be presented; prominent men and leaders in both parties then became active and worked together for his election.

When Mr. Lorimer went to his home in Chicago about a week prior to May 26 he was satisfied that he could be elected, and believed until Friday of that week that Gov. Deneen was giving him his loyal support. Meantime, while in Chicago, he heard it rumored that the governor was opposing him, and on Sunday night, upon reaching Springfield, this was confirmed, and conferring with some of his friends, among them Cols. Thompson and Dewey, Gov. Deneen's friends, he learned that the governor was trying to have the election put over (7432–7437). From that time he devoted himself to ascertaining whether he could be elected despite the governor's opposition, and on the morning of the 26th of May made public the fact of his candidacy and willingness to have his name presented to the joint assembly. And on that day, and on the ninety-fifth ballot, he was declared elected as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois.

Bipartisan combinations.

In relation to combination and bipartisan operations, which generally prevail in Illinois elections, the committee is impressed that the provision of the constitution of Illinois whereby minority representation is secured, which was prompted by a sense of justice and fairness and intended to promote the general good, in practical execution has the effect, more or less marked, of producing the very bipartisan combination and cooperation so much complained of. It is unjust to attribute any alleged unsatisfactory working out of a constitutional principle to any one man. The constitution provides:

"The house of representatives shall consist of three times the number of members of the senate, and the term of office shall be two years. Three representatives shall be elected in each senatorial district at the general election in the year of our Lord 1872, and every two years thereafter. In all elections of representatives aforesaid each qualified voter may cast as many votes for one candidate as there are representatives to be elected or may distribute the same or equal parts thereof among the candidates as he shall see fit, and the candidates highest in votes shall be declared elected." (R., (4536–4537.)

Representative Copley testified:

"We have a different constitution in this State. We have a minority representation, and you can get almost any sort of a fellow in the legislature from certain districts." (R., 4532.)

He elaborates this further by saying:

"Of course the constitutional provision allows a certain type of man to get into the legislature in larger numbers than would be the case if we did not have that minority provision." (R. 4534.)

It seems a voter can cumulate—he can cast one and a half votes for each of two candidates, one for each of three or three votes for one candidate (R.. 4534), and in consequence of this constitutional provision, in effect since 1870, at appears, as Mr. Copley says:

"And so in that way to elect three Republicans they must have more than two-thirds and divide equally. If they do not divide equally, one man can come in and get 20 per cent of the vote. In practice, usually 20 per cent of the vote, or a little more than 20 per cent, will elect, because there are Socialist and Labor candidates and Prohibition candidates. Consequently it is a pretty hard thing to keep them out of the legislature from these congested districts in Chicago." (4534.)

To attack Mr. Lorimer's election because of the bipartisan character of his support would be to attack the election of other members of this body, the regularity of which has never been brought in question.

Election logical result of conditions.

Taken altogether, the testimony indicates that Mr. Lorimer's election was the result of political conditions and not attributable to the corrupt use of money. The Democratic support which he received was the outcome of many different circumstances and conditions. During the two years prior to the election he had spoken in every part of the State, advocating the adoption of a constitutional amendment which enabled the people to appropriate $20,000,000 toward the construction of a deep waterway from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico, for the establishment of which he had labored during his entire service in Congress. He had come into contact with theleading men of all parties and had been instrumental in creating a public sentiment sufficiently strong to accomplish that great result. In this work he had cooperated with a considerable number of the prominent Democrats of the State, and in some cases had established intimate personal relations with them. So strong was this element among the forces resulting in his election that it was mentioned in an article appearing in the Chicago Tribune on the morning following his election, as follows:

"The explanation generally made is that Lorimer is the exponent of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway proposition, and that is the reason he received such a large number of Democratic votes."

All the evidence in the case tends to show a remarkable ability on the part of Mr. Lorimer to make friends among the membership of both political parties and attach them to his interests.

Homer Shaw, member of the house, a Democrat, a banker, and a man of high character, testifies that there was an organization of Democrats in the legislature who would not vote for Lorimer, of which he was the chairman; that they endeavored to hold Democrats in sufficient numbers to make impossible the election of Mr. Lorimer by Democratic votes; but that after two or three days of effort they found it impossible to do so. This organization was in existence for about a week before the election and was active in its efforts to increase its membership. Mr. Shaw testified that he talked with a great many Democrats who would not join the association, who gave various reasons for refusing to do so; he discovered that there were a large number of Chicago Democrats extremely friendly to Mr. Lorimer, so friendly that the members of the organization made no headway in talking party politics to them; that such Democrats seemed to have a personal friendship for Mr. Lorimer, which was controlling. Mr. Shaw further testifies that he knew from the start that Mr. Lorimer was the most formidable Republican who could be named, and that if any Republican could be elected by Democratic votes in the State of Illinois, it was William Lorimer.

The evidence clearly establishes a situation relative to the election under consideration which had no dependence whatever on corruption of any kind. What we mean is expressed in the testimony of a number of responsible witnesses heretofore mentioned and indicated further by Mr. Isley and Mr. Tippitt. There was no Republican in the State who stood as high with the Democrats as Mr. Lorimer, according to State Senator A. E. Isley, an attorney and a Democrat of Newton, Ill. (5527.)

Mr. Thomas Tippitt, for six terms a member of the Illinois General Assembly, and leader of one of the Democratic factions in the forty-sixth, composed of 26 Democrats, testified:

"My understanding is that three-fourths, probably, of the Democratic State central committee favored the election of Mr. Lorimer to the United States Senate. I think that is true." (4265.)

For weeks during the deadlock he was making earnest efforts to secure harmony in the Republican Party; he journeyed to Springfield almost every week because of his intense interest in the deep waterway, his purpose being to prevent the use and expenditure of the $20,000,000 appropriated by the State until an appropriation from the National Government could be secured for the same purpose, in order that the work might be successfully accomplished without loss or waste.

The policy advocated by Gov. Deneen was the expenditure of the $20,000,000, under conditions not necessary to be here discussed, without waiting for action on the part of the Government of the United States. The conflict in regard to these two propositions challenged the attention of the entire State, and the importance of its determination was such and Mr. Lorimer's interest in it was such that he traveled back and forth between Washington and Springfield for the sole purpose of aiding in the defeat of the one and the adoption of the other plan. During these visits to Springfield, as already appears in this report, conference after conference was held between him and Gov. Deneen after a political estrangement of six years, in an attempt to harmonize party politics. Nothing appears more clearly than the fact that one of the chief desires of Mr. Lorimer was that Gov. Deneen should be elected United States Senator, and it was not until the latter positively declined, for reasons clearly appearing in this record, to become a candidate, and until the deadlock had extended over a period of practically four months, and not until three members of Gov. Deneen's military staff, personal and political friends of his, had urged and importuned him to permit his name to be used in connection with the Senatorship, and Gov. Deneen likewise personally had urged him, that Mr. Lorimer seriously considered the proposition.

Mr. Lorimer told many of his intimate friends that he did not want to go to the Senate, that he did not want to leave the House, and he cared so little about going to the Senate that he refused to allow his name to be used until after Gov. Deneen finally refused to be a candidate and there seemed to be no hope of uniting the different elements in the legislature on anyone else; he would not even then consent to have his name used if there was to be an extended controversy, and to ascertain whether such would be the case or whether he could be elected without such a controversy, his friends in both parties made the canvass which resulted in his election. With positive assurances that he could be elected that day, Mr. Lorimer testified before this committee that on the morning of his election, if Gov. Deneen would have taken the Senatorship, he would have supported him and not permitted his own name to go before the legislature, and this, after all Gov. Deneen had promised and failed to do, because he believed it would have been in the interest of harmony in the Republican Party in Illinois. (Lorimer, 7594–7595, 7738.)

The testimony taken together indicates that the election of Mr. Lorimer was the natural result of existing conditions and was willingly joined in by a large element in both parties.

The committee has presented in detail the various instances in which it has been claimed that money was corruptly paid to individuals to influence the election of Mr. Lorimer to the United States Senate, with the circumstances surrounding each, and in such a manner as to advise the Senate concerning all its salient features.

The committee patiently listened to a large number of witnesses, with equal patience have studied the testimony, and have carefully and, they think, judicially considered the same; it finds no evidence that in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois corrupt methods or practices were employed, and it is a fact that ought not to be overlooked or go unnoticed that nowhere in the entire mass of testimony is there any evidence showing that Mr. Lorimer, by word or by act, ever said or did anything in connection with his election by the Legislature of Illinois which can be justly criticized.

Personal character.

One thing stands out most conspicuously, this whole record considered, and that is that throughout the long deadlock and all the pressure, temptations, opportunities, strain, and excitement incident to the election of a Senator, notwithstanding the persistent effort made to fasten something of the kind on Mr. Lorimer, not one word was said or one thing done which in anywise reflected on him.

Not an indiscreet remark, not a suspicious suggestion, not an improper action or an impropriety on his part, in Springfield or elsewhere, during that contest has been testified to by a single witness. The fact is, the personal integrity, the habits, and life of Mr. Lorimer appear wholly exemplary and his personal character above reproach. His most relentless political enemies concede that. The Tribune, the morning after his election, editorially spoke of his "many merits" and "ability" (p. 1880).

Mr. Kohlsaat said (p. 429):

"From all I know, as I said before, his home life, his family life, is ideal. He has a beautiful family of children, which he has raised splendidly."

Mr. Lawrence B. Stringer, the Democratic candidate for governor in 1904 and the Democratic primary nominee for United States Senator in 1908, testified that he had often heard it said "that when Senator Lorimer made a promise you could rely upon it," and that he had never heard Mr. Lorimer's honesty and integrity as a man questioned, but, on the contrary, had "heard it spoken of very highly," and that is the general opinion among people who know him and has been for a great many years. (2327.) Other men of prominence in Illinois were charged with political treachery and bad faith. Mr. Lorimer is singularly free from such criticism.

Mr. Lorimer was first elected to Congress in 1894 from a normally Democratic district, and reelected six times. In eight campaigns he was defeated only once. Since he resigned from the House the district has returned to its Democratic allegiance.

In view of the suggestion as to the contribution of a fund to secure his election to the Senate, it is significant of his methods that in 1908 when a check was sent to him by Senator Hopkins, through Mr. Fred M. Blount, to be used in defraying his congressional campaign expenses, Senator Lorimer returned it with the following letter:

"CHICAGO, November 2, 1908.

"Hon. FRED M. BLOUNT,
"630–206 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

"MY DEAR FRIEND: I received your communication, with check inclosed for $500. I wish to express my thanks to both you and Senator Hopkins for your great kindness.

"I have paid the total expense of my campaigns, both primary and election, without accepting a contribution from any person, although a great many have been tendered. I therefore feel that I can not accept yours.

"Assuring you that I appreciate the spirit in which it was sent, I am,

"Yours, very truly."

(Rec., 7393.)

The record shows that this letter was signed and forwarded by Mr. Lorimer.

Conclusion.

The record in this case is so long that we have felt it our duty to the Senate to present at unusual length our conclusions upon it, and this is the reason for the length of the report and the delay in presenting it.

We have sought to do justice by the people, by the Senate, and by Mr. Lorimer. The people are entitled to have the election of their representatives honestly conducted; the Senate is entitled to have its honor and integrity maintained by the election of its Members without corruption; and Mr. Lorimer is entitled to have the right to his seat determined in accordance with the law and the evidence. The Senate has once solemnly and deliberately passed upon the charges made against him. Its judgment, after a full investigation and extensive argument, was in his favor, and should stand unless new and convincing evidence is produced establishing corruption in his election. This rule is more liberal toward the Senate and the people than toward Mr. Lorimer, because if the judgment had been against him he would have been bound by it, and no amount of proof showing the injustice of the decision against him would secure its reversal and his reinstatement as a member of this body.

Absolutely no new and substantial evidence has been produced or discovered on this reinvestigation showing that he was elected by corruption, and we believe that all the rules of law, judicial procedure, and justice require that the former judgment of the Senate should be held to be conclusive and final.

If the Senate should hold, however, that its former judgment can be reconsidered and vacated, we submit for its consideration our conclusions on the charges made and the testimony adduced.

It is charged that Senator Lorimer was elected corruptly. This is the issue. Is this charge true or is it false? If true he should be denied a seat in this body; if not true we should so declare. The issue is to be determined by evidence and not by prejudice or popular opinion based on biased, imperfect, and distorted reports and suggestions. We have heard the evidence under oath; we have seen the witnesses as they testified; they have been fully cross-examined; their evidence has been carefully weighed; every suggestion of possible proof has been followed; and nothing has been left undone to ascertain the truth of the charges against Mr. Lorimer.

No personal guilt.

There is absolutely no evidence in all the testimony submitted intimating, suggesting, or charging that William Lorimer was personally guilty of any corrupt practices in securing his election, or that he had any knowledge of any such corrupt practices, or that he authorized anyone to employ corrupt practices in his election.

No corruption in his election.

We are convinced that no vote was secured for him by bribery; that whatever money White, Beckemeyer, Link, Holstlaw, or any other person received was not paid to him or them by anyone on Mr. Lorimer's behalf or in consideration of or to secure such vote or votes for him; that neither Edward Hines nor anyone else raised or contributed to a fund to be used to secure his election; that his election was the logical result of existing political conditions in the State of Illinois, and was free from any corrupt practice, and therefore we must find, and we do find, that William Lorimer's election was not brought about or influenced by corrupt methods and practices.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 48, p. 6790.)

On the same day Mr. Lea, a member of the special committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed under resolution of the Senate to investigate whether in the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois there were used or employed corrupt methods and practices, asked and obtained leave to submit the following views of the minority (S. Rept. No. 769, pt. 2):

VIEWS OF A MINORITY.

The undersigned, members of the committee appointed by Senate resolution adopted on June 7, 1911, to investigate whether or not corrupt practices and methods were employed in the election of William Lorimer to the United States Senate by the Legislature of Illinois, submit the following views:

The committee commenced the taking of testimony on June 20, 1911, at Washington, and continued its session there until August 9, 1911. The committee resumed its hearings in Chicago on October 10, 1911, continuing the same until November 22, 1911. It then adjourned to meet in Washington on December 5, 1911, at which time it resumed its sessions, and, with the exception of the Christmas holidays, sat continuously until February 9, 1912, when the hearing was concluded.

At the conclusion of its hearings on February 9, 1912, the committee made an order allowing counsel for Senator Lorimer to file a brief by March 1, 1912, on the plea of res adjudicata, which plea was formally entered by counsel for Senator Lorimer on the last day of the hearing. Counsel for Senator Lorimer was also given until March 15, 1912, to file a brief upon the facts of the case. Both of these briefs have been filed in compliance with this order and are ready to be transmitted to the Senate, together with the transcript of the evidence taken and abstracts of the testimony prepared by the attorneys for the committee.

On March 27, 1912, the committee met for the purpose of voting upon a report, and the following action was taken:

After disposing of some matters of regular business, Senator Jones offered the following resolution:

"That nothing has developed in or by this investigation that justifies a reversal of the solemn and deliberate judgment of the United States Senate rendered during the last session of the Sixty-first Congress holding valid the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States."

Senator Kern offered the following resolution as a substitute:

"That in the opinion of the committee there were used and employed in the election of William Lorimer to the Senate of the United States corrupt methods and practices."

Senator Lea offered an amendment to be added to Senator Jones's resolution:

"But that said investigation by this committee shows that corrupt methods and practices were employed in the election of William Lorimer."

Senator Lea's amendment was lost by a vote of 5 to 3. Nays, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, Fletcher; yeas, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Lea made the following point of order:

"That the resolution offered by Senator Jones is not responsive to the resolution of the Senate appointing and instructing this committee in that the Senate only instructed this committee to investigate and report whether there were corrupt methods and practices used in the election of Senator Lorimer."

The chairman overruled this point of order. Senator Lea appealed from the decision of the chair, and Senator Jones moved to lay on the table the appeal of Senator Lea. This motion was carried by a vote of 4 to 3, as follows: Yeas, Senators Gamble, Jones, Johnston, Fletcher; nays, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Kern's substitute resolution was then lost by a vote of 5 to 3: Nays, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, Fletcher; yeas, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Jones's resolution was adopted by a vote of 5 yeas, 3 nays. Yeas, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, Fletcher; nays, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Jones then offered the following resolution:

"There is no proof of the existence of any 'jack pot' or any other fund during the Forty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Illinois in connection with the election of Senator Lorimer other than the statements of White, Beckemeyer, Link, and Holstlaw that they were paid money after the election, and none of them except White claimed to have received such money for voting for Senator Lorimer."

Senator Kern moved to amend as follows:

"Inserting after the word 'Holstlaw,' in line 5, the words 'and certain circumstances corroborating said statements.'"

This amendment was lost by a vote of 5 to 3, as follows: Nays, Senators Dillingham Gamble, Jones, Johnston, and Fletcher; yeas, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Fletcher offered the following amendment to Senator Jones's resolution, which was agreed to by Senator Jones:

"After the word 'claimed' insert the words 'nor does it appear otherwise.'"

And this resolution as amended was adopted by a vote of 5 to 3, as follows: Yeas, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, and Fletcher; nays, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Kern offered the following resolution:

"That in the opinion of this committee there was a fund distributed in the city of St. Louis to certain members of the Illinois Legislature who had voted for William Lorimer and also that Senator Broderick paid to Senator Holstlaw in the city of Chicago money on two occasions."

Senator Johnston offered to amend as follows:

"If any fund was distributed in Chicago or any other city, it was not to vote for Senator Lorimer."

After discussion Senator Lea offered the following resolution in lieu, which was accepted by Senator Kern:

"That in the opinion of this committee there was a fund distributed in the city of St. Louis on June 21, 1909, by Lee O'Neill Brown and on July 15, 1909, by Robert E. Wilson to certain members of the Illinois Legislature."

This resolution was adopted by a vote of 3 to 0, as follows: Yeas, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea; not voting, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, and Fletcher.

Senator Jones offered the following resolution:

"It is not proved that Edward Hines raised $100,000 or any other sum, or that he expended that or any other sum, or that he contributed any sum whatever to aid in or secure the election of William Lorimer to the United States Senate. The evidence is that he did not raise, contribute to, or expend said sum, or any sum of money whatsoever, to aid or assist improperly in the election of Senator Lorimer."

This resolution was adopted by a vote of 5 to 0: Yeas, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, Fletcher; not voting, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Gamble offered the following resolution:

"That in the opinion of this committee, this investigation does not show that there were used and employed in the election of William Lorimer to the Senate of the United States from the State of Illinois corrupt practices and methods."

This resolution was adopted by a vote of 5 to 3: Yeas, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, and Fletcher; nays, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Lea offered the following resolution:

"Be it resolved, That in the opinion of the committee this investigation has resulted in additional proof to that developed by the last investigation, that corrupt methods and practices were employed in the election of William Lorimer to the Senate of the United States which warrants a reversal of the former action of the Senate in declaring that the election of William Lorimer was valid, and that in the election of William Lorimer to the Senate of the United States corrupt methods and practices were employed, and that said election was invalid."

This resolution failed to pass by a vote of 5 to 3: Nays, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, and Fletcher; yeas, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

Senator Johnston offered the following resolution:

"That the testimony failed to show that Senator Lorimer himself used any corrupt practices or means, or had any knowledge if such were used."

This resolution was adopted by a vote of 5 to 0: Yeas, Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Johnston, and Fletcher; not voting, Senators Kenyon, Kern, and Lea.

The committee in making this investigation proceeded on the theory that its functions were similar to those of a grand jury and that it was vested with inquisitorial power. A great amount of evidence therefore was taken that is apparently not material and in the nature of hearsay. This was done in order that the committee might pursue to the end every possible channel of information and make the investigation as thorough as it was possible to make it. The work of the committee is evidenced by the fact that it has taken 8,588 pages of printed testimony in the examination of witnesses, and has been in session 18 weeks.

Without discussing in detail the evidence presented by the former committee investigating this same question, we believe that the evidence presented by this committee is broader and more far-reaching and establishes conclusively that at least 10 of the votes cast for William Lorimer on the 26th day of May, 1909, at the joint session of both houses of the General Assembly of Illinois, were corruptly cast, and the election of William Lorimer being obtained by corrupt methods and practices was therefore invalid.

An effort was made, as is shown by the report of the action of the committee on March 27, 1912, to rest the action of the committee in this case upon the plea of res adjudicata. We do not believe that such a plea is applicable or tenable in this case.

As we understand the procedure, the resolution relative to the second investigation of the election of Senator Lorimer was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report whether a new investigation was warranted, and that the committee in reporting the resolution ordering another investigation in fact reported that there was sufficient grounds for another investigation, and the Senate, in adopting this report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the resolution presented creating this committee, on June 7, 1911, ordered a new trial, and in ordering a new trial acted upon the question of res adjudicata—the plea of res adjudicata being such as can be made on the motion of the court or the tribunal acting as a court at any time—and that the committee appointed under the resolution adopted on June 7, 1912, should not, under the authority of its appointment, make any report upon the law involving the right of the Senate to reopen the case, but that said committee had only authority to make a report responsive to the resolution appointing and instructing the committee.

In election cases before the Senate a mistake is frequently made in drawing a comparison between such a trial and a criminal trial in court. Analogies are frequently misleading, and an analogy between the trial of an election case by the Senate and a criminal case is most misleading. The comparison, if drawn, should be between the trial of a Senate election case and a civil case before a court.

Subsection 1 of section 5 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides:

"Each House shall be the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own Members."

So that no precedents or decisions of courts or other legislative bodies can have any but argumentative weight in the determination of an election case in either House of Congress.

The Senate is not bound by any precedents, and the only ones that are of any value in the determination of such a question are those which have been made by the Senate in determining similar cases heretofore.

It is submitted that there is no precedent of the Senate of the United States holding that a contested election case may not be reopened, and at least there are dicta to the contrary. The leading case is that of Senators Fitch, Bright, Lane, and McCarthy, of Indiana, of the Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Congresses. (Election Cases, p. 244.) In that case, on June 12, 1858, a resolution that Fitch and Bright were entitled to their seats as Senators from Indiana was adopted.

Subsequently, in December, 1858, two other Senators were elected by the Legislature of Indiana, and a memorial was adopted by the senators and representatives in the Legislature of the State of Indiana representing that it was the wish and desire of the State that Lane and McCarthy be admitted to the seats in the Senate of the United States that were held by Fitch and Bright.

This memorial, like the resolution ordering a second investigation in the Lorimer case, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that committee, in an elaborate report, reviewed in detail the history of the case and the resolution which had been adopted in 1858 and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the Legislature of Indiana.

In that case it was not insisted that there was any new evidence or additional grounds which would warrant a reversal by the Senate of its former action, but the memorial amounted to an insistence that the Legislature of Indiana had the power to revise the decision of the Senate or, to state the same idea in terms of modern thought, that the State of Indiana had the power to recall its Senators.

Such seems to have been the idea of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that investigated the case, for it said:

"It may be conceded that the election (referring to the election of Lane and McCarthy) would have been valid and the claimants entitled to their seats had the Legislature of Indiana possessed the authority to revise the decision of the Senate of the United States; that Messrs. Fitch and Bright had been duly elected Senators from Indiana, the former until the 4th of March, 1861, and the latter until the 4th of March, 1863.

"In the opinion of the committee, however, no such authority existed in the Legislature of Indiana."

While the language of the report and of the resolution may go further, such is mere dicta; as nothing was decided by the adoption of the resolution offered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in accordance with its report, than that there being no vacancies in the Senate from the State of Indiana, the election of Lane and McCarthy was invalid.

If the Senate decided in this case what is insisted in the brief for Senator Lorimer that it did decide, then the decision has been overruled by subsequent cases in the Senate.

Another case in which it is insisted that the doctrine of res adjudicata was established is the case of Francis W. Sykes and George E. Spencer, decided by the Senate in the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses. (Election Cases, 556.)

In point of fact, the Senate decided nothing relative to the case being reopened, the facts being that on May 28, 1874, the Senate adopted a resolution seating George E. Spencer and discharging the committee from further consideration of the memorial of Francis W. Sykes. On January 24, 1876, the Legislature of Alabama presented to the Senate a memorial of the State, praying that the seat in the United States Senate of George E. Spencer might be declared vacant. This memorial was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which reported that the case should not be reopened, and no action on this report was taken by the Senate.

In the case of David T. Corbin v. M. C. Butler (Senate Election Cases, 582), the facts are that in February and March, 1877, the separate credentials of Mr. Corbin and Mr. Butler were presented to the Senate and both referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

On November 26, 1877, the Senate, by a resolution, discharged the Committee on Privileges and Elections from consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, and on November 30 Mr. Butler was sworn as a Senator from the State of South Carolina, in accordance with the motion which had been determined in the affirmative—yeas, 29; nays, 28.

There was a final action by the Senate that M. C. Butler was entitled to his seat. Notwithstanding, on February 4, 1879, Senator Cameron, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report, accompanied by a resolution, that David T. Corbin had been duly elected a Senator for a term of six years.

To the committee's hearing of Mr. Corbin's petition, Senator Butler objected on the ground that the decision of the Senate on November 30, 1877, authorizing him (Butler) to be sworn, was res adjudicata. The majority of the committee overruled the plea. A minority of the committee, consisting of Senators Mellen and Salisbury, took the view that the former action of the Senate constituted res adjudicata.

The resolution reported by the committee, declaring David T. Corbin duly elected, was determined in the negative—yeas, 25; nays, 36. But the principle was established that a contested-election case, though finally decided in the Senate, could be reopened and reconsidered.

Again, in the case of Hon. Henry A. du Pont, of Delaware (Senate Election Cases, pp. 818–874), the question of the right of Mr. du Pont to his seat in the United States Senate was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which subsequently reported in favor of Mr. du Pont and accompanied the report by a resolution that he was entitled to his seat.

The resolution was amended so that it read that Henry A. du Pont was not entitled to a seat in the Senate and, as amended, was agreed to.

Subsequently thereto, at another session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, a memorial was presented from Mr. du Pont, asking that the question of the validity of his election be again considered and acted upon. This memorial was likewise referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which was reported against a reopening of the case.

In discussing this report, Senator Hoar said:

"There has been an application on the part of Mr. du Pont—whom I respect personally, whom I eagerly desire should have a seat in this body, and who, I think, ought to have had one on the merits of his case—to reopen that case. No newly discovered evidence is suggested; no fraud or mistake is suggested. The reopening of the case would be merely a reconsideration of a question of constitutional law which this great constitutional court has decided once. That is all he asks, and that is all he would obtain if his prayer for a reopening of the case were granted."

Here we find inference from the statements of one of the ablest and most learned Senators who ever sat in this body—that if there has been newly discovered evidence or fraud or mistake, the Senate would have a right to reopen the case.

In the case of Spofford v. Kellogg, 557 to 589, Senate Contested Election Cases, the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported in favor of reopening the case formerly decided on the ground of newly discovered evidence, but this report was not acted upon by the Senate.

Summarizing these cases we find not a single one that has held that the Senate could not reopen a contested-election case on the ground of newly discovered evidence; but, on the contrary, we find statements in support of a report against reopening a case, from which the inference can be fairly and logically drawn that if there had been newly discovered evidence the case should have been reopened, and an unacted-upon report by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in favor of reopening on the ground of newly discovered evidence a contested-election case that had been finally decided.

In this case the usual procedure was followed; the memorial from the Senate of the State of Illinois and a resolution providing for a reopening of the case were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and in this case the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as it did in the case of Spofford and Kellogg, voted in favor of reopening the case; and in accordance with the report of the committee the Senate adopted the resolution taking this sound view, and the case was thereupon reopened for a full and complete reinvestigation of the facts. When the Senate had thus voted the time for the plea of res adjudicata had finally passed.

Had the majority members of the investigating committee—all of them being distinguished lawyers—believed that the plea of res adjudicata would prevent a reconsideration of this case upon its merits; had they believed that neither this committee nor the Senate could consider the results of their labors, obtained at such enormous public cost, no matter what new or important might have been developed thereby, it is inconceivable that they would have sanctioned the expenditure of money that has been involved in the reinvestigation of this case and proceeded without right or jurisdiction.

In considering the evidence presented in this case, it must be borne in mind that the crime of bribery is distinct from nearly every other crime, in that both parties to it have the same incentive and desire, springing from the instinct of self-preservation, to conceal the crime. In nearly every other crime the person wronged or injured is influenced by motives of revenge or desire for reparation or satisfaction to assist the State in securing the facts and punishing the offender. But in bribery both the bribe giver and the bribe taker are equally guilty and equally desirous of concealing the truth and cheating justice. In nearly every case of bribery proof thereof must rest solely upon circumstantial evidence.

But in this case there are confessions by four men that their votes were secured by bribery, and their confessions are corroborated by strong circumstantial evidence.

If bribery can not be proved in the Senate by confessions of the bribe takers, corroborated by strong circumstantial evidence, then the conclusion is irresistible that only express contracts of bribery, duly authenticated by witnesses, can establish that crime to the satisfaction of the Senate of the United States.

We are of the opinion that the evidence in this investigation shows conclusively that the following votes for William Lorimer were obtained by corrupt methods: Charles A. White, H. J. C. Beckemeyer, Michael Link, Joseph S. Clark, Henry A. Shepherd, Charles Luke, D. W. Holstlaw.

As the vote of the bribe giver is equally corrupt as that of the bribe taker, we include the following votes: Lee O'Neil Browne, Robert E. Wilson, John Broderick.

In view of the proof showing that the 10 votes of the members set out above were obtained by corruption, circumstantial and other evidence show that the following votes were also obtained by corrupt methods and practices: W. C. Blair, Thomas Tippitt, Henry L. Wheelan, John H. De Wolf, Cyril R. Jandus.

It is impossible to quote from such a voluminous record any considerable part of the evidence upon which the above statements are based; but discussing briefly in their order the evidence relating to each of the votes as set out above, we find the following to be the facts:

Charles A. White.

Charles A. White stated under oath that he was promised money by Lee O'Neil Browne, minority leader, to vote for William Lorimer on May 26, 1909, and that, pursuant to that promise, he was paid $1,000 by Lee O'Neil Browne, as follows: $100 cash before the legislature adjourned; $50 on the 16th of June, and $850 on the 17th of June; and that he was subsequently paid by Robert E. Wilson, as the agent and representative of Lee O'Neil Browne, $900 on July 15, 1909, at the Southern Hotel in St. Louis.

White's testimony is corroborated by the following facts:

(1) By the fact that White was in debt at the end of the legislative session and had drawn all of his salary several months before, and that, nevertheless, on June 18 or 19, after White met Browne in Chicago, White had a large amount of money which he deposited in a department store in St. Louis, which deposit was testified to at one of the hearings by Thos. P. Kirkpatrick, the cashier of the department store, and which testimony was made a part of this record.

(2) White testified that immediately after the adjournment of the legislature in June, 1909, he wrote asking Browne for the balance of his Lorimer money, and the correspondence thereafter with Lee O'Neil Browne shows that Lee O'Neil Browne knew that White was short of funds at the adjournment of the legislature in June, 1909, and White expected money from him (Browne), as is shown by the following letter of Lee O'Neil Browne to Charles A. White, in answer to the letter of White asking for his money.

OTTAWA, ILL., June 9, 1909.

HON. CHARLES A. WHITE, O'Fallon, Ill.

MY DEAR CHARLIE: I did not get home until the night of Monday, June 7, when I found your letter awaiting me. I wish you had spoken to me of the matters contained in your letter before we left Springfield. It would have been comparatively easy for me at that time to have advised with you personally and properly. It is far more difficult now, and I would hardly know what to say to you without seeing you personally. In any event, unless you would care to see me before that time by coming here or meeting me in Chicago, I expect to see you and have a visit with you some time within the next two weeks. I shall be only too glad to advise with you along the line of the matters referred to, and suggest anything that may be appropriate and proper. You know where I stand, old man, and that I will go my length for you. Should you find it necessary to see me before the end of the next two weeks, you had better arrange to come to Chicago and meet me there. However, as matters stand, and in the way that I am tied up with business matters now, I would prefer to put off the meeting for the length of time I have stated. I want you to feel and realize that I am as good a friend as you have in the world, and that I am not only willing but ready to do anything in my power for you at any time. My best regards to you.

Very sincerely, your friend,

LEE O'NEIL BROWNE.

And by another letter, under date of June 13, 1909, which is as follows:

OTTAWA, ILL., June 15, 1909.

FRIEND CHARLES: Your letter did not reach me till too late to do any good. I was in Chicago, but could not have remained longer had I got your letter. Got home here this evening and am due in court to-morrow a. m. But, Charlie, I will be in Chicago Tuesday or Wednesday sure. (This is under your hat, though, for I do not want to be bothered by every job hunter in Chicago.) If you can wait, I'll do my best to see you. I'll be at the Briggs when there.

In haste,

BROWNE.

And that in spite of the fact that Browne knew White needed money at that time, yet after he had had his interview with White in Chicago on June 16 and 17, he wrote, saying, among other things:

"Perhaps, however, you had better wait and save the money for the next campaign."

Showing thereby that Browne knew White had money at that time; and by the letter which Browne wrote to White on July 16, 1909, the day after Wilson paid White $900 more in St. Louis, according to White's testimony, in which Browne said, among other things:

"I did not dare to attempt the trip. I hope everything is all right with you and satisfactory and that you are happy and fairly propsperous."

(3) That White, with at least five other members of the legislature, met Wilson in St. Louis on July 15, 1909, in response to telegrams from Wilson, and that no satisfactory reason for this meeting was ever given, and that several of the members of the legislature meeting Wilson were shortly thereafter proved to have had a large amount of currency in their possession, chiefly in bills of large denominations.

(4) By the threats of White to blackmail Browne and Lorimer, which were made in August, 1909, to friends of Browne, and which were doubtless communicated to Browne, and by the thinly veiled threats of exposure by White in a letter to Browne of October 20, 1909, in which he stated, according to his testimony, he knew Lorimer and Browne were under no obligations to him, since he had received his part of the Lorimer and jack-pot money, and the fact that thereafter Browne and Senator Lorimer both tried to secure positions paying satisfactory salaries to White. For if White had had no knowledge that would be injurious to Lorimer or Browne, he could not have blackmailed them successfully, and there would have been no reason to obtain the position that was secured for him by Senator Lorimer, through Lee O'Neil Browne, after these threats, or no reason to try to placate White. On the contrary, innocent men would indignantly have refused to have anything else to do with such a blackmailer.

H. J. C. Beckemeyer.

Mr. Beckemeyer testified that he was paid $1,000 by Lee O'Neil Browne at St. Louis, at the Southern Hotel, on June 21, 1909, and that Mr. Browne, in paying him the $1,000, said: "This is the Lorimer money," and that there would be some more in the future, and that he was paid $900 additional in St. Louis at the same hotel on July 15, 1909, by Robert E. Wilson, Browne's agent, and that on both of these trips to St. Louis he met other members of the legislature, to wit, Henry A. Shepherd, Michael Link, Joseph S. Clark, Charles Luke, and, on the last trip, Charles A. White.

This confession is corroborated by the fact that Beckemeyer subsequent thereto, on the 7th day of August, 1909, deposited five $100 bills in the Commercial Trust Co. of St. Louis, and that he was identified at the trust company by a Mr. Gray, and which is corroborated by Mr. Gray.

Beckemeyer's testimony is further corroborated by the testimony of Shepherd, White, Link, and Clark, to the extent of establishing that they saw Beckemeyer in St. Louis on the days named, and by the testimony of Browne and Wilson admitting that they met Beckemeyer in St. Louis on the days named, and by the further fact that Beckemeyer attempted to deny, when he was first before the grand jury, that he had ever been to St. Louis; by his actions when the report became current that White was to make an exposure of the members of the legislature who voted for Lorimer, and by the letter which Wilson and Beckemeyer agreed at their conference in Springfield in April, 1910, relative to the White exposure, should be written so as to give an excuse for the trip to St. Louis when Wilson was there on July 15, 1909. The letter is as follows:

CHICAGO, June 26, 1909.

Hon. H. J. C. BECKEMEYER,
Carlisle, Ill.

FRIEND BECKEMEYER: Doc. Allison was speaking to me regarding getting up a banquet for Lee in his home town, Ottawa, and asked that I take matter up with some of the boys. I expect to go to St. Louis in the near future in connection with our submerged land committee, and will advise you in advance as to when I will be there, and I would like you to meet me.

With best wishes to you, I am,

Very truly, yours,

ROBERT E. WILSON.

The agreement for this letter to be written and antedated nearly a year, the telephone messages from Wilson to Beckemeyer to meet him in Springfield on April 21, 1910, the registering of Beckemeyer at the hotel in Springfield, where he went for that conference with Wilson, under the assumed name of J. Daugherty, marked both Beckemeyer and Wilson at that time as criminals who were fearing that their crime would be detected, who were preparing evidence to protect themselves, and who were afraid of everybody and everything; all of which corroborates Beckemeyer's story and, establishing its truth, proves the corruption of both Beckemeyer and Wilson. The long-distance telephone message from Wilson for Browne to Beckemeyer to keep his lips sealed as soon as Browne heard of White and Tierney's visit to Beckemeyer is another link in the chain of evidence corroborating Beckemeyer.

Michael Link.

Michael Link testified before the former investigating committee of the Senate, and his testimony by agreement was put in this record, that he received $1,000 from Browne at the Southern Hotel in St. Louis on June 21, 1909, and $900 from Robert E. Wilson, Browne's agent, at the Southern Hotel, in St. Louis, on July 15, 1909; that he had gone there on both occasions in response to a letter or telegram from Browne or Wilson. This testimony is corroborated by the testimony of other members of the legislature that they saw Link in St. Louis on the two occasions mentioned by him, and further by the fact that he originally denied, before the grand jury, even having gone to St. Louis, and stated that he had committed perjury because he did not desire to incriminate himself.

Joseph A. Clark.

If the confessions of White, Beckemeyer, and Link are true, and other corroborating evidence makes it impossible to deny their truthfulness, then Clark's vote was also corrupt, as he was one of the Democratic members of the legislature who voted for Lorimer, and who was summoned by Browne and Wilson to meet them in St. Louis on June 21 and July 15, 1909, respectively, and who did meet them there on those dates, with other members of the legislature who admitted receiving "Lorimer money," or Browne and Wilson would have to be regarded as summoning an innocent man to witness the consummation of the crime of bribery between Browne and Wilson, on the one hand, and White, Beckemeyer, and Link on the other.

The whole record makes it impossible to believe that Clark did not also receive the sum of $1,000 from Lee O'Neil Browne on June 21, 1909, at St. Louis, and on July 15, 1909, $900 from Robert E. Wilson, even in the face of the fact that Clark absolutely denied that he received any money from anyone at anytime.

The record shows that Link, Beckemeyer, White, and Luke all had large sums of money after their conference at St. Louis; and with confessions by Beckemeyer, White, and Link, corroborated by circumstantial evidence establishing this, it is impossible to take any other view of the case than that Clark also received similar sums of money upon his visit to St. Louis.

Henry A. Shephard.

Henry A. Shephard was a banker and a Democratic representative in the legislature of 1909. He lived at Jerseyville, Ill. Shephard claimed that Mr. Lorimer gave him a distinct promise that a certain man should not be appointed as postmaster at Jerseyville, and that this was the only consideration which moved him to vote for Lorimer.

The record, however, shows that Shephard went to St. Louis on June 21, 1909, and met Browne there with Link, Beckemeyer, Clark, and Luke; that he went to St. Louis again on July 15, 1909, and met Robert E. Wilson there, the above-named representative also being present in St. Louis on that day, as well as Charles A. White. Shephard was notified in advance both by Browne and Wilson to meet them there at those times.

Shephard's testimony is full of contradictions. At one of the former hearings he testified that he went to his bank box at the Mercantile Trust Co. in St. Louis before he saw Robert Wilson. This record discloses that Shephard went to the Southern Hotel and met Wilson and that after his interview with Wilson he went to his safety deposit box in the Mercantile Trust Co. This is borne out by the records of the Trust Co. in that they show the hour at which Shephard went into the vault, which is subsequent to the time he testified he had his interview with Wilson; nor did he deny at these hearings that his visit to the bank box was subsequent to his interview with Wilson. He attempts to explain both visits to St. Louis on the flimsy pretext of getting packing for his automobile. The fact of his being present on both of those occasions when others admitted that they received money, the visit to his bank box immediately after his interview with Wilson, coupled with the statement by Beckemeyer that Shephard was given one of the larger bills because he was a banker and could pass it more easily, with Shephard's contradictions upon the stand, with his communication with Browne and Wilson immediately before the exposure of White was made but after the visit of White and Tierney to Shephard, and with his registering in Chicago under an assumed name upon his trip there when he saw Browne and Wilson just before White's exposure was published, are sufficient to warrant the conclusion that he was one of those who received money for the purpose of voting for Senator Lorimer.

Charles Luke.

Charles Luke, a Democratic member of the general assembly of 1909 and a member of the Browne faction, went to St. Louis for the purpose of meeting Browne on June 21, 1909, and Wilson on July 15, 1909, in response to a telegram from Browne and Wilson. Luke died before any of the investigations in this case began, and his testimony is therefore not in any of the records; but his wife testified that about the time of his visit to St. Louis in July, 1909, he had $950 in large bills. These facts, coupled with the statements that he made to various people as to there being money in the senatorial election beginning with the time when he evidently expected to get money by causing a band of Democrats to vote for Hopkins, and the statements made to White as to a "jack pot" in the legislature, corroborated by the fact that other members of the legislature who were in St. Louis on these two occasions admitted receiving money, warrants the conclusion that Luke also was one of the receivers of "Lorimer money" as the result of casting his vote for Lorimer.

Luke, Clark, Link, Beckemeyer, Shephard, and White must all stand together as innocent men or fall together as guilty. Link, Beckemeyer, and White confess, and circumstances and their own actions establish the truth of their confession. While Clark and Shephard deny their guilt, their attempts to explain their presence in St. Louis in Browne and Wilson's room at the Southern Hotel upon the occasions when the confessed crimes of bribery were being committed; their attitude upon the witness stand; their efforts to conceal their movements and identity while they were going about conferring with Browne and Wilson after it had become known that White was going to make an exposure; their contradictions and other circumstantial evidence make them fall with Beckemeyer, Link, and White. Luke's record is the same as Clark's and Shephard's, except there is no testimony by him in any record.

D. W. Holstlaw.

D. W. Holstlaw testified that he was told by Senator Broderick before he voted for Senator Lorimer that there was $2,500 in it for him, and that, while he would have voted for Lorimer anyhow, subsequently thereto he was told by Broderick that he would be notified when he was to come to Chicago; and on June 15, 1910, he received a letter from Senator Broderick asking him to meet him in Chicago; that he wired Mr. Broderick that he would meet him there, and on the next day arrived in Chicago and went out to Broderick's saloon; that Broderick gave him $2,500 in currency, and that he took the money to the State Bank in Chicago, introduced himself to the president of the bank, who caused Newton, the chief clerk, to make out a deposit slip, in duplicate, placing this amount to the credit of the Holstlaw Bank in Iuka, Ill., the Chicago correspondent of which was the State Bank; that again, in August, 1909, he was notified by Broderick to come to Chicago, and that he went to Chicago and received $700 from Broderick, which he likewise deposited in the same manner at the State Bank in Chicago.

Holstlaw's testimony is corroborated by the testimony of the president, the chief clerk, and another official of the State Bank of Chicago, who testified that Mr. Holstlaw, on the dates mentioned in his testimony, deposited $2,500 and $700 in currency, respectively; and by an examination of the books by the committee's expert accountant.

This investigation has resulted in removing all doubts as to the correctness of Holstlaw's testimony and confessions, in that the misspelling of the Holstlaw name on the duplicate deposit slip, which was made much of in the last investigation, has been cleared up and shown to have been written by the chief clerk of the bank in Chicago instead of by Holstlaw.

The record also discloses the letters and correspondence between Broderick and Holstlaw asking Holstlaw to come to Chicago, which are of much value, inasmuch as Broderick denied that he ever sent for Holstlaw to come to Chicago to see him.

Lee O'Neil Browne.

Lee O'Neil Browne was the majority leader of the Democrats in the legislature of 1909. There is no dispute that Browne was in St. Louis on June 21, 1909, and his correspondence shows that he had intended going to St. Louis on July 15, 1909, for the purpose of meeting certain Democratic members of the legislature who voted for Senator Lorimer.

It can not be seriously questioned that Wilson and Browne upon the occasions of these two trips to St. Louis did distribute money to certain members of the legislature. This fact being admitted as a result of an investigation, it only remains to determine for what purpose this money was distributed. Three members of the legislature who met Browne and Wilson in Chicago and St. Louis testified that they received money, and two of them that it was "Lorimer money."

The visit to St. Louis, and the other one planned but not carried out, with the confessions of Beckemeyer, White, and Link, established that these three and others were bribed to vote for Lorimer, and that Browne was the man who bribed them and the man who paid them. There is no doubt also that Browne was one of the chief managers of Lorimer's campaign, and that, with Speaker Shurtleff and Senator Lorimer, the campaign was planned and carried to a successful conclusion. That Browne was in the business of buying votes to elect Lorimer is further evidenced by the fact that Browne unsuccessfully solicited Meyers, a Democratic member of the legislature—a man of high standing—to vote for Lorimer, and said to him: "There is some good State jobs to give away yet and plenty of the ready necessary."

Robert E. Wilson.

The same principle that applies to Browne applies with equal force to Robert E. Wilson. The two are linked absolutely together, and as the vote of the bribe giver is equally corrupt with that of the bribe taker, Wilson's vote stands as putrid as those of White, Beckemeyer, and Link, who confessed. As has been shown in the summary of the evidence of those members of the legislature who went to St. Louis, Robert E.

Wilson was the man who made the trip to that city on July 15, 1909, for the purpose of distributing money to certain members of the legislature who had voted for Lorimer.

The explanation that Wilson gave upon the stand as a reason for his trip to St. Louis is far-fetched and is of no force when considered with the statements of Beckemeyer that this excuse was made by Wilson after White's exposure was threatened, when Wilson was going about the State meeting the members of the legislature to whom he had given money; and that in furtherance of this plan of making evidence for the defense, Wilson had written a letter in regard to the St. Louis trip to the members of the legislature who met him there, antedating it nearly a year. On the contrary, this evidence discloses that Wilson was preparing a defense at that time by false statements in which he was getting other members of the legislature to acquiesce, which is inconsistent with the idea that Wilson was guiltless.

Wilson's attitude when the first investigation was had in Chicago, in 1910, when he left this country, going to Canada and registering there under an assumed name and staying out of the country until after the investigation in Chicago was finished, is another circumstance tending to prove his guilt and negativing the idea of innocence.

John Broderick.

Broderick stands upon the same footing as Browne and Wilson. The confession of Holstlaw, corroborated by other evidence, establishes that Broderick promised Holstlaw $2,500 for voting for Lorimer; that in pursuance of this promise, and before the legislature adjourned, Broderick told Holstlaw he would notify him when Holstlaw should come to Chicago; that thereafter, on June 16, Holstlaw received a letter from Broderick telling him to come to Chicago the next day; that Holstlaw thereafter went to Chicago, arriving there on the 17th of June, going straight to Broderick's saloon, where he was paid $2,500 in currency, which money was deposited, as has been shown heretofore, by Holstlaw in the State Bank of Chicago; that thereafter Broderick wrote another letter to Holstlaw stating that he would like to see him in Chicago not later than 4 p. m., Saturday, August 28, and that again Holstlaw went directly to Chicago, and upon his arrival there went to Broderick's saloon, where he received $700, which he likewise deposited in the State Bank in Chicago.

Broderick's attitude on the stand was a brazen attempt to deceive the committee. He testified first that he did not know how Holstlaw happened to come to Chicago, that he had not invited him there and was much surprised to see him the day of his arrival; but after his letter was produced asking Holstlaw to come to Chicago to see him Broderick admitted writing the letter. There can be no doubt from this record that Holstlaw was bribed and voted for Lorimer, and that Broderick was the bribe giver.

William C. Blair.

William C. Blair was a Democratic member of the legislature, residing at Mount Vernon, Ill. He is a lawyer, greatly dissipated, appearing more than once before the committee in a state of intoxication—once to such an extent that he was ordered from the witness stand.

Mr. Blair voted for the Democratic candidate for United States Senator on every ballot up to the last, with one exception, when he cast a complimentary vote for one Murray. On the last ballot he voted for Lorimer.

A few days prior to the election of Lorimer he told A. C. Tanner, a grocer of Mount Vernon, that he was thinking of voting for Lorimer and that it meant a great deal to him.

Benjamin F. Moore, sheriff of Wabash County, Ill., had a conversation with Blair the night before the senatorial election, in which Blair proclaimed his loyalty to Stringer, the Democratic candidate. Soon after the election Blair talked with Mr. Moore on the subject and told him that he (Blair) would have been very foolish to have voted for Stringer and let all of the Lorimer money go by him and not get his part of it.

In the month of July, 1909, about the 20th, Blair attended a baseball game at Centralia, Ill., was under the influence of liquor and exhibited a roll of bills in the presence of several witnesses, Mr. Tanner testifying that he observed in the roll at least eleven $100 bills.

As Blair was in debt, owing about $2,000, as he says, with a mortgage of $1,300 on his home, impecunious and insolvent, the display of this large sum of money excited considerable comment. In answer to Mr. Tanner's inquiry as to where he got the money, Blair said he was in consultation with a client about an important case, and had gotten a portion of his fee from him; that he had been at Olney, Ill., and had come directly from Olney to Centralia that day, the day of the baseball game.

It will be remembered that Olney was the home of Thomas Tippitt, the leader of the so-called Tippitt faction to which Blair belonged. Tippitt and Blair lived in the same senatorial district.

Blair in his testimony before the committee undertook to account for his possession of the roll of $100 bills exhibited by him at the baseball game. He first testified that in the summer of 1909 he had four or five $100 bills in his possession. He afterwards gave the number of $100 bills as five, which he said he had put in the custody of his wife, who kept them in a closet at their home. A little later he testified that his best recollection was that he must have had six or eight $100 bills, and that he believed he took as many as eight $100 bills with him to the baseball game.

A little further along in his testimony, when recalled to the stand, he said that his best recollection was that he had from $600 to $1,100 with him at the baseball game.

His explanations as to where he got the money were confused and contradictory. His salary as member of the legislature was $2,000 per annum.

He testified first that he drew $400 on his salary early in the session, in January, and received the balance at the close of the session, about June 4; that the State treasurer paid him $1,400 about that date—a day or two before he started home—part of it in $100 bills; that when he got home he gave his wife $800, mostly in $100 bills, and paid out the other $600 on his debts; that his wife kept this money until he took it out of the closet on the day of the baseball game.

The books of the treasurer of state showed that Blair had drawn all his salary before the 20th of February; and the books of the Ham National Bank, of Mount Vernon, and the canceled warrants on the State treasury showed that Blair had deposited the last salary warrants, amounting to over $1,300, on February 12 and February 22, in the Ham National Bank, and that it was all checked out very soon thereafter, leaving an overdraft of $1.40, which was not paid until July 7 following.

Mr. Blair's financial condition on July 20, when he says he took the roll of $100 bills from his closet, was described by him briefly as follows:

"The bank was threatening to sue me for two hundred and odd dollars. I owed the Ham National Bank some four hundred and odd dollars, and I owed the Jefferson State Bank some money—between $100 and $200—and I owed the Third National Bank some $200 or over, and I owed store bills there."

This was in addition to the $1,300 mortgage on his home, which had been running for five years still unpaid. He afterwards testified that his debts outside of the mortgage would run nearly $2,000.

When confronted with the books of the State treasurer and the bank, showing conclusively that his statement as to having drawn this money on his salary account was utterly false, Mr. Blair became confused and was unable to account for a single one of the several $100 bills which he admits that he exhibited at the baseball game.

The attention of Senators is invited to the testimony of this man, after he was thus shown to be a willful falsifier, for a striking example of the most stupid, bungling piece of perjury ever resorted to by a corruptionist in a futile attempt to cover his tracks and hide his infamy.

But where did Blair get the money? It will be remembered that Thomas Tippitt was the leader of one of the Democratic factions in the legislature, and Lee O'Neil Browne the leader of the other. Both voted for Lorimer on the last ballot. Each was leading his followers to Lorimer. It will also be remembered that Robert E. Wilson, Browne's agent on account of the latter's inability to act in person, paid the second installment of the corruption money to Browne's southern Illinois followers on the 15th of July.

We find Mr. Blair visiting Olney, the home of Thomas Tippitt, on the 19th of July, without any explanation for the visit. The evidence shows that Blair and Tippitt were together there on that day. Blair left Olney and went directly to Centralia, where he exhibited at least $1,100 in $100 bills—bills of the same denomination in which Browne's southern Illinois followers were paid in St. Louis. He is unable to explain where he obtained the money. He committed deliberate perjury when attempting to explain, and then broke down utterly in his further attempts at explanation. But this is not all.

Both Blair and Tippitt denied that they had met in Olney in July. Blair swore that he had not been in Olney.

Yet he was confronted with the hotel register, showing that he was at Olney that day, and the local newspaper chronicled his presence there that day. Mr. Rowland, a reputable editor and lawyer, testified that he saw him there that morning inquiring for Thomas Tippitt, and Judge John A. McNeil, a highly reputable lawyer and ex-county judge, saw Tippitt and Blair meet in Olney on the street in the morning about that time in July and walk off together.

The facts that Blair falsely denied being in Olney at all during that month and that Tippitt and Blair both felt called upon to deny that they had seen each other in Olney are particularly significant and throw much light on the question as to where Blair got the money.

Thomas Tippitt.

The preceding discussion of Blair's vote, in view of the confessions of other members of the Legislature of Illinois and the proof of their corruption in voting for Senator Lorimer, establishes that Blair's vote was corruptly cast for Lorimer and that he received his share of the corruption fund from Thomas Tippitt. The bribe giver being equally guilty with the bribe taker, Tippitt's vote for Lorimer under this view was as corrupt as that of Blair.

John H. De Wolf.

John H. De Wolf was a Democratic member, a farmer, residing at Canton, who voted for Lorimer on the last ballot. It was De Wolf, according to White's testimony, who on the day before the senatorial election asked him if he had been up to the trough yet, adding with an oath, "Well, I have already been up to the trough and got mine."

In explaining this De Wolf testified that while he did not remember it he might have said to White, "Have you been up to the trough?" But if he did he meant to inquire if White had been up to the bar, as he often used the word "trough" in referring to the bar.

Ex-Senator Hopkins and others testified as to the rumor that a plan was on foot among certain Democratic members at one time to sell enough votes to insure Hopkins's election.

So much credence was given to this report that Roger Sullivan came down from Chicago to head off the movement.

De Wolf testified that he and some others devised this plan as a joke, one of his purposes, as he says, being to have some one telegraph Roger Sullivan, and he would thereby be induced to come down to Springfield and buy the members some nice, black cigars.

This jocular individual bought 62 acres of land in August, 1909, and paid $600 of the purchase money in bills of a large denomination.

In accounting for his possession of these bills he testified that he kept them in a Bible at his home and had so kept them for three months or longer.

He had a checking account at the bank; does not remember when or the circumstances under which he placed the money in the Holy Book, and did not remember where he got it. His efforts to explain the possession of this money were grotesquely ludicrous.

Henry L. Wheelan.

Henry L. Wheelan is an insurance and real estate agent, residing at Rock Island. He was the Democratic representative from that county, and on the last ballot voted for Lorimer.

His vote had been solicited some time before by one Hughes, a business associate of Mr. Lorimer, in the contracting business, and also by McCarthy & Walsh, of Davenport, Iowa, friends of Lorimer, and also contractors. These men deny that they resorted to anything but moral suasion in the effort to procure Wheelan's vote.

In the fall of 1909 Wheelan purchased real estate and paid at least $1,000 of the purchase price in $100 bills.

He says he borrowed three of these bills from one Cox, a stonecutter and ex-policeman, who told him that he had that amount "planted," and that he borrowed seven $100 bills from a lawyer of the name of Scott; both loans being without security, Wheelan having no property save that which he was purchasing.

Cox testified that while he had a bank account, he had been carrying these three $100 bills around on his person for two or three months to conceal the fact from his wife.

The lawyer, Scott, testified that he also had an account in a bank across the street from his office, but that he had been carrying the $700 in bills in his pocket for a week or two weeks before he loaned it to Wheelan.

The efforts of Cox and Scott to explain where they respectively obtained the money were strikingly similar to those of Blair and De Wolf, hereinbefore referred to.

Cyril R. Jandus.

Mr. Jandus is a typical Chicago ward politician, and has trained with the gang for a long time.

He is a Democrat, represented a Chicago district in the State Senate, and voted for Lorimer on the last ballot. According to his testimony, he was an habitué of Senator John Broderick's saloon, played poker, and, when not engaged in politics or poker, practiced law.

Mr. Jandus was in Broderick's saloon on the occasion of the first of Senator Holstlaw's visits there and was one of Broderick's witnesses.

The bipartisan Chicago machine has provided him with a position in the county clerk's office, which he now holds.

Jandus also was buying property soon after the election of Senator Lorimer, paying out considerable sums of money therefor. He testified that he had about $5,300 in large bills which he kept in a tin box in his office vault, which was accessible to other occupants of the office; that he had been accumulating this money for a long time, half of it being in $100 bills. He was unable to inform the committee as to where he had procured any one of these bills.

He had a bank account, and why he kept this large sum in his office, which was occupied by four other person, was not explained.

His testimony as to the sources from which he might have derived part of the money is of such character as to place him in the class with Blair, De Wolf, and Wheelan.

Another important fact developed by this investigation was that no third-degree or improper methods were used in examining the members of the legislature as witnesses before the grand juries in Cook and Sangamon Counties. District Attorneys Wayman and Burke testified that no improper methods were used and no witnesses were terrorized or forced through fear to give testimony that was false, and there is no evidence that successfully rebuts this testimony.

In view of these facts, sufficient votes having been corrupted, it is not necessary for us to show either Senator Lorimer's connection with or guilty knowledge of the corruption, nor is it necessary for us to trace the source of the corruption fund. But we can not conclude our statement to the Senate without making the observation that Senator Lorimer's hand was the guiding force in shaping the action of the Legislature of Illinois in 1909 from soon after its organization until the day of his election, and that he was in such close consultation with Speaker Shurtleff and minority leader Lee O'Neil Browne as to justify the belief that these men were his agents and to warrant our holding him bound by their actions.

The agency of these men is so thoroughly established that Senator Lorimer could reap no reward by virtue of their wrongful action without being equally guilty and responsible for their wrongdoing.

The relations between Senator Lorimer and Lee O'Neil Browne are established by Senator Lorimer's own testimony, as well as Browne's, in which Senator Lorimer stated that he felt the criminal actions brought against Browne were on account of Browne's relations with him, and that, therefore, he was under moral obligation to do as he did—furnish Browne with money with which to defend himself, irrespective of whether Browne was ever able to refund the money thus advanced. The testimony upon this point is as follows:

"Senator LORIMER. Not exactly, Judge, but somewhere in the neighborhood of $8,000 or $10,000. I am not sure of the exact amount.

"Mr. HANECY. And did you loan it to him at different times and in different amounts?

"Senator LORIMER. Why, yes. I will tell you how that came about, Judge. He came to see me at the bank, and was talking about the White matter.

"Mr. HANECY. The matter of Charles A. White?

"Senator LORIMER. Yes. I asked him about his financial condition, and he said that he had a good practice and made all the money he needed, but that he had no money saved up, and he said that he did not have money enough to employ the lawyers he thought necessary to conduct his case, and I told him I would let him have some money; but he said that he did not know when I would get it back, and if he died soon I would never get it back. I told him that was all right; that this fight was really a fight on me and not on him; that they did not care anything about him; what they were trying to do was to get me out of my seat in the Senate. So I loaned him the money from time to time as he asked for it, and I think somewhere in the neighborhood of $10,000.

"Mr. HANECY. That is, you told him the fight that was being made on him by the State's attorney and the Tribune in Chicago was for the purpose of convicting or discrediting him and thereby unseating you?

"Senator LORIMER. Yes. The real purpose of the fight on Lee O'Neil Browne was then, and is now, to unseat me.

"Mr. HANECY. These fights on Browne have been carried on and won by Browne in every trial and contest that have been made against him?

"Senator. LORIMER. Yes.

"Senator KERN. Did you take his note for this money?

"Senator LORIMER. I did not.

"Senator KERN. What account did you keep of it?

"Senator LORIMER. I do not know whether I have checks for it or not, Senator.

"Senator KERN. In what form was it paid?

"Senator LORIMER. I say I do not know. He always came to the bank, and I do not know whether I drew checks to my own order and got the money for him or gave him checks and he got the money himself. I do not recall.

"Senator KERN. Did you make a charge of it?

"Senator LORIMER. It is not very much of an account at that. I have always considered that if Lee O'Neil Browne was never able to pay me that money, it was money which I ought to have contributed to help him in the contest. It was my fight and not his.

"Senator KERN. You kept no account of it at all?

"Senator LORIMER. I think I could tell how much it was by looking over my affairs at home.

"Senator KERN. No; that is not it. I am asking you whether you kept any account of it.

"Senator LORIMER. Do you mean that I kept books of it? I did not.

"Senator KERN. You made no entry on any book of the amount you advanced him?

"Senator LORIMER. No; I did not. * * *

"Senator KERN. Has Mr. Browne paid you any of the sum which you advanced him?

"Senator LORIMER. No; he has not, and from what I know of his financial condition just now, I do not think he will do so within a very short time, because he called on me at the bank the other day and told me that he was very much in debt on account of his trials, and that he would not be able to give me any money for a considerable time. That is, he came to me to find out whether I insisted on his paying me back or whether he should pay the other debts that he owes, and I told him to pay the other debts.

"Senator KERN. Do you expect the return of this money?

"Senator LORIMER. I do."

While there is conflicting testimony in regard to any money being furnished by Edward Hines for the purpose of electing William Lorimer, we believe that the evidence shows conclusively that the interest of Edward Hines in the election William Lorimer was more than the ordinary interest of a citizen desiring the election of a particular candidate.

The attitude of Mr. Hines upon the witness stand, his furnishing money to one of the material witnesses in his behalf, Charles P. McGowan, beyond the expenses incurred by McGowan in coming to Washington to testify, and his attempting to induce by the payment of money, a telephone operator at the New Willard Hotel to furnish copies of messages sent by the Burns agency, which had formerly been in the employ of the committee, established Mr. Hines's character as one that looked upon everything and everybody as being purchasable, and the only question of doubt in his mind being the amount of money necessary to purchase this or that person.

The fact that neither Mr. Hines's books nor the books of the Hines Lumber Co. show the collection or disbursement of any corruption fund does not establish that no such fund was collected or disbursed; for it is inconceivable that a man of even Mr. Hines's indifference to such methods would be bold enough to make a permanent record of such a crime upon his books or those of his company.

The undisputed facts, however, do show that when Mr. Hines left Washington, on May 25, 1909, armed, as he says, with the commands of leaders Aldrich and Penrose to the Legislature of Illinois to elect William Lorimer—for the purpose of going directly to Springfield, Ill., to assist in the election of William Lorimer—that he was met at the train in Chicago by his brother-in-law and confidential agent, C. F. Wiehe, who imparted information to him that caused his direct journey to Springfield to be abandoned, and instead of going directly to Springfield, Mr. Hines went directly to his bank, the Continental Commercial National Bank, and after a conference with the president of the bank, telephoned to Mr. Lorimer, and later telephoned again, to either Mr. Lorimer or some one else in Springfield interested in Lorimer's election.

At this point the evidence is conflicting. Mr. Hines, his employees and associates in business, whom he has introduced as corroborating witnesses, insist that the telephone conversation related only to messages which Mr Hines was bearing as a courier from the Republican leaders at Washington to the Republican bosses in Springfield. Although why Mr. Hines should take the long trip from Washington to Chicago for the purpose of telephoning from Chicago to Springfield messages that might have been telephoned as well and more quickly from Washington to Springfield has never been satisfactorily explained by Mr. Hines or any of his employee-witnesses, while it is testified to by other witnesses, one of whom, Wirt Cook, admitted personal animosity and hostility toward Hines—and whose testimony must be weighted with this fact in mind—that Hines's telephone message to Springfield was for the purpose of advising those directing Mr. Lorimer's campaign at Springfield that all of the money necessary to elect Mr. Lorimer was available.

This testimony, if true, would explain the unexpected interruption of the journey from Washington to Springfield at Chicago, the visit to the bank before telephoning Lorimer at Springfield, and the subsequent request of Hines to Funk to contribute $10,000 to the $100,000 fund to put Lorimer over.

The fact that Mr. Hines did telephone to Springfield relative to the election of Lorimer immediately after his visit to his bank is admitted by Mr. Hines, the difference in the proof being as to the purpose of the telephone communication. It is at least a remarkable coincidence that the election of Senator Lorimer, which had been doubtful up to that time, followed almost immediately after Hines's visit to his bank and his telephone message to Springfield—a coincidence that is illuminated by the statement of Wirt Cook that Hines, in his message to Springfield, promised all the money required to elect Lorimer.

The visit of Mr. Hines to his bank prior to this telephone conversation gives color and additional weight to the statements of the witnesses who testified that Mr. Hines's telephonic messages to Springfield promised funds for the purpose of electing Senator Lorimer. Such a purpose is further corroborated by the testimony of Clarence Funk and W. M. Burgess, the former testifying that Hines asked him to subscribe on behalf of his company, the International Harvester Co., the sum of $10,000 to reimburse those who had put Senator Lorimer over, and the latter who testified that C. F. Wiehe, Hines's brother-in-law and confidential representative, stated that he had subscribed $10,000 toward the fund to elect Lorimer.

Mr. Hines denies absolutely the testimony of the witness Funk, but the motive which Mr. Hines and Senator Lorimer attempt to ascribe as the reason for Funk committing the crime of perjury is too far-fetched to be tenable and too ridiculous and absurd to lessen the force of Funk's testimony, and no effort is made to establish any motive on the part of Burgess, who appears on the record as an absolutely disinterested witness. Burgess's testimony, however, is contradicted by several persons either connected in business with the Edward Hines Lumber Co. or receiving benefits therefrom and by one Charles P. McGowan. The effect of McGowan's testimony, however, is destroyed by his admission, corroborated by Wiehe, that after his testimony he received $300 in addition to the amount advanced for his expenses for the losses which McGowan had suffered in his business on account of his absence while testifying in behalf of Hines, and by McGowan's statements and letters to a detective of the Burns detective agency, stating that he had committed perjury for the Hines crowd and was going to receive a large sum therefor. One of McGowan's letters to the detective Bailey, which McGowan admits to have written, although he attempts to explain as a joke, is as follows:

ELORA, ONTARIO, November 19, 1911.

A. C. BAILEY, Esq.,
1607 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

MY DEAR ART.: Your very kind letter received some days ago, and I note you say you are all business. For myself, eating, sleeping, and smoking comprise my daily duties at present. A day or so after my return home the Hines people sent me a telegram asking me to meet one of them in Toronto. I presume they wanted some more affidavits or something, so I wired them they had better come to Elora. By God, they would have been shown what forced hospitality was! The old shotgun would have been loaded with a couple of Peters No. 2. I made them come across at that—not all I expected, though—and I had a hell of a time getting it, too. Had to threaten him with all kinds of exposure.

I was sorry I did not see you the afternoon I left, but hope we will meet again in the near future. I do not know just now what my plans will be for next year. Father is talking very seriously of buying a flour mill for my brother and myself. What kind of a miller would I make, do you think?

Let me hear from you as often as you can spare the time to write, and if you are in this vicinity any time, run up; I will always be glad to see you.

Yours, etc.,

CHAS. McGOWAN.
McG.

P. S.—Give my best to your brother.

We believe the testimony of Clarence Funk and W. M. Burgess to be true. This conclusion is strengthened by consideration of Hines's actions during the grand jury investigations, when he tried to get Cook and O'Brien out of the jurisdiction of the grand jury and by his suspicious and questionable actions during this investigation. In conclusion we hold that Hines was an accessory to the corruption that resulted in the election of William Lorimer to the Senate.

Believing that the confessions of the members of the legislature, strengthened by corroborating circumstances and by other evidence relating to the members of the legislature who did not confess, establish conclusively not only that at least 10 votes were purchased for the purpose of electing William Lorimer to the Senate but that the record reeks and teems with evidence of a general scheme of corruption, we have no hesitancy in stating that the investigation establishes, beyond contradiction, that the election of William Lorimer was obtained by corrupt means and was therefore invalid, and we submit the following resolution:

"Resolved, That corrupt methods and practices were employed in the election of William Lorimer to the Senate of the United States from the State of Illinois, and that his election was therefore invalid."

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1912.

Mr. Johnston of Alabama (for Mr. Dillingham), for the committee to investigate the election of William Lorimer, submitted an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970) proposing to pay Mr. Lorimer $35,000 toward counsel fees and other necessary expenses incurred by him in two investigations in the defense of his title to his seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, p. 10643.)

(The Sixty-second Congress, second session, adjourned without any action being taken by the Senate Committee on Appropriations on this proposed amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill.)

[Sixty-second Congress, first and second sessions.]

ISAAC STEPHENSON,

Of Wisconsin.

The credentials of Isaac Stephenson, certifying to his election as a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin for the term commencing March 4, 1909, were presented in the Senate on March 15, 1909, on which day the said Isaac Stephenson took his seat. More than 15 months later, on the 30th of June, 1911, a communication from the secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin was laid before the Senate, transmitting a certified copy of a joint resolution adopted by the legislature of that State (see S. Doc. 312, 62d, 2d, p. 2) relating to the primary and general election of 1908, and the election of United States Senator in 1908 in that State. This communication was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, together with accompanying documents.

On August 15, 1911, the Senate authorized the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin and to report to the Senate whether in the election of Isaac Stephenson as a Senator of the United States there were used corrupt methods or practices.

On February 12, 1912, the committee reported that, having given full consideration to the law, the testimony, and all of the facts and circumstances brought to its notice, it found that the charges preferred against Isaac Stephenson had not been sustained, and that his election was not procured by corrupt methods or practices. Attached to the report of the committee, in support of the same, are the views of one Senator and the joint views of two others in which the various questions relating to charges of corruption in connection with the proceedings of the legislature affecting the election, and those growing out of the primary election at which the nomination was secured, are taken up. With an admitted expenditure of over $107,000 in connection with the primary election, the discussion in the above-mentioned views, and the debates on the floor of the Senate, dealt not only with the allegations of corruption in the expenditure of money in connection with the primary and with the question of the aggregate amount of the expenditure, but also with the question of the proceedings of the primary election as affecting the validity of an election by the legislature. A minority of the committee filed their views subsequently, to which was attached a resolution declaring that said Isaac Stephenson was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate.

The case was debated in the Senate at various times during the months of February and March, 1912, and on the 27th of the latter month the committee report declaring Isaac Stephenson entitled to a seat in the Senate was adopted by a vote of 40 to 34, the amendment declaring Isaac Stephenson not duly and legally elected having failed of adoption on the day previous by a vote of 27 to 29.

The history of this case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings of the Senate in the case as published in the Congressional Record, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with accompanying views of individual members of the committee, the views of a minority of the committee, a statement of the days on which the question was debated in the Senate with reference to the record of the same as published in the Congressional Record, reference to the speeches and statements of different Senators on either side of the case as found in the Congressional Record, the vote on the amendment declaring that Isaac Stephenson was not duly elected, and the final vote on the motion in support of the committee report that he was entitled to his seat.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Dillingham (chairman), Gamble, Heyburn, Clapp, Sutherland, Bradley, Jones, Oliver, Kenyon, Paynter, Johnston, Fletcher, Kern, Lea, and Pomerene.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 12, 1912.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Heyburn, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report (Rept. No. 349) to accompany S. Res. 136:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred certain charges preferred by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, with instructions to report to the Senate whether in the election of said Isaac Stephenson as a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin there were used or employed corrupt methods or prac-tices, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

On August 15, 1911, the Senate adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections or any subcommittee thereof be authorized and directed to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, and report to the Senate whether in the election of said Isaac Stephenson, as a Senator of the United States from the said State of Wisconsin there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices; that said committee or subcommittee be authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate, to hold its session at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ stenographers, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or chairman of the subcommittee."

Pursuant to the authority given by said resolution the Committee on Privileges and Elections appointed a subcommittee consisting of Mr. Heyburn, chairman, Mr. Sutherland, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Paynter, and Mr. Pomerene, with full powers to investigate said charges.

On January 20, 1912, the subcommittee reported to the full committee as follows:

In the matter of the investigation of the charges against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin.

To the honorable the Committee on Privileges and Electionst of the United States Senate:

Your subcommittee proceeded pursuant to the terms of its appointment to investigate the above-mentioned charges and in pursuance of said duty met in the city of Washington and, having organized, proceeded to adopt a plan for holding such investigation.

It was agreed by your subcommittee that the investigation should commence on October 2, 1911, at the city of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin.

Accordingly your subcommittee met at the city of Milwaukee on the above-mentioned date, all parties in interest being present. Hon. Charles E. Littlefield, W. E. Black, and H. A. J. Upham, Esqs., appeared as counsel for Senator Stephenson.

The governor and the attorney general of the State of Wisconsin were notified by the chairman of your subcommittee of the time and place of the hearing and were invited to indicate to the committee whether or not they desired to be present and participate in any manner in such investigation. The governor of Wisconsin, speaking for the State, informed your subcommittee that no one on behalf of the State would appear at such investigation.

Your subcommittee then proceeded to the examination of witnesses and documents, which examination occupied 25 days, during which time 124 witnesses were sworn, 35 affidavits received, and 2,100 pages of printed testimony taken, which testimony, affidavits, and exhibits are herewith submitted as a part of the report of your subcommittee.

Your subcommittee has given the fullest consideration to all the testimony introduced and has considered its weight and effect under the rules pertaining to the investigation and is of the opinion that the charges preferred against Senator Isaac Stephenson have not been sustained, and your subcommittee finds that the election of said Isaac Stephenson as a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin was not procured by corrupt methods or practices in said election of Isaac Stephenson.

W. B. Heyburn, Chairman.
George Sutherland.
W. O. Bradley.
Atlee Pomerene.

Mr. Heyburn, chairman of the subcommittee, submitted a statement of his views in support of the conclusions reached, and on the request of members of the committee further consideration of the matter was postponed to February 3, 1912, on which date a further postponement was had to February 10, 1912, with the understanding that any member of the committee might file a statement of his views to accompany the final report of the committee, and that a vote might be taken on that date.

On February 10, 1912, the Committee on Privileges and Elections met in regular session and received a statement of the views of Mr. Pomerene and Mr. Sutherland in support of the report of the subcommittee, and proceeded to the consideration of the report of the subcommittee together with the views expressed by the members thereof upon a full record of the testimony and proceedings in the case.

On motion it was ordered that the report of the subcommittee be adopted and that said subcommittee be discharged.

Whereupon it was ordered that Mr. Heyburn be instructed to report the actions of the committee to the Senate, together with a transcript of testimony and of all the proceedings of the subcommittee, including the address of Hon. Charles E. Littlefield before the whole committee, and also the individual views presented by members of the committee. Leave was given to file a minority report by those dissenting from the conclusions reached.

Wherefore your committee, having given full consideration to the law and to the testimony and to all of the facts and circumstances brought to its notice, does find that the charges preferred against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, are not sustained, and your committee further finds that the election of said Isaac Stephenson as a Senator of the United States was not procured by corrupt methods or practices.

VIEWS OF MR. HEYBURN IN SUPPORT OF THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

The subcommittee having reported to the whole committee in favor of Isaac Stephenson, I desire to submit herewith the reasons which actuated me in arriving at that conclusion:

Jurisdiction.

On August 15, 1911, the United States Senate adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections or any subcommittee thereof be authorized and directed to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, and report to the Senate whether in the election of said Isaac Stephenson, as a Senator of the United States from the said State of Wisconsin there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices; that said committee or subcommittee be authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate, to hold its session at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ stenographers, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or chairman of the subcommittee."

Pursuant to the authority given by said resolution the Committee on Privileges and Elections appointed a subcommittee consisting of Senators Heyburn, Sutherland, Bradley, Paynter, and Pomerene, with full powers "to investigate said charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin relating to the election of Isaac Stephenson, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin."

Meeting of subcommittee.

In performance of said duty the subcommittee met at Milwaukee, Wis., on October 2, 1911, in the Federal Building, a quorum of said subcommittee being present.

The chairman announced that the subcommittee would recognize a duly authorized representative of the State of Wisconsin, in view of the fact that the State had submitted through its governor to the Senate of the United States the charges to be investigated. No one appearing, the chairman then instructed the secretary of the subcommittee to communicate with the governor and attorney general of the State and advise them that the committee was in session in Milwaukee for the purpose of investigating the charges aforesaid, and to inquire whether or not the State desired to be represented at the hearing, and, pursuant to such instruction, the secretary sent the following communication to the governor:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., October 2, 1911.

Hon. FRANCIS E. MCGOVERN,
Governor of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.:

A subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate, duly appointed, with instructions to investigate the election of Isaac Stephenson as a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, as recommended by the Legislature of Wisconsin as provided in joint resolution 58 of said legislature, has entered upon the investigation in the Federal Building, in the city of Milwaukee. As the State appears to be unrepresented by counsel, you are requested to advise the committee whether or not it is the desire of the State to be represented by counsel before this committee; and if so, designate in writing such person to represent the State.

W. B. HEYBURN, Chairman.

To which communication the governor replied as follows:

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Madison, Wis., October 3, 1911.

Hon. W. B. HEYBURN,
Chairman Subcommittee of the United States Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, Milwaukee, Wis.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your telegram of yesterday, in which you request me to advise your committee "whether or not it is the desire of the State to be represented by counsel" before your subcommittee, permit me to say that I find there is very serious doubt that I have any power to act in the matter. Joint resolution 58, to which you refer, confers no such authority. It simply requests the United States Senate "to investigate the manner, means, and methods by and through which Isaac Stephenson secured his election to the United States Senate," recommends to the district attorney of Dane County that prosecutions be commenced against all persons shown to have committed perjury in the Senatorial inquiry in this city, and suggests that prosecutions be commenced in other counties of the State for such violations of the corrupt-practices or bribery statutes as the evidence may justify.

In the absence of any specific authority conferred by this joint resolution the only other possible source is chapter 268 of the laws of Wisconsin for the year 1911. Careful consideration of this statute leaves me in doubt as to whether it confers power upon me to employ at the expense of the State counsel to attend the investigation your subcommittee is now conducting. Nor can I see that much good is likely to come from such employment. Your invitation comes so late as practically to preclude the possibility of anyone whom I might select rendering any real service to your committee or materially assisting in the investigation now in progress. That investigation has already begun. The transactions to be inquired into are numerous and involved, as appears from the fact that the testimony already taken occupied many months of the time of committees of the State legislature and now fills a number of large volumes of printed reports. To be of service counsel for the State should have been employed months ago. I say this with no feeling of personal responsibility in the matter for the reason that until your telegram came yesterday there was no ground for anticipating that the appearance of an attorney for the State at this hearing would be acceptable to your committee. Indeed, more than a week ago, under date of September 25, the Associated Press quoted you as having expressed yourself as chairman of the subcommittee as follows: "The State of Wisconsin will not have an attorney in the investigation of the election of Isaac Stephenson by the United States Senate committee. This hearing is under the jurisdiction of the United States Senate, which does not recognize the State as a party to the investigation. This is an investigation, not a trial."

An additional reason why I should not avail myself of your invitation at this time is furnished by the practice of other committees charged with duties similar to yours. So far as I know no State has been represented by counsel at any of these investigations. The work has been done either by the members of the committee alone or by counsel of their own choosing. At any rate, the responsibility for a thorough, searching inquiry is upon your subcommittee acting as the agent of the United States Senate in determining a question relative to the "election, returns, and qualifications" of one of its own Members. Neither the State of Wisconsin nor its legislatnre desires to assume the rôle of prosecutor or to sustain any other relation to this investigation than that of petitioner for a thorough, fearless, and impartial inquiry.

For the present, therefore, I shall take no action concerning the matter mentioned in your telegram. Assuring you, however, of my appreciation of your consideration in extending the invitation, I am,

Very truly, yours,

FRANCIS E. McGOVERN.

The chairman inquired whether or not counsel were present to represent Mr. Stephenson. Whereupon Hon. Charles E. Littlefield, Mr. W. E. Black, and Mr. H. A. J. Upham appeared on his behalf and were recognized by the committee.

The joint resolution and specific charges certified to the United States Senate by the governor of Wisconsin were then read. (Transcript, pp. 4 and 5.)

Before entering upon the examination of witnesses by the committee Hon. Charles E. Littlefield, of counsel for Mr. Stephenson, requested leave to make a statement, which leave was granted. (Transcript, pp. 6–23.)

The subcommittee then proceeded to the examination of witnesses and documents, which examination occupied 25 days, during which time 116 witnesses were sworn and examined, 36 affidavits received, and upward of 2,100 pages of printed testimony taken, which testimony, affidavits, and exhibits are herewith offered as a part of the report of the subcommittee.

The subcommittee was directed to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against Mr. Stephenson, These charges were set forth in the communication of the governor of Wisconsin, and the papers accompanying the same, certified to the United States Senate, among which was the joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Wisconsin on June 26, 1911, which is found on page 2 of the transcript.

The charges referred to in the resolution under which the subcommittee acted are as follows:

Specific charges.

"1. That Isaac Stephenson, of Marinette, Wis., now United States Senator and a candidate for reelection, did, as such candidate for reelection, give to one E. A. Edmonds, of the city of Appleton, Wis., an elector of the State of Wisconsin and said city of Appleton, a valuable thing, to wit, a sum of money in excess of $106,000, and approximating the sum of $250,000, as a consideration for some act to be done by said E. A. Edmonds in relation to the primary election held on the 1st day of September, 1908, which consideration was paid prior to said primary election, and that said Isaac Stephenson was at the time of such payment a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States Senator at such primary, and did by such acts as above set forth violate section 4543b of the statutes.

"2. That said Isaac Stephenson did, prior to said primary, pay to said Edmonds above-mentioned sums with the design that said Edmonds should pay to other electors of this State, out of said sums above mentioned and other sums of money received by said Edmonds from said Isaac Stephenson, prior to said primary, sums ranging from $5 per day to $1,000 in bulk as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to said primary by said electors for said Isaac Stephenson as such candidate, in violation of said section.

"3. That with full knowledge and with instructions from said Isaac Stephenson, as to how and for what purposes said sums were to be expended, said sums were so paid as above stated to said Edmonds by said Isaac Stephenson, and that said sums were paid as above stated for the purposes above stated and also for the purpose of bribing and corrupting a sufficient number of the electors of the State of Wisconsin to encompass the nomination of said Isaac Stephenson at said primary for the office of United States Senator.

"4. That in pursuance of the purposes and design above stated said Isaac Stephenson did, by and through his agents, prior to said primary, pay to one U. C. Keller, of Sauk County, an elector of this State, the sum of $300 as a consideration for some act to be done by said Keller for said Stephenson preliminary to said primary, corruptly and unlawfully.

"5. That in further pursuance of such purposes and design said Isaac Stephenson, by and through his agents, prior to said primary, paid to one Hambright, of Racine, Wis., large sums of money as a consideration for some act to be done by said Hambright for said Stephenson preliminary to said primary, said Hambright being then an elector of this State, corruptly and unlawfully.

"6. That in further pursuance of the purposes and design above stated said Isaac Stephenson did, by and through his agents, prior to said primary, pay to one Roy Morse, of Fond du Lac, Wis., then an elector of this State, the sums of $1,000 as a consideration for some act to be done by said Morse for said Isaac Stephenson preliminary to said primary, and corruptly and unlawfully.

"7. That in further pursuance of such purposes and design said Isaac Stephenson, by and through his agents, prior to said primary, paid to divers persons, then electors of the county of Grant, Wis., ranging from $5 per day and upward, as a consideration for some act to be done by said several electors for said Isaac Stephenson preliminary to said primary, corruptly and unlawfully.

"8. That in further pursuance of such purposes and design said Isaac Stephenson, by and through his agents, prior to said primary, did pay to divers persons who were at such time electors in this State a consideration for some act to be done for said Isaac Stephenson by such electors preliminary to such primary, corruptly and unlawfully.

"9. That in further pursuance of such purposes and designs said Isaac Stephenson, by and through his agents, prior to said primary, did pay to electors of this State, who were of a different political opinion and who held to other political principles than those of the Republican Party, more particularly Democrats, sums of money as a consideration for some act to be done by such electors for said Isaac Stephenson preliminary to said primary, corruptly and unlawfully.

"10. That in further pursuance of such purposes and design said Isaac Stephenson, by and through his agents, prior to such primary, did offer to pay to Edward Pollock, of Lancaster, Wis., certain sums of money, as editor of the Teller, a newspaper published in said city of Lancaster, Wis., and to other editors of newspapers who were at such time electors of this State, and for the purpose of purchasing the editorial support of such editors and as a consideration of something to be done relating to such primary, corruptly and unlawfully.

"11. That said Isaac Stephenson did, prior to such primary, by and through his agents, promise and agree to pay to one Lester Tilton, a then resident and elector of this State, and residing at the city of Neillsville, Wis., a sum in excess of $500 to procure or aid in procuring the nomination of said Lester Tilton to the assembly of this State from Clark County, and did offer to give to said Lester Tilton a sum in excess of $500 if said Lester Tilton would become a candidate for the assembly from said Clark County if said Lester Tilton would support said Isaac Stephenson for the office of United States Senator, all of which is in violation of sections 4542b and 4543b of the statutes.

"12. That said Isaac Stephenson did, by and through his agents, give and promise and pay or agree to pay to other electors of this State sums of money to procure or aid in procuring the nomination of such electors to the senate and assembly of this State other than those electors residing in the district where said Isaac Stephenson resides.

"13. That E. M. Heyzer and Max Sells, prior to said primary, being at such time employees of the Chicago & North Western Railway Co., a corporation doing business in this State, did contribute and agree to contribute free services as such employees for the purpose to defeat the candidacy of former Assemblyman E. F. Nelson, from the district embracing Florence, Forest, and Langlade Counties, for the nomination for assemblyman from said district, all of which was done with the knowledge and consent and under the direction of said Isaac Stephenson, his agents and employees, contrary to chapter 492, laws of 1905.

"14. That in further pursuance of the purposes and design about set forth said Isaac Stephenson, by and through his agents, did, in addition to paying certain sums as above set forth, offer and agree to pay to electors of this State, prior to said primary, a premium or bonus to those who in his employ carried their respective precincts in such primary for said Isaac Stephenson as such candidate.

"15. That said Isaac Stephenson, if claiming an election by virtue of receiving a plurality of votes at such primary, then said Isaac Stephenson has violated chapter 502 of the laws of 1905 by failing and neglecting to file his expense account as provided by said chapter.

"16. Charging generally the primary nomination or election of said Isaac Stephenson was obtained by the use of large sums of money corruptly and illegally, by the violation of sections 4542b, 4543b, and 4478b of the statutes relating to illegal voting, bribery, and corruption, and other laws above set forth relating to elections and primary elections."

John J. Blaine, a State senator, who made the said 16 specific charges, which constituted the basis of the legislative investigation, was examined in detail as to each of such charges and failed to sustain any of them, either by his own testimony or by reference to the testimony of others. The charges were made on information and belief according to his own testimony. He seemed upon examination to have no information upon which any belief as to their truth could be based.

An inspection of his testimony (transcript, p. 592, etc.) will fully justify the conclusion of the subcommittee that such charges were not sustained.

These charges were investigated by two legislative committees; first, by a joint committee which submitted a report which was not finally acted upon; second, by a committee of three members of the State senate, only one member of which was a member of the legislature when the report of that committee was made.

The time within which the joint legislative committee might take testimony and report was limited by the legislature to expire on the 13th day of April, 1909, and on that day the said committee met and adopted a resolution that each member make an outline of his proposed report and submit it at a later day for discussion before the committee.

Said committee then adjourned subject to the call of the chairman of the senate or assembly committee.

This ended the work of the joint investigating committee.

The State senate, acting independently of the assembly and in view of the expiration of the time within which the joint committee might finish its work, adopted a resolution on March 25, 1909, authorizing the president of the senate to appoint a committee consisting of three members to complete the investigation that had been carried on by the joint committee and to "further fully, fairly, and thoroughly investigate the campaign and election of Isaac Stephenson as a United States Senator, and the campaign and election of members of the legislature so far as their election in any way pertains to or affects the election of Isaac Stephenson as a United States Senator."

Specific questions presented for consideration.

In the order of their importance the duties of the subcommittee may be classified as follows:

First. To investigate the proceedings by the legislature, including the actions of Senator Stephenson and those representing him, during the session of the legislature.

Second. To investigate the campaign and election of members of the legislature so far as their election in any way pertains to or affects the election of Isaac Stephenson as a United States Senator.

Third. The primary election and the campaign.

Election of a Senator by the legislature.

The law providing for the election of Senators by the legislature is as follows, being chapter 1, title 2, of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

"SEC. 14. The legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organizing thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress.

"SEC. 15. Such election shall be conducted in the following manner: Each house shall openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, name one person for Senator in Congress from such State, and the name of the person so voted for who receives a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house shall be entered on the journal of that house by the clerk or secretary thereof; or if either house fails to give such majority to any person on that day, the fact shall be entered on the journal. At twelve o'clock meridian of the day following that on which proceedings are required to take place as aforesaid the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly, and the journal of each house shall then be read, and if the same person has received a majority of all the votes in each house he shall be declared duly elected Senator. But if the same person has not received a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house has failed to take proceedings as required by this section, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator, and the person who receives a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected. If no person receives such majority on the first day, the joint assembly shall meet at twelve o'clock meridian of each succeeding day during the session of the legislature and shall take at least one vote until a Senator is elected.

"SEC. 16. (Relates to filling vacancies.)

"SEC. 17. (Also relates to the filling of vacancies.)

"SEC. 18. It shall be the duty of the executive of the State from which a Senator has been chosen to certify his election, under the seal of the State, to the President of the Senate of the United States.

"SEC. 19. The certificate mentioned in the preceding section shall be countersigned by the secretary of state of the State."

Proceedings in the legislature.

The Forty-ninth Legislature of Wisconsin consisted of 33 senators and 100 assemblymen, and convened at the capitol at Madison on January 13, 1909, at 12 o'clock m.

On Thursday, January 14, 1909, the organizing of both houses was complete, and the assembly adjourned until Tuesday, January 19, at 10 o'clock.

The senate organized on January 13, 1909, and on January 14 Senator Husting introduced joint resolution 3, providing for the investigation of the primary election, which was laid over until the next session, and the senate adjourned until Tuesday, January 19, at 10 o'clock a. m.

On Tuesday, January 26, the senate considered joint resolution 3, and a substitute was introduced by Senator Blaine. (Senate Journal, pp. 72–77.) This substitute contains the specific charges.

On January 26, 1909, a vote was taken on the election of United States Senator, each house voting separately.

In the senate the total number of votes cast was 17. Mr. Stephenson received 12 votes, Brown 4, Rummel 1. (Senate Journal, pp. 78–79.)

On the same day, January 26, upon the call of the roll in the assembly, the total number of votes cast for Senator was 84. Mr. Stephenson received 60, Neal Brown 16, Jacob Rummel 3, S. A. Cook 2, H. A. Cooper 1, J. H. Stout 1, and John J. Esch 1, which result was announced by the speaker. (Assembly Journal, pp. 74–75.)

On Wednesday, January 27, resolutions were introduced in the senate, among others joint resolution 8, being an arraignment of the United States Senate and a demand for its abolition, introduced by Senator Gaylord. (Senate journal, p. 86.) It was referred to the committee on Federal relations. This is mentioned in passing only to show the temper of the legislature on the day of the first joint ballot for United States Senator.

At 12 o'clock noon of January 27, 1909, the two houses met in joint convention. The lieutenant governor, presiding, stated:

"Gentlemen of the joint convention, you are assembled here for the purpose of expressing your choice for United States Senator. In order to comply with the Federal law the clerk of the senate and the clerk of the assembly will read from the journal of each house, respectively, the proceedings of the preceding day with reference to the election of a United States Senator."

The senate journal (p. 94) and the assembly journal (p. 80) record as follows:

"The chief clerk of the senate read the journal of the senate of January 26, 1909, and the chief clerk of the assembly read the journal of the assembly of January 26, 1909.

"The president then said: 'The clerk will call the roll. As your names are called you will arise from your seats and announce the candidate of your choice.'"

Senator Hudnall said:

"I rise to protest against any other proceedings being taken in the joint assembly at this time except the announcement of the presiding officer that Hon. Isaac Stephenson is elected to the United States Senate for the term commencing March 4, 1909. I do that for the reason that it appears from the journal of the senate that the total number of votes cast for persons were 17, of which Isaac Stephenson received 12, Neal Brown 4, Jacob Rummel 1, and the journal of the assembly shows that of the members who voted for persons there were 60 for Stephenson, 10 for Brown, and 3 for Jacob Rummel; and it further appears from both journals of senate and assembly that Isaac Stephenson received a majority of all the votes cast in each house.

"It devolves then upon the president of this joint assembly to declare Isaac Stephenson duly elected to the United States Senate, and then the duty devolves upon the president of the senate and speaker of the assembly to certify his election to the governor and to the secretary of state, and they to certify his election to the United States Senate. Any other proceeding is out of order and nugatory."

Senator Hudnall stated that he made this statement as a protest and as a point of order. The president held the point of order not well taken and held that Senator Hudnall was out of order in his protest.

The presiding officer then directed the nomination of candidates, and the joint assembly proceeded to vote for a United States Senator. There were 131 votes cast, of which Isaac Stephenson received 65, and the presiding officer announced that "it appears from the records of the convention that no person has received a majority of the votes cast for United States Senator." Whereupon the joint convention dissolved.

On no other day until the 4th of March, 1909, did anyone receive a majority of the votes cast in joint assembly. On that day (the 4th of March) upon the twenty-fourth ballot of the joint assembly there were 123 votes cast of which Isaac Stephenson received 63. Whereupon the chairman of the joint assembly announced the election of Isaac Stephenson, and the joint assembly adjourned sine die.

At each session of the joint assembly the question as to whether any vote in the joint assembly was necessary was raised by protest against such proceedings upon the grounds that Mr. Stephenson having received a majority of the votes cast in each house voting separately, no other or further duty remained for the joint assembly than that of reading the journals of the two houses of the proceedings in each relative to the election of a United States Senator on the day previous. These journals were read and the fact disclosed that in each house Mr. Stephenson had received a majority of all the votes cast. It remained only that "he shall be declared duly elected Senator." The statute does not prescribe who shall declare the person receiving a majority of the votes in each house elected Senator, nor in what form such declaration shall be made.

From the reading of the law it would seem that when the two houses voting separately each gave Mr. Stephenson a clear majority and having met in joint session on the day following the vote in the separate houses, the journal of the proceedings of the two houses voting separately being read in joint convention and the result announced, the election was completed; the mere failure to declare him elected could not in any way defeat the will of the two houses as expressed in their separate votes.

The failure to make a specific declaration of his election was not vital. The action of the governor and secretary of state in deferring the certificate of his election or in misstating the time of his election could not affect that election.

If we are correct in assuming that the election of Isaac Stephenson was accomplished when the record of the two houses was read and announced in the joint assembly, then the failure or delay of the executive officers to perform their duty could in no way defeat his election as of the date of the meeting of the first joint assembly.

Acts of bribery charged.

Charges of bribery in the interest of Mr. Stephenson's election had been freely made both before the subcommittee and before the legislative investigating committee. Not one of these charges has been sustained by the testimony.

The word "bribery" has been applied to many acts that do not constitute bribery.

The procurement of advertising space or editorial comment in the newspapers upon the payment of money by or on behalf of a candidate for office can not under any construction of law be held to be bribery.

The procurement of the services of men to speak either publicly or personally on behalf of any candidate, or to canvas the electorate on his behalf, is not bribery under any reasonable construction of the law.

If the testimony were true that money was offered to Assemblyman Leuch to go upon the floor and vote for the purpose of effecting a quorum it would not constitute bribery. It was the duty of such member to go upon the floor and vote.

The charge of an attempt to bribe H. R. Pestalozzi utterly failed of proof before your committee.

The charge of unlawful dealings with the Milwaukee Free Press utterly failed of proof. It was conceded that Mr. Stephenson owned a controlling interest in that paper and he was certainly entitled to have its support and to sustain his interest in it.

Bribery.

The law of Wisconsin relative[1] to bribery is as follows:

"SEC. 39. Bribery of signers to petitions, etc.—1. Any person who shall offer, or with knowledge of the same permit any person to offer for his benefit, any bribe to a voter to induce him to sign any * * * nomination paper * * * and any person who shall accept any such bribe or promise of gain of any kind in the nature of a bribe as consideration for signing the same, whether such bribe or promise of gain in the nature of a bribe be offered or accepted before or after such signing, or any candidate who shall knowingly cause a nomination paper, or papers, to be signed in his behalf by more than the maximum number of qualified electors provided for his district by subdivision 5 of section 11–5 of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon trial and conviction thereof be punished by fine of not less than $25 nor more than $500 or by imprisonment in the county jail of not less than 10 days or more than 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"Penalties: Caucus and general election laws applicable.—2. Any act declared an offense by the general laws of this State concerning caucuses and elections shall also, in like case, be an offense in primaries and shall be punished in the same form and manner as therein provided, and all the penalties and provisions of the law as to such caucuses and elections, except as herein otherwise provided, shall apply in such case with equal force and to the same extent as though fully set forth in this act.

"SEC. 40. General election law: applicable (secs. 11–25).—The provisions of the statutes now in force in relation to the holding of elections, the solicitation of voters at the polls, the challenging of voters, the manner of conducting elections, of counting the ballots and making return thereof, and all other kindred subjects, shall apply to all primaries in so far as they are consistent with this act, the intent of this act being to place the primary under the regulation and protection of the laws now in force as to elections.

"SEC. 263. Bribery at elections (sec. 4478).—The following persons shall be deemed guilty of bribery at elections:

"2. Every person who shall, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, give or procure, or agree to give or procure, or offer, promise, or endeavor to procure any office, place of employment, public or private, to or for any voter, or to or for any person on behalf of any voter, or to or for any other person in order to induce such voter to vote or refrain from voting, or do any such act as aforesaid, corruptly, on account of any voter having voted or refrained from voting at any election.

"3. Every person who shall, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, make any such gift, loan, offer, promise, procurement, or agreement as aforesaid to or for any person in order to induce such person to procure or endeavor to procure the election of any person to a public office, or the vote of any voter at any election.

"4. Every person who shall, upon or in consequence of any such gift, loan, offer, promise, procurement, or agreement, procure, or engage, promise or endeavor to procure the election of any person to a public office or the vote of any voter at any election.

"5. Every person who shall advance or pay or cause to be paid any money to or for the use of any other person with the intent that such money or any part thereof shall be expended in bribery at any election, or who shall knowingly pay or cause to be paid any money wholly or in part expended in bribery at any election.

"Penalty.—And any person so offending shall be punished by imprisonment in the State prison for a term of not less than six months nor more than two years: Provided, That the foregoing shall not be construed to extend to any money paid or agreed to be paid for or on account of any legal expenses authorized by law and bona fide incurred at or concerning any election.

"SEC. 264 (sec. 4478a). The following persons shall also be deemed guilty of bribery at elections:

"1. Every voter who shall, before or during any election, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, receive, agree, or contract for any money

"2. Every person who shall, after any election, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person in his behalf, receive any money or valuable consideration on account of any person having voted or refrained from voting or having induced any other person to vote or refrain from voting at any election; and any voter or other person so offending shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not less than one month nor more than one year.

"SEC. 266. Office obtained by bribery, vacant (sec. 4481).—Any person who shall obtain any office or shall have been elected to any office at any election, at which election he shall have induced or procured any elector to vote for him for such office by bribery, shall be disqualified from holding said office, and he shall be ousted therefrom, and said office shall be deemed and held vacant, to be filled by election or appointment as other vacancies, according to law.

"SEC. 294. Bribery at caucus or convention (sec. 4479).—Any person being, or seeking to be, a candidate for any office at any election authorized by law who shall give, or promise to give, to any elector or other person any money or thing of value or any pecuniary advantage or benefit for the purpose of inducing or influencing such elector or other person to vote for him in any convention or meeting of the people held for the purpose of nominating any person or persons to be voted for at any such election to make him the nominee of any such convention or meeting and the candidate to be voted for for any office at such election, or who shall so give or promise any such thing to any such person for the purpose of inducing or influencing any person to sign any nomination paper which seeks to have him nominated as a candidate for any office to be so voted for; and any such elector or other person who shall ask, solicit, or receive any money or thing of value or any pecuniary advantage or benefit from such candidate as a consideration or inducement for his vote at any such convention or meeting of the people, or his signature to any such paper, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year or by fine not exceeding $500.

"SEC. 296. Bribery in connection with caucus (sec. 4542b).—Every person who, by bribery or corrupt or unlawful means, prevents or attempts to prevent any voter from attending or voting at any preliminary meeting or caucus mentioned in sections 11a to 11i, or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any officer, inspector, or delegate whose office is therein created, or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to an elector as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to such preliminary meeting, caucus, or convention, or who shall interfere with or in any manner disturb any preliminary meeting, caucus, or convention held under said provisions shall be punished as provided in section 4542a.

"SEC. 298. Bribery of voter; disturbance at caucus or convention.—Every person who, by bribery or corrupt or unlawful means, prevents or attempts to prevent any voter from attending or voting at any caucus mentioned in this act, or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any officer, inspector, or delegate whose office is created by this act, or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any elector as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to such caucus or convention, or who shall interfere with or in any manner disturb any caucus or convention held under the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished in the manner hereinafter provided." (Ch. 341, 1899.)

Charges of corruption in the legislature.

On page 2271 of the report of the State senate investigating committee an attempt is made to summarize the corruption alleged to exist in connection with the election by the legislature, and the first objection is that Mr. Stephenson was elected by the legislature by a majority of three votes while the charges of corruption against him were being investigated by the legislature. This charge seems hardly worthy of serious consideration. It was admitted that he was elected by the legislature, and there is no law or rule that would invalidate the election because of the pendency of these charges. That was a matter for the members of the legislature to consider in determining whether or not they would vote for him.

Absent members on March 4.

The next charge is that the election of Mr. Stephenson was made possible by three members, who, it is claimed, at the instigation of Mr. Stephenson's managers and agents, absented themselves from the joint assembly when it became known that their presence would prevent the election of Mr. Stephenson, and it was charged that the absence of these three members had been procured by fraudulent or wrongful means by or on behalf of Mr. Stephenson. It was the only charge of corruption in connection with the election of Mr. Stephenson by the legislature worthy of consideration.

The result of the vote on March 4 consequent upon the absence of these three members is made plain in the testimony of Richard J. White (p. 1324) and by an examination of the journal of the joint assembly on March 4. On that day the total number of votes cast was 123, of which Isaac Stephenson received 63.

The members of the legislature whose absence from the chamber on March 4 was questioned were Messrs. Farrell, Ramsey, and Towne.

On March 3 Farrell voted for Neal Brown, Ramsey voted for George W. Peck, and Towne did not vote at all.

On March 2 Farrell and Ramsey voted for Neal Brown, and Towne voted for Lucknow.

On March 1 neither Farrell, Ramsey, nor Towne voted at all.

On February 27 Ramsey voted for Wall, Farrell voted for Neal Brown, and Towne did not vote at all.

On February 26 Towne voted for Thomas A. Stewart; neither Farrell nor Ramsey seem to have voted.

These instances are cited to show that on the face of the transaction there was nothing unusual in the absence of either of the three absentees on March 4, and nothing in their absence to raise the presumption of corruption therein.

It is true that had these three members been present and voted the total vote would have been 126, and the 63 votes received by Mr. Stephenson would not have elected, but the evidence clearly establishes the fact that Mr. Ramsey, one of the three absentees, was paired with Mr. Fenelon and that such pairs had been universally recognized, so that Mr. Ramsey can not be said to have been absent for any corrupt purpose, nor would have his absence from the joint assembly affect the result of the vote. Being paired, he could not have voted. In that event, had Farrell and Towne been present the total vote would have been 125, of which Mr. Stephenson received 63. Sixty-three would have been a majority and would have elected Mr. Stephenson, so that the absence of Farrell and Towne did not affect the result of the election, and it can not therefore be said that the election was brought about through corrupt practices so far as the absence of Farrell and Towne was concerned.

It is not charged that any other member who voted for Mr. Stephenson did so either from corrupt motives or actions on his own part or that he was procured to do so by any corrupt action on the part of any person in the interest of Mr. Stephenson.

The votes cast for Mr. Stephenson were those that had been consistently supporting him throughout the contest. There was no change in his favor upon which any presumption of corrpution could be based.

Does the evidence show or tend to show that there were corrupt measures or unlawful methods adopted to secure the absence of either Farrell or Towne?

There has been much sensational testimony introduced before the subcommittee, which was heard largely because such testimony had been received by the legislative investigating committee for the purpose of showing bribery or corrupt methods in connection with the absence of Ramsey, Farrell, and Towne. It was not shown that any money had been traced to either of these men from any source in connection with the matter; but it was claimed that a fund had been raised to be used for corrupt purposes, and that, on the assumption that such fund had been raised, it must at least in part have been used to bring about the absence of these three members of the legislature.

It was claimed that Senator Stephenson had entered into an arrangement with Edward Hines and R. J. Shields for using money for corrupt purposes to be furnished by Mr. Stephenson, and much hearsay testimony was introduced for the purpose of establishing such fact. There can be no question but what the effort to establish any such charge utterly failed. There was no evidence upon which any reasonable conclusion that such corruption fund had been either raised or used could be based.

The charge as to a meeting between the three absentees or some of them and Mr. Regan and Mr. Puelicher at the Plankington House in Milwaukee centered about the testimony taken before the legislative investigating committee of a witness, Frank T. Wagner, who was utterly discredited both at the legislative investigation and by testimony introduced before the subcommittee. It was shown that he is now under sentence in the penitentiary for perjury for having testified to seeing these men in the Plankington Hotel and hearing a conversation upon which the charge that they had entered into a corrupt bargain at that time rested. All the testimony in regard to such a transaction fell to the ground, and was so manifestly without foundation as to call for no consideration except its dismissal.

Charge of bribery of other members.

There seems to have been some remark on the part of Mr. Damochowski and Mr. Lyons as to the tender of money being made them in connection with this election, but on the witness stand they both stated that whatever statements they made in that regard were made in jest and that there was no foundation in truth for them.

Some sensational testimony was introduced in regard to statements made by Mr. R. J. Shields as to having received money or handled money in the interest of Mr. Stephenson in a corrupt manner in dealing with members of the legislature, and members of the senate legislative investigating committee had gone to the office of a certain attorney in Chicago and there met Mr. Wirt Cook, of Duluth, Minn., who recited to them some hearsay statements as to conversations and acts which were fully investigated by the subcommittee and found to be entirely without foundation.

We may therefore safely dismiss the charges of corruption in connection with the action of the legislature in electing Mr. Stephenson, whether such election is held to have been on January 26 or on March 4, 1909.

General campaign and election.

It appears that Mr. Stephenson contributed $2,000 to the Republican State central committee. Against this contribution no legitimate objection can be urged. It was not in violation of any law nor for other than general election purposes.

It was also shown by testimony that Mr. Stephenson before the primary gave money to C. C. Wellensgard, Levi H. Bancroft, and Thomas Reynolds, who were candidates for the legislature. These men testified that they used the money in the interest of Mr. Stephenson at the direct primaries. If we eliminate Mr. Stephenson from the direct primaries the contributions which he made to these candidates for nomination and election to the legislature would be in violation of no law. It appears from the testimony that they were at the time voluntary and ardent supporters of Mr. Stephenson regardless of any money which they may have received or which may have been placed in their hands by him for any purpose.

There is not sufficient evidence upon which to base a charge of bribery or any other charge that would affect the validity of the election of Mr. Stephenson in either of these cases.

Direct primary.

The subcommittee, in determining the scope of the investigation, was confronted with the question as to how far, if at all, the charges affecting the candidacy of Isaac Stephenson before the direct primary should be considered.

The State legislative committee had directed its attention principally to the direct primary and the conduct of the candidates therein.

It was doubtless competent for the legislature to provide for direct primaries for the nomination of candidates for the legislature and to place legal restrictions about them to secure the integrity of their elections, but, as herein elsewhere more fully stated, it is not competent for the legislature to provide for the nomination of candidates for the United States Senate at direct primaries.

The status of Mr. Stephenson at such primaries is not comparable to that of candidates for the legislature or for any State office.

The language of the resolution under which the subcommittee acted directs it to report whether "in the election of Isaac Stephenson there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices," and the language of the last paragraph of section 1 of the resolution, bringing the matter to the attention of the United States Senate, strictly construed, refers only to the election.

When we speak of the election of a United States Senator under existing constitutional and legislative provisions we contemplate only the election by the legislature of the State. There is as yet no recognition to be given extra-legislative proceedings in the nature of what is termed "direct primaries," no such method of selection being recognized by any law of the United States.

The subcommittee has, however, brought to the attention of the Senate in the record of its proceedings all the facts obtainable relating to the conduct of the primary. Should it be the judgment of the Senate that such facts are irrelevant, then the consideration would be limited to matters concerning the election of members of the legislature, and the acts and conduct of members of the legislature and candidates in relation to the election of a Senator by the legislature.

The direct primary, legally speaking, is no part of an election of a United States Senator. The duty of an election of a Senator does not under any law rest with the electorate, but is vested by the Constitution solely in the legislature. The legislature electing had no existence until after the general election. The nomination of such members at the primary vested in the nominees not even an inchoate status. A State may give force and effect to a direct primary law providing for the nomination of candidates for State or minor offices to be elected under the laws of the State, but the legislature has no power to regulate in any manner or to any extent the election of a United States Senator, and there is no such proceeding known under any law of the United States as the nomination of a candidate for the United States Senate.

The question arises, Can any act in contravention of a law that is absolutely void work a forfeiture of any right to an office vested through the compliance with the Constitution and laws of the United States? Did the proceedings preceding and at the direct primary relative to a choice for United States Senator amount to more than a "straw vote"?

The mere fact that the Legislature of Wisconsin had undertaken to include a senatorial selection within the provisions of its direct-primary law, in the absence of power to so legislate, could not affect the validity of an election by the legislature made pursuant to national law; this must be obvious from the fact that the legislature was not in duty bound to elect anyone or consider anyone a candidate for election because of the action of the direct primary. It might have ignored such action altogether, and its having done so would not in any way affect the validity of its action.

There is no law of the United States recognizing such a thing as "candidacy" for the United States Senate, and no legal status is given to the frame of mind constituting an intention on the part of a man or his friends that he become a candidate before the legislature.

The question also arises as to the period when a man can be charged with responsibility for his acts so as to affect the validity of his subsequent election by the legislature.

It frequently occurs that none of the men who are avowed candidates are chosen. The matter rests solely with the legislature, and under existing laws one legislature can not dictate the rule governing a subsequent legislature in the manner of its procedure relative to matters resting entirely within its discretion.

It would be entirely within the power of a legislature, charged with the responsibility of electing a United States Senator, before proceeding to elect a Senator, to repeal any legislation enacted by a previous legislature which placed a limit upon or directed its action.

It seems from this consideration of the question we must conclude that the direct-primary proceedings can not be held to affect the validity of an election by the legislature.

Failure to file proper expense account.

The fifteenth specific charge is based upon the failure or neglect of Isaac Stephenson to make and file an expense account under the laws of Wisconsin. This requirement is under section 270 of the election laws which provides that every person who shall be a candidate before any convention or at any primary or election to fill an office for which a nomination paper or certificate of nomination may be filed, shall, within 30 days after the election held to fill such office, make out and file with the officer empowered by law to issue the certificate of election to such office or place, a statement in writing, etc., and that any person failing to comply with this section shall be punished by fine of not less than $25 or more than $500. This being a penal statute, the validity of an election could not be affected by the failure to comply with it.

General comment.

The rule adopted by the several candidates for said office seems to have been unanimous in regard to filing expense accounts.

Senator Stephenson's expense account was $107,793.05.

S. A. Cook's expense account was $42,293.29.

William H. Hatton's expense account was $26,413.

Francis E. McGovern's expenditure was $11,063.88.

Neal Brown's expense account was $1,075.87.

The total expenditures of all candidates for the office of United States Senator before the primary election was about $225,000.

Less than one-half of the voters at the general election voted at the primary. The total vote cast in the Republican primaries for the nomination of United States Senator was 182,915, being 81 per cent of the total primary vote cast by all political parties for Senator.

The total vote cast in the Democratic Party for United States Senator was 37,479, or about 17 per cent of the total primary vote of all parties cast for Senator, and about 23 per cent of the total Democratic vote cast for governor at the general election.

Mr. Stephenson, a Republican candidate, received 56,909 votes.
Mr. Cook, a Republican candidate, received 47,825 votes.
Mr. McGovern, a Republican candidate, received 42,631 votes.
Mr. Hatton, a Republican candidate, received 35,552 votes.
Mr. Brown, a Democratic candidate, received 24,937 votes.
Mr. Hoyt, a Democratic candidate, received 12,227 votes.
Mr. Rummel, Social Democratic candidate, received 4,047 votes.

On the basis of the total vote received by each senatorial candidate and the total cost of each candidate's campaign:

Mr. Stephenson spent $1.89 for every vote cast for him.
Mr. Cook spent $0.88 for every vote cast for him.
Mr. Hatton spent $0.85 for every vote cast for him.
Mr. McGovern spent $0.26 for every vote cast for him.
Mr. Brown spent $0.42 for every vote cast for him.
Mr. Hoyt spent $0.16 for every vote cast for him.

And there was spent in behalf of Mr. Rummel, the Socialist Democratic candidate, about $1 per vote.

Were it possible to hold that Mr. Stephenson was subject to the same restrictions under the laws of Wisconsin as a candidate for a State office, we would feel compelled to enter more fully upon the nature and character of the expenditures made by him and on his behalf during the primary campaign.

The amount of money expended by Mr. Stephenson, Mr. Cook, Mr. Hatton, and Mr. McGovern in the primary campaign was so extravagant and the expenditures made by and on behalf of these gentlemen were made with such reckless disregard of propriety as to justify the sharpest criticism. Such expenditures were in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of Government, which contemplated the selection of candidates by the electors and not the selection of the electors by the candidate.

Regardless of any statute requiring that strict accounts be kept of money expended by and on behalf of candidates, a candidate and every man representing him should know that public opinion would expect the parties to place and maintain themselves in a position so that if any of their acts were questioned they could justify such acts to the extent of giving every detail in regard thereto.

While I do not believe that the law of Wisconsin could constitute any man a candidate or place him in the position of and under the responsibilities of a candidate for an office over which the State had no control and which was not to be filled under any law of the State, yet I feel impelled to critizise the acts of those in charge of the expenditure of the money of men who are called candidates for the Senate, and especially of Mr. Stephenson, in the irresponsible and reckless manner in which they disbursed the money furnished them by Mr. Stephenson during the period of the primary campaign.

The failure to keep detailed accounts, the destruction of memoranda, the shifting of records and papers concerning the campaign from one place to another, the adoption of mysterious methods and roundabout ways in regard to matters that might just as well have been performed in open daylight in the presence of the people, would go far toward creating the impression that there was some occasion for Mr. Stephenson's representatives to avoid candor and to obscure conditions.

The subcommitte has gone carefully through all of the letters and correspondence which had been in the hands of Mr. Stephenson and his managers and which had been shifted from Milwaukee to Marinette and from Marinette to points in Michigan, and back again, under most unusual and mysterious circumstances. These letters are not out of the ordinary political correspondence of campaign managers and citizens whose votes, influence, or services are solicited in behalf of a candidate.

The letters transmitting and acknowledging the receipt of money have been considered separately from those giving information in regard to political conditions and instructions in regard to how political work shall be done. There is nothing in the letters transmitting or acknowledging the receipt of money that would seem to add anything to the information given by witnesses in explaining these expenditures so far as they could explain them. The subcommittee has not thought it necessary to print this correspondence, which is in evidence and might be held to constitute a part of the record of the investigation. In our judgment, it would add nothing in the way of assistance to the committee in ascertaining the facts necessary and proper to be considered in connection with the investigation.

Were a candidate for a State office in Wisconsin to conduct a campaign in the manner in which the campaign of Mr. Stephenson, and of other men who sought election to the United States Senate, were conducted, it would be very difficult to justify such conduct under the laws of the State.

The joint senatorial primary investigating committee in its report (submitted Mar. 18, 1910, but never acted upon), after reviewing the testimony, says:

"Your committee believes that the Republican senatorial candidates and their managers did not deliberately plan to violate the law, but in their desire to win these candidates, particularly Stephenson, Cook, and Hatton, conducted their campaigns with the idea of getting results, and men were hired and money spent, and State officials and employees and members of the legislature were used without much regard to propriety. All of the Republican candidates probably spent all they could afford and the amount spent by the different candidates was probably limited more by their ability to spend than their appreciation of the moral effect of the expenditure of such large sums of money to secure the nomination."

This committee evidently looked upon the result of the direct primary as shown by the vote cast therein for each of the men who sought election to the United States Senate as constituting a legal nomination. I entertain a different view of that matter and look upon the primary nomination as a mere expression of a choice without legal effect, and do not recognize such expression as binding upon the legislature.

Conclusion.

The testimony clearly shows that the candidates felt compelled to spend more money than they wanted to spend. The pressure upon them from those who were undertaking to manage their campaigns seems to have been very great and persistent, but I can find nothing in the testimony nor in the circumstances or conditions surrounding the senatorial contest which resulted in the election of Mr. Stephenson that in my judgment would justify the committee in recommending that the seat be vacated, or that he be declared not legally elected to the United States Senate; and therefore I recommend that the Senate find that the charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, are not true, and that Isaac Stephenson be acquitted of such charges.

W. B. HEYBURN.

VIEWS OF MR. POMERENE AND MR. SUTHERLAND.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections authorized and directed its subcommittee "to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, and to report whether 'there was used or employed corrupt methods or practices' in his election."

Without intending to specifically enumerate the charges made or to review in extenso the evidence in support or in refutation thereof, it will be sufficient for our purpose to classify the charges and evidence pertaining thereto, as follows:

First, those connected with the proceedings of the legislature affecting the election; and,

Second, those growing out of the primary election.

Proceedings of the legislature.

Each house, pursuant to the Federal statute, convened for the election of the United States Senator on January 26, 1909. The senate consisted of 33 members and the assembly of 100 members. Thirty-three members of the senate were present, and, before balloting, passed a resolution providing that "any senator who does not wish to vote for a candidate may vote by answering 'present.'" The roll was called, and 17 senators voted for candidates, 12 of whom voted for Isaac Stephenson. The 16 other senators simply voted "present." In other words, a quorum, in the language of the statute, voted for "one person for Senator in Congress," and of this quorum Isaac Stephenson received a majority. While the vote "present" of the 16 senators was in accordance with the resolution passed, we do not believe it could either add to or detract from the requirements of the statute. All members, no doubt, should have voted for "some person," but 16 voted "present," which was equivalent to a blank vote.

In the language of the majority of the committee in Ransom v. Abbott, "Senate Election Cases," page 400, "The vote must be for a person, not a blank—in fact, not for a myth, but for a person."

Without intending to review the authorities it is clearly established that "votes knowingly cast for a candidate who can not possibly exercise the function of the office if elected are thrown away." (State ex rel. Bancroft v. Frear, 144 Wis., 87.) And, if this be true, it must follow that a mere vote of "present" is nothing more than a vote for "no person," or, in other words, a "blank," and should not, therefore, be counted in determining whether Senator Stephenson received a majority of the quorum of those who voted for "one person for Senator," and thereby complied with the letter and spirit of the statute.

For other authorities bearing upon this proposition see Sawyer v. Makie, 149 Mass., 269; "Cooley on Constitution Limitations," 932, Note 1; Rushville Gas Co. v. Rushville, 6 L. R. A., 315; Hopkins v. Duluth, 81 Minn., 189; and Commonwealth v. Cluley, 56 Pa. St., 270.

On the same day in the assembly 82 votes out of the 100 assemblymen were cast, and Isaac Stephenson received 60 out of the 82 votes. He, therefore, received, in our judgment, "a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house." The vote thus cast was entered upon the journal of the senate and of the house. In conformity with the provisions of the Federal statute, the members of the two houses convened at 12 o'clock noon, on the day following, in joint assembly. The journal of each house was read, and showed the result of the balloting on the previous day in each house separately, as hereinbefore stated. Having received a majority of all of the votes cast in each house, it was the duty of the presiding officer to declare Senator Stephenson duly elected. This was purely a ministerial duty, and the mere fact that he failed to perform that duty could not, under any legal principle, undo that which was legally done in the separate and joint sessions, and, except for this failure of the presiding officer, was completely done.

Instead of declaring the result, over the protest of Senator Hudnall, a ballot was ordered and taken on that day and on each succeeding day until and including the 4th day of March, 1909. Prior to March 4 no one in any of the sessions received a majority of the votes cast. On March 4 there were 123 votes cast, of which Isaac Stephenson received 63, and he was then declared duly elected.

Charges of corruption in action of general assembly.

Charges of corruption were made to the effect that—

(a) Assemblyman Leuch was offered money to go upon the floor and vote for the purpose of effecting a quorum;

(b) That Assemblyman Joseph Damochowski had been offered $1,500 for his vote; and

(c) That Assemblymen Farrel, Ramsey, and Towne absented themselves from the joint session of the joint assembly on March 4 through corrupt influences.

Charge as to Assemblyman Leuch.

He testified that David H. Davies, on March 1, 1909, said: "I have authority to tell you that you can have anything you want if you will stay in the joint convention to-day and vote." Mr. Davies denied having any such conversation, and swore that he neither authorized nor was in a position to pay or promise Mr. Leuch anything whatsoever. Whether this conversation occurred or not, there is no evidence connecting it directly with Senator Stephenson, or even indirectly through any authorized agent.

Charge as to Assemblyman Damochowski.

There was testimony to the effect that Joseph A. Damochowski had said to several parties that he had been offered $1,500 for his vote in the assembly. He admitted that he had so stated upon several occasions, but in explanation thereof said that any statements he made to that effect were in jest, and that no such offer was in fact made. Outside of these admitted statements, there was no evidence either that any bribe had been offered to or received by him, and no evidence tending to connect Senator Stephenson or his managers with this alleged attempt to bribe.

Members absenting themselves on March 4.

On March 4, 123 members of the joint assembly were present and voting. Sixty-three members being a majority of those voting, cast their ballots for Mr. Stephenson, and, having for the first time received a majority of those voting in the joint session, he was duly declared elected.

We think it is fair to say that the record shows that an effort was made by some of the friends of Mr. Stephenson either to pair some of those who were opposed to Stephenson's election with those who were absent and favorable to his election, or to secure the absence of those who were opposed to his election, for the purpose of reducing the number who might be in the joint session and voting, and thereby enable those who were favorable to his election to have a majority of the votes cast.

Richard J. White, a friend of Mr. Stephenson, succeeded in pairing Ramsey, a Democrat, who was opposed to Stephenson's election, with Mr. Fenelon, who was a supporter of Mr. Stephenson and because of sickness was not able to attend the session.

Towne, a Democrat, left the chamber just before the voting began and was taken into a cloakroom by C. C. Wayland, one of Mr. Stephenson's lieutenants, and there held in conversation while the balloting was going on, and we have no doubt that Wayland purposely detained him, and Towne—to say the least—was indifferent about the situation.

Farrel left the assembly room before the roll was called and went to a café for luncheon, and did not return until sometime after the result of the election had been declared. The absence of Towne and Farrel while the joint assembly was in session is not consistent with their duties as assemblymen, nor is their explanation satisfactory. But, whatever the facts may be, there is no evidence in the record, nor any obtainable, so far as the committee knows, which would justify the conclusion that the absence of any of these three men was secured by corrupt means. It was necessary for Ramsey, Farrel, and Towne all to have been present and voting in order to prevent Stephenson from having a majority vote in the session. The other seven absentees were satisfactorily accounted for, and no suspicion, so far as we know, attaches to them.

We therefore conclude:

First, that the election in fact occurred on January 26, 1909; and

Second, that there is no evidence justifying the conclusion that corrupt "methods or practices" were employed in securing the vote on March 4, 1909, even if it should be held that the election took place on March 4.

Primary election irregularities.

Senator Stephenson's account filed with the secretary of state shows that there was expended by him and through his committee in connection with the primary election $107,793.05. He received 56,909 votes, which cost him $1.89 for every vote cast.

These expenditures, for the purpose of this report, may be divided into the following classes:

First, moneys paid out to persons employed by him or in his behalf to circulate nomination papers in order to get the number of signatures required by the Wisconsin statutes before his name could be placed upon the ticket.

Second, moneys paid out as follows:

(a) to newspapers for political advertising;

(b) for editorial support;

(c) for lithographs, campaign material, postage, telephone, telegraph, and express charges;

(d) office expenses, including rent, clerk hire, and assistants.

Third, payment for services of speakers, hall rent, music, and for men devoting their time and efforts in cultivating Stephenson sentiment throughout the State;

Fourth, moneys expended for workers at the polls, and for conveyances and services in getting out the voters;

Fifth, for drinks and cigars;

Sixth, money given to C. C. Wellensgard, L. L. Bancroft, and Thomas Reynolds, who were candidates for the legislature, to be used by them in the interest of Senator Stephenson;

Seventh, money paid to the game warden, John W. Stone, for use in the Senator's campaign;

Eighth, $2,000 contributed by Senator Stephenson to the State campaign committee for general election purposes; and Ninth, expenses incurred during the session of the general assembly in opening and maintaining headquarters at Madison from the beginning of the session until after March 4, 1909, and for hotel bills and traveling expenses.

No part of the contribution to the general campaign committee or the expenses incident to the headquarters during the session of the general assembly were ever reported to the secretary of state.

The above we believe to fairly represent the different classes of expenditure, which were disclosed by the evidence.

There was no evidence before the committee from which it could be fairly concluded that any of this money was expended for "corrupt methods or practices," unless those recited are to be construed as corrupt under the provisions of the Wisconsin statutes.

Management of the campaign.

The testimony showed that Senator Stephenson had on deposit in the Marshall & Illsley Bank $50,000, which was used in the campaign, with other added as required. His campaign was in charge of E. A. Edmonds, J. H. Puelicher, and Rodney Sackett.

There are 71 counties in the State and 2,200 election precincts. The method of the managers was to employ a lieutenant or campaign manager in each of the counties. In several instances one man had charge of a number of counties. Arrangements were made with these managers by which sums of money would be placed in their hands varying from $100 or several hundred dollars to several thousand dollars. In some instances the manager was not given, and would not accept, compensation for his services. In others definite arrangements were made for the amount of compensation the manager was to receive, and in many cases the manager would determine and retain for himself such sum or sums as he deemed proper. It is quite clear that a very substantial part of the money expended in the organization of the several counties never went beyond the pockets of those who received it. The money expended by these managers, so far as the testimony discloses, was for one or more or all of the purposes above described.

Wisconsin election statutes.

The Wisconsin statutes defining election offenses are fully set forth on pages 10, 11, and 12 of the views submitted by Senator Heyburn, chairman of the subcommittee, and it will not be necessary, therefore, to insert them here.

Application of the law to the facts—Nomination papers.

Before a candidate for office is entitled to have his name placed upon the ticket at a primary, the Wisconsin statute requires that petitions or nomination papers shall be filed, signed by at least 1 per cent of the voters of his party in at least each of six counties in the State, and in the aggregate not less than 1 per cent nor more than 10 per cent of the total vote of his party in the State.

The testimony shows that Senator Stephenson hired and paid men to circulate his nomination papers in order to get the required number of signatures, but there was no evidence showing that any money was paid, in the language of the statute, to induce anyone to sign his nomination papers, and we do not think it was seriously claimed by those who were interested in the instigation of these proceedings that any money was unlawfully expended for this purpose.

Expenditures of money during the primary campaign.

Was it a violation of the statute to pay out money for political advertising in the newspapers, or for editorial support, or for lithographs, campaign material, or for telegraph, telephone, or express charges, or for office expenses, including rent and hire of assistants, or for the hiring of speakers, halls, rent, music, and for men devoting their time and efforts in cultivating Stephenson sentiment throughout the State, or to pay workers at the polls, or for conveyances and services in getting out the voters, or for money for drinks and cigars given in a social way during the campaign?

A careful examination of the bribery statutes of Wisconsin will indicate clearly that the expenditures of money of the character recited only comes within the inhibitions thereof, when they are made corruptly, unless section 298 forbids it. This section reads:

"Every person who, by bribery or corrupt or unlawful means, prevents or attempts to prevent any voter from attending or voting at any caucus mentioned in this act, or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any officer, inspector, or delegate, whose office is created by this act, or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any elector as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to such caucus or convention * * * shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc."

None of these expenditures can come within any of the provisions of this section, unless it be a violation of this language: "or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any elector as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to such caucus or convention."

It should be stated that by sections 39 and 40 of the election laws of Wisconsin the criminal penalties applying to a caucus and elections are made applicable to primary elections.

If the words "to give any valuable thing" are to be given a comprehensive and literal interpretation, and to prohibit the giving or offering of "any valuable thing," "as a consideration for some act" to be done, it would not have been necessary to write into the statute the words "or bribe," because the former expression would include the latter. The purpose of the statute is evidently to prohibit corrupt giving.

"Words of a general import in the statute are limited by words of restricted import immediately following and relating to the same subject." (36 Cyc., 1119, Nance v. Southern R. R. Co., 149 N. C., 366.)

"In interpreting a statute, where the language is of doubtful meaning, the court will reject an interpretation which would make the statute harsh, oppressive, inequitable, or unduly restrictive of primary private rights." (Nance v. Southern R. R. Co., 149 N. C., 366.) To the same effect, State ex rel. v. Jackson, 168 Indiana, 389.

Again, section 4543–C requires the filing of accounts of expenditures of a candidate. This must contemplate that there are expenditures which can not in any wise be regarded as a violation of the Wisconsin laws. If a literal interpretation is to be given to the words, "any valuable thing * * * as a consideration for some act to be done," and some expenditures be prohibited, whether morally corrupt or incorrupt, would the legislature require the candidate to convict himself by filing an account? This is a criminal statute, and it must be strictly construed against the State and in favor of the defendant when charged with its violation.

Applying these rules, therefore, it would seem that the statute prohibited the giving of any valuable thing corruptly or in the nature of a bribe.

We have no sympathy whatever with the expenditure of money in excessive amounts, whether in a senatorial or any other political campaign. That an expenditure of $107,793.05 is an excessive amount to be spent in the candidacy of the office of United States Senator, which pays a salary for six years' service amounting to $45,000, goes without question; that it is demoralizing and should be prevented can not be denied; that some of this money might have been spent corruptly may, for the sake of the argument, be conceded, but it is not sufficient that possible or even probable corruption or bribery exists. The evidence must show it, and this case, like all other cases, must be determined from the facts as they are disclosed in the trial and under the law as it then existed. The committee, proceeding upon the assumption that the expenditure of so large a sum of money required the fullest investigation and explanation, probed every rumor and followed every clue which was brought to its attention, with the result that no evidence was discovered which would justify the conclusion that any of this sum of money was corruptly or illegally spent.

At the time of this primary there was no statute, either State or National, limiting the amount of expenditures. There is no judicial or legislative decision, so far as we are advised, limiting the amount which may be legally expended. Can we, in the face of the fact that the Congress of the United States and the General Assembly of the State of Wisconsin prior to this election failed to limit election expenditures, now arbitrarily determine that because this sum was spent it was illegally and fraudulently expended, and therefore vacate the Senator's seat? Can it be said that the expenditure of such a sum is in contravention of a public policy which must be given the force and effect of a statute? If so, where does public policy draw the line between what shall be a legal and an illegal amount? The situation is unfortunate, but the Congress and the State legislature are to blame for not having limited the expenses by statute. Laws can not be enforced retroactively, and surely this case must be decided in accordance with what the law then was and not in accordance with what the law ought to be. Since that election the State of Wisconsin has limited the amount of expenditure in a senatorial campaign to $7,500 and the Federal Government has limited it to $10,000.

Effect of the primary law.

It is strenuously argued on behalf of Senator Stephenson that even if the primary law of Wisconsin was violated its provisions are unconstitutional, because section 3 of Article I of the Federal Constitution provides that Senators shall be chosen by the legislature and because section 4 gives Congress the right to prescribe the time and manner of holding elections for Senators, and that this power has been exercised by the Congress in the manner prescribed by sections 14 and 15 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Wisconsin primary law, in substance, provides (chap. 451, Laws of 1903) as follows:

"Party candidates for the office of United States Senator shall be nominated as other State officers. (Subdivision 3 of sec. 2.) Nomination papers for candidates for the office of United States Senator shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. (Subdivision 1 of sec. 6.) The person receiving the greatest number of votes at the primary as the candidate of the party for the office voted for shall be the candidate of that party for such office (subdivision 1, sec. 18), and the secretary of state is required to publish in the official State paper a statement of the result of the canvass of the primary as soon as the same is certified to him."

These are all of the requirements found in the Wisconsin law pertaining to the nomination of party candidates for the office of United States Senators.

May the people of a sovereign State not provide for a method of expressing their sentiment in the selection of a Senator who shall represent that State in the United States Senate? May they not petition in such form and manner as to them may seem proper? And if it is their desire to so petition, may they not prescribe the method of petitioning so as to make the result of this petition, whether it be in the form of a letter to the members of the general assembly or in the form of a primary, an honest expression of their views?

The constitutionality of the above provisions of the Wisconsin law was passed upon by the supreme court of that State in the case of State ex rel. Van Alstine v. Frear (142 Wisc., 320). On page 349 Barnes, J., in delivering the opinion of the majority of the court, says:

"Our constitutions, State and National, guarantee the right of petition. Every citizen of the State has the right to petition the legislature asking that the candidate of his choice be elected United States Senator. Every citizen of a senatorial or assembly district has the right to petition his local representative to the same effect. The lawmaker is thus advised of public sentiment, a potent factor for him to consider in connection with other matters in arriving at a conclusion. Wherein does the primary nomination for United States Senator differ from the exercise of the right of petition? The legislative candidate is thereby informed of something that he has the right to know and of something that it is his duty to heed. He may not regard the verdict at the polls as obligatory, but should treat it as advisory. Moral suasion may be a perfectly legitimate agency to employ even in the election of a United States Senator. That the electors in the exercise of their guaranteed right of petition might do in substance and effect what they now do at the primaries hardly admits of controversy. The framers of the Constitution could not have supposed that there was any impropriety in the people advising their representatives of how they desired them to vote on the senatorship, else an exception would have been incorporated in the clause guaranteeing the right of petition, restricting its application to matters other than the election of United States Senators."

It will be conceded that while the result of a primary election, under the present constitutional provisions, could not control the State senators and representatives in their choice of an United States Senator, would not an expression of the will of the people at a primary election have great weight with their representatives in casting their votes? And if this be so, ought not the primary election held to declare this choice be carefully guarded by suitable penalties? We have no hesitancy in saying that if the evidence disclosed the use of corrupt methods at the primaries, it would affect the result of the election by the general assembly, and the Senate would be justified in taking cognizance of that fact and unseating any Senator who was thus delinquent.

Moneys given to candidates for the legislature.

The testimony disclosed that Senator Stephenson, before the primary, gave money to C. C. Wellensgard, L. H. Bancroft, and Thomas Reynolds, who were then candidates for the legislature. They did not live in the same district or county with Mr. Stephenson. They were his personal friends. The money was given them to be used in behalf of Senator Stephenson for the nomination as the Republican candidate for Senator.

It may be said that this money was probably used by these men to further their own interests, as well as to further the interests of Mr. Stephenson. But whether it was so used or not, there is no evidence that it was so used or that it was given to them for that purpose.

On the contrary, the affirmative and uncontradicted testimony is all to the effect that this money was used strictly in the interest of Mr. Stephenson and none of it to further the interest of any of the legislative candidates.

Money paid to Game Warden John W. Stone.

Mr. Stephenson's campaign managers gave to John W. Stone, the game warden of the State, $2,849.50 for campaign purposes. This was distributed among a number of the deputy game wardens; he retained some portion of it himself, and in testifying before the legislative committee falsely stated the amount he had paid out.

Section 990–28 (sec. 28, ch. 363, 1905) provides:

"No officer, agent, clerk, or employee under the government of the State shall directly or indirectly solicit or receive or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution, or political service, whether voluntary or involuntary, for any political purpose whatever from any officer, agent, clerk, or employee of the State."

This statute makes it an offense for any officer, agent, clerk, or employee under the government of the State to solicit or receive any assessment, subscription, or contribution, or political service from any officer, agent, clerk, or employee of the State. It is clear that this statute was not violated by Senator Stephenson, since he was not an officer, agent, clerk, or employee of the State. Moreover, the statute makes it an offense on the part of the recipient of the fund only. No offense is committed by the donor. It is true, the money should not have been paid to the game warden, and the giving of it does not show that fine discrimination which ought to be characteristic of men who are engaged in a campaign of this character. No law was violated by the donor, and this election can not be declared illegal because this expenditure was made.

Filing of accounts.

Section 4543–C of the revised statutes of Wisconsin requires the making out, and filing with the secretary of state, a statement in writing, subscribed and sworn to by the candidate "setting forth in detail each item in excess of five dollars in money, or property contributed, disbursed, expended, or promised by him, and to the best of his knowledge and belief by any other person or persons for him, or in his behalf, wholly or in part in endeavoring to secure or in any way in connection with his nomination or election to such office or place, or in connection with the election of any other person at said election, the dates when, and the persons to whom, and the purpose for which all said sums were paid, expended, or promised by such candidates in any sum or sums whatever."

No account whatever was filed of the amount contributed by Mr. Stephenson to the State campaign committee, nor of the amount expended during the session of the general assembly. The account which was filed of the expenses incurred in connection with the primary did not comply with the law in that it lumped the expenses; gave the names of but very few of the persons to whom money was paid; did not give the dates when expended, nor as fully as contemplated by the statutes the purposes for which expended. The account as filed was approved by the general counsel of Mr. Stephenson without any examination of the statute, and simply because it conformed with certain accounts, which had been filed by prominent candidates for other offices. A careful examination of this account justifies the belief that it was purposely drawn so as to give to the public as little information as possible.

The penalty for failing to comply with this statute is a fine only, and it does not provide for the forfeiture of the office. If it did, the statute to that extent would be unconstitutional, but Mr. Stephenson, because of his failure to file a proper account, has violated the statute and is subject to a fine. However, he must be absolved from any moral delinquency, because in the preparation and filing of his account he consulted with counsel, and followed their advice, and if it was not properly done they were to blame rather than he.

In addition to this, the validity of the election which had already taken place could not be affected by the failure to thereafter perform some act enjoined by the State statute. The election was already an accomplished fact and its validity must be determined by the facts theretofore or then existing. Anything done thereafter can not be regarded as a substantive ground for invalidating the election. Its only evidential value would be in reflecting light upon or as giving color to the preexisting facts.

After a careful consideration of all the evidence and the law, we had no hesitancy in joining in the report presented by the subcommittee.

We heartily approve these words of Senator Heyburn:

"The amount of money spent by Mr. Stephenson, Mr. Cook, Mr. Hatton, and Mr. McGovern in the primary campaign was so extravagant, and the expenditures made by and on behalf of these gentlemen were made with such reckless disregard of propriety, as to justify the sharpest criticism. Such expenditures were in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of Government, which contemplated the selection of candidates by the electors and not the selection of the electors by the candidate.

"Regardless of any statute requiring that strict accounts be kept of money expended by and on behalf of candidates, a candidate and every man representing him should know that public opinion would expect the parties to place and maintain themselves in a position so that if any of their acts were questioned they could justify such acts to the extent of giving every detail in regard thereto.

"While I do not believe that the law of Wisconsin could constitute any man a candidate or place him in the position of and under the responsibilities of a candidate for an office over which the State had no control and which was not to be filled under any law of the State, yet I feel impelled to criticize the acts of those in charge of the expenditure of money of men who are called candidates for the Senate, and especially of Mr. Stephenson, in the irresponsible and reckless manner in which they disbursed the money furnished them by Mr. Stephenson during the period of the primary campaign.

"The failure to keep detailed accounts, the destruction of memoranda, the shifting of records and papers concerning the campaign from one place to another, the adoption of mysterious methods and roundabout ways in regard to matters that might just as well have been performed in open daylight in the presence of people, would go far toward creating the impression that there was some occasion for Mr. Stephenson's representatives to avoid candor and to obscure conditions."

While we have no doubt as to the correctness of the subcommittee's finding, we do not want it to be understood that we question the propriety of filing charges challenging the validity of the election or of the making demand for an investigation either by the General Assembly of Wisconsin or by the United States Senate.

An enormous sum of money had been expended. Messrs. Edmunds and Sacket, who were in charge of the campaign as Mr. Stephenson's managers, knew of the statute requiring the filing of an account of their expenditures. They destroyed all original records of accounts, though they kept what purported to be copies. They grouped these items and amounts in such a way that they gave no knowledge whatever to the public except the totals of each class of expenditures. The account was not filed until the last moment permitted by the statute.

Mr. Puelicher, a banker, acted as treasurer. He did not open an account as depositors usually do. He received remittances, kept private memoranda, paid out cash, and made disbursements of these funds, but kept no record thereof upon the bank's books. No other customer's funds, either before or since, were received or disbursed in a similar way. There was an air of mystery about the entire affair.

After the investigation by the committee of the general assembly was started Mr. Stephenson's local counsel had such records and correspondence as had not already been destroyed moved out of the State for the purpose of keeping them beyond the jurisdiction of the general assembly.

It may be said in passing, however, that the accounts were kept on card indexes, and Mr. Sacket gives as a reason for destroying them that they were made with lead pencil in many cases, and the writing was practically obliterated, so that he made copies and then destroyed the originals (record, p. 161) because they were cumbersome and inconvenient (p. 523). And it may be further said that there seems to have been no substantial reason for moving the correspondence out of the State. It was all before the committee, and an examination failed to disclose anything of an inculpatory or improper character which would render any concealment necessary.

Can there be any wonder that the public became suspicious and the members of the general assembly, out of a decent sense of self-respect, should demand a thorough investigation?

If Mr. Stephenson has been put to great expense and trouble, it is due, first, to the reckless expenditure of this large sum of money, and, second, to the studied and mysterious efforts of his managers and local attorneys to conceal the facts, up to and during the investigation before the joint committee of the general assembly, and the separate committee of the State senate.

But out of all this scandal and trouble much good has come. Public sentiment was aroused. The unlimited use of money has been condemned, and stringent corrupt-practices acts have been adopted, both by the General Assembly of the State of Wisconsin and by the Congress of the United States.

ATLEE POMERENE.
GEO. SUTHERLAND.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 48, pp. 1946–1953.)

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 19, 1912.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Jones (for himself, Mr. Clapp, Mr. Kenyon, Mr. Kern, and Mr. Lea), from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following views of the minority (Rept. No. 349, pt. 2), to accompany Senate resolution 136:

In the primary election at which Mr. Stephenson was nominated for Senator pursuant to the Wisconsin law, the candidates expended the following sums:

Neal Brown	$1,075.87
Francis E. McGovern	11,063.88
William H. Hatton	26,413.00
S. A. Cook	42,293.29
Senator Stephenson	107,793.05

In all, about $225,000 on the part of candidates for the Senate alone.

Referring to these expenditures, the majority report says:

"The amount of money expended by Mr. Stephenson, Mr. Cook, Mr. Hatton, and Mr. McGovern in the primary campaign was so extravagant and the expenditures made by and on behalf of these gentlemen were made with such reckless disregard of propriety as to justify the sharpest criticism. Such expenditures were in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of government, which contemplated the selection of candidates by the electors and not the selection of electors by the candidate."

We concur in this statement, and it justifies us in opposing the conclusion of the majority. How a seat in the Senate can be secured "in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of government," with the evidence showing the use of such a large sum of money, and not be tainted by corrupt methods and practices we are unable to comprehend. The question now squarely before the Senate is whether or not methods and practices "in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of government" shall be denounced by our words and approved by our votes.

The majority report also says:

"Were a candidate for a State office in Wisconsin to conduct a campaign in the manner in which the campaign of Mr. Stephenson and of other men who sought election to the United States Senate were conducted, it would be very difficult to justify such conduct under the laws of the State."

This statement we indorse. It warrants our opposition to the conclusion of the majority. If it would be difficult to justify a campaign like this by a candidate for a State office, why is it not equally difficult to justify it on the part of Senator Stephenson? He was not compelled to go into the primary. He elected to do so, and he should be held to the same degree of accountability as any other candidate in that primary.

If he used methods—and the majority says he did—that it would be difficult to justify in behalf of a State candidate, then it is equally difficult for the Senate to justify such conduct on the part of a candidate for a seat in this body and preserve its integrity and honor. In our judgment it can not do it.

Admitted facts.

The following may be taken as admitted facts in this case: Three men were selected as managers by Senator Stephenson; money was placed in their hands from time to time as called for to the amount of over $107,000; they were not asked how they expended it, nor for what purpose; no accounting was requested; they paid it out in various sums to different individuals in different wards, precincts, and counties; large sums were paid to different individuals holding official positions, and to individuals recognized to be leaders, and to others of prominence in different organizations; no directions were given to these men how the money should be expended; no reports were required and no knowledge obtained as to how they spent the money or for what purpose; men were hired for the ostensible purpose of going over the country talking Stephenson and creating Stephenson sentiment; men, whose occupations led them into different sections of the country, were paid large sums of money for talking for Stephenson on their travels; men were paid three, five, and ten dollars per day to be at the polls on election day, or to haul voters to the polls; large sums were paid leaders in different wards and precincts to look after their wards and precincts; hundreds of dollars were spent for treating to cigars, liquors, meals, etc., as much as $135 in one day by one man; money was paid to candidates for the legislature, at least three of whom were nominated and elected; detailed expenditures were not kept; memoranda were destroyed; records and papers concerning the campaign were shifted from one place to another; mysterious methods and roundabout ways were employed; original records were destroyed; items and amounts were grouped in such a way as to give no knowledge to the public except the amount of each class of expenditures; a banker acted as treasurer; no account was opened as is usually done by depositors; remittances were received, private memoranda kept, cash disbursements of funds made, but no record was kept on the bank's books, and when the committee of the general assembly started to investigate local counsel for Mr. Stephenson had such records and correspondence as had not already been destroyed moved out of the State, for the purpose of keeping them beyond the jurisdiction of the general assembly.

All this is admitted, and we feel that we have a right to assume from these admitted facts and actions that corrupt methods and practices were used in connection with said primary election. To hold otherwise is to establish a precedent that would authorize an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars to debauch the electorate in order to secure a seat in this body. To do this is to notify the world that we are careless as to whether or not seats in this body are to be bought and sold as so much merchandise to the man with the largest purse. To do so is to say to the man of millions eager for place, power, and honor, "Spend as much of your millions as you please to secure a seat here and no question will be made if you claim it was expended within the law." As was said by Senator Hoar and Senator Frye, in regard to the facts before them in the Payne case, "No more fatal blow can be struck at the Senate or at the purity and permanence of the republican Government itself than the establishment of this precedent."

The expenditure of such a sum of money at a primary election on behalf of one candidate in itself shocks the judgment and conscience of honest men generally, and disbursed as disclosed by the record in this case is conclusive proof of corrupt methods and practices.

The primary.

The power to inquire into the practices and methods employed in the primary election is questioned. The majority in this case find that we have this power, and with that conclusion we agree. In this we are fully sustained by principle and precedent, and by the terms of the resolution under which the committee acted, which authorized and directed the committee "to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, and report to the Senate whether in the election of said Isaac Stephenson as a Senator of the United States from the said State of Wisconsin there were used corrupt methods and practices." The charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin affected not only the election by the legislature itself, but also the primary election.

It appears by the record that several candidates for the legislature announced during their candidacy that, if elected, they would vote for the candidate for Senator receiving the highest vote at the primary. If the primary choice was secured by corrupt methods and practices, would not the vote in the legislature secured thereby be corrupt, however innocent the member casting it? Several members of the legislature announced when they voted for Stephenson that they did so solely because he was the primary choice. If the primary was carried by corrupt methods and practices, these votes were corrupt, though honestly cast, and if the Senate can not inquire into such corrupt methods and practices, then the power given to us to judge of elections of our Members is a mere shadow. That we have this power is in accord not only with reason and justice, but is sustained by precedent.

The case of Mr. Caldwell, found at page 429, Senate Election Cases, is in point. In this case an arrangement was made by Mr. Caldwell with Thomas Carney under which Mr. Carney agreed not to be a candidate for United States Senator before the Legislature of Kansas and should give his influence and support for Mr. Caldwell. Mr. Caldwell was to pay him $15,000. Mr. Carney was not a candidate before the legislature and did use his influence to secure the election of Mr. Caldwell. Was such an arrangement corrupt? The committee said:

"It was an attempt to buy the votes of the members of the legislature, not by bribing them directly, but through the manipulations of another. The purchase money was not to go to them, but to Mr. Carney, who was to sell and deliver them without their knowledge. That Mr. Caldwell did procure the votes of members of the legislature, friends of Mr. Carney, ignorant of the fact that Mr. Carney was making merchandise of his political character and influence and of their friendship for him, for which he was to receive a large sum of money, the evidence leaves no reasonable doubt.

"Buying off opposing candidates, and in that way securing the votes of all or the most of their friends, is in effect buying the office. It recognizes candidacy for office as a merchantable commodity—a thing having a money value—and is as destructive to the purity and freedom of elections as the direct bribery of members of the legislature."

When candidates for the legislature announce that they will vote for the choice of the primary for Senator, then to buy or corrupt the primary is to buy the member of the legislature; and if it was corrupt to buy off a candidate for the Senate and thereby secure the votes of his friends, it is also corrupt to buy the primary and thereby secure the votes of those who announce that they will be controlled by the primary; and if the Senate can go outside of the proceedings of the legislature and investigate corruption in preventing men from being candidates for the Senate before the legislature, then it can certainly investigate methods and proceedings in the primary.

In the Payne case (Senate Election Cases, p. 711) three of the committee of seven say:

"We, in our conclusion, made no distinction between the use of fraud, corruption, or bribery in a caucus vote or in the legislative vote for a Senator. Although a caucus, or what proceeds in it, has no constitutional or legal relation to the election of a Senator, yet by the habit of political parties, the stage of determination as to who is to be elected Senator, and the influences, proper or improper, that produce that determination, is that which precedes and is concluded in the caucus. So far as the question of personal delinquency or turpitude is concerned, no moral distinction should be made between corrupt proceedings in caucus and those in the legislature. How far any such distinction would need to be insisted upon in any case, on the question of unseating a Senator, where he himself was not affected with any personal misconduct or complicity with the misconduct of others, we have no occasion, in the immediate case or attitude of the subject, to consider or suggest."

Senators Hoar and Frye, in the same case, in their minority views at page 715, say:

"If B, C, and D have promised to vote as A shall vote, if A be corrupted, four votes are gained by the process, although B, C, and D be innocent. In looking, therefore, to see whether an election by the legislature was procured or effected by bribery, it may be very important to discover whether that bribery procured the nomination of a caucus whose action a majority of the legislature were bound in honor to support."

John W. Stone.

John W. Stone was State game warden and had many deputies acting under him. Their position gave them an influence they would not have as individuals, and their duties required them to travel over the State. It was desirable to have their active support. Senator Stephenson personally directed that $2,500 be turned over to Stone. This was done without any specific directions as to its use, and the money was distributed over the State where and in the manner that it was thought would do the most good. While this action may not be a direct violation of the letter of any State law, in our judgment it was a corrupt practice.

Extracts from testimony.

We submit the following extracts from the testimony as illustrative of the methods and practices pursued in the distribution of this large sum of money for campaign purposes:

Primary—Stephenson would fix no limit, but said go on and conduct the campaign, etc.

Mr. EDMONDS. In my talk with Senator Stephenson I wanted to learn from him the amount of money he expected to expend. He seemed to think that too much money was being expended. I endeavored to have him fix an amount, so that we would not exceed it. This he declined to do, and I endeavored to show him the difficulty of conducting a campaign without knowing how much I might be allowed to expend; but I was not able to get him to state, and he said to go on and conduct the campaign—"use your best ability in conducting it," and left it in that way.

Senator Stephenson.

Senator POMERENE. Did they advise you from time to time as to how they were expending this money?

Senator STEPHENSON. Not as a rule; no, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Did you ask for any report from them from time to time as to how they were expending this money?

Senator STEPHENSON. No, sir. I had confidence in Mr. Edmonds and Mr. Puelicher and my bankers, and I have yet.

Senator POMERENE. Referring to this letter of August 4, it was made known to you that to carry out Mr. Edmonds's plan he needed more money?

Senator STEPHENSON. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Did you at that time take up with him the matter as to the amount which you felt disposed to put into the campaign?

Senator STEPHENSON. I can not say as to that. We telephoned some. I think I was in the headquarters only twice, and not to exceed an hour altogether, during the entire campaign. I was not in Milwaukee but about three times.

Senator POMERENE. In other words, we are to understand, then, that you left the entire management of this campaign to your campaign managers, and about all you did was to furnish the sinews of war?

Senator STEPHENSON. Yes.

Two thousand five hundred dollars paid to Stone, game warden.

The CHAIRMAN. We will pass that. Now we come to another item, "Cash to J. W. Stone, $2,500." Who was Mr. Stone?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Stone was game warden of Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know him personally before the payment of this $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I had met him.

The CHAIRMAN. Or at the time?

Mr. EDMONDS. I had met him.

The CHAIRMAN. You paid him the money, did you not, in cash?

Mr. EDMONDS. Through my instructions.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you not pay it to him in cash yourself?

Mr. EDMONDS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Sacket says he did.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Sacket paid it in cash. Where did he get the cash? Did you give it to him?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I did not have the cash.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Sacket had no cash in the campaign, did he?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Sacket could get the cashier's check from the bank.

The CHAIRMAN. He had to get it from you, or on your credit?

Mr. EDMONDS. Sure; I told them to give it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you did tell him to get it?

Mr. EDMONDS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us see if we can get at a candid statement of the occasion of the payment of this $2,500 to the State game warden. You know all about it, do you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. About his getting the money?

The CHAIRMAN. You know all the details of that game-warden proposition, do you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter has been investigated in such a way as to fix it in your mind, has it not?

Mr. EDMONDS. It was not necessary, because I remembered the details.

The CHAIRMAN. Remembered it all?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir; there were some things I did not remember, but some details I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. I would hardly expect to receive a reply if you do not know in regard to Mr. Stone.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose was $2,500 paid to Mr. Stone?

Mr. EDMONDS. For the purpose of getting his assistance in helping to nominate Senator Stephenson.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of assistance?

Mr. EDMONDS. Such kind as he could give, in his best judgment.

Stone money paid under agreement with Stephenson.

Senator SUTHERLAND. When was it you gave Mr. Stone the $2,500, before or after this conversation?

Mr. EDMONDS. After.

Senator SUTHERLAND. After?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is, I think the same day, as I recall.

Senator SUTHERLAND. How did you fix the amount of $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. My recollection is that either Senator Stephenson informed me or else Mr. Stone informed me that that was the amount to be paid him.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Which was it?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not recall now.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Did you make the arrangement or did Mr. Stephenson make it?

Mr. EDMONDS. My present recollection is that Mr. Stephenson made the agreement with Mr. Stone; Mr. Stone had seen him.

Senator SUTHERLAND. For the $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. But as to just how far that went, I am not positive now. I do not want to do Mr. Stephenson an injustice by saying that he made it if Mr. Stone reported that that was the amount agreed upon when we talked.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Then I understand you to say that you do not know why it was $2,500 rather than some other sum?

Mr. EDMONDS. Except that that was the amount that Mr. Stone thought was advisable to put in his hands, that he could use to advantage, or because of the information received from Senator Stephenson; which I am not sure.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Did you not exercise any judgment yourself as to what amount should be paid?

Mr. EDMONDS. In that particular case, no, sir.

Primary—Money to members of the legislature—Game Warden Stone—Stephenson told.

The CHAIRMAN. What were the instructions and what was the transaction?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think Senator Stephenson telephoned me or sent word through Mr. Stone to give him $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. To give you $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. To give him $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. To give Stone $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. For what did you give it to him?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not give it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not?

Mr. EDMONDS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did Mr. Stone get the $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. I assume from the bank—a cashier's check.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you give him an order?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is my recollection, though I am not positive.

The CHAIRMAN. That you gave him an order on the bank?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so. That may have been one of the $5,000 items. I have not seen my check book for two years.

Game Warden Stone got $2,500 by direction of Stephenson; was to use at own election.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it to be expended by you, or were you authorized to pay it out to others, to be expended by them?

Mr. STONE. I was to use it at my own discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you at liberty, then, as you understood the transaction, to handle all that money yourself?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. According to your discretion?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. No limitations were placed upon you, whatever, as to the manner of expenditure, were they?

Mr. STONE. No; I think not.

Manager Edmonds's description of "organization" methods.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what do you mean by "organize" when you use the term in connection with the payment of this money?

Mr. EDMONDS. I mean that the man employed by me to look after Dane County and get out the vote—the largest possible vote—for Senator Stephenson was given latitude, usually guided by his judgment alone, as to what was to be done (p. 77).

The CHAIRMAN. Particularize the word "organize" and tell me what constituted organization.

Mr. EDMONDS. My idea in a county that was thoroughly organized would be in the first place to get out the advertising that we sent to the county—have it fully distributed and posted, and after that was done he was to put in his full time going around the county, and he was paid for his services going around the county and interesting men of influence in the different localities to interest their friends so as to get out a full vote for Senator Stephenson election day. In some instances still further organizing, if in their judgment that was wise, by getting out the vote, by hiring teams, etc., for getting men to the polls (p. 78).

Purpose for which money was paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The second charge is as follows:

"That said Isaac Stephenson did, prior to said primary, pay to said Edmonds, above mentioned, sums with the design that said Edmonds should pay to other electors of this State, out of said sums above mentioned and other sums of money received by said Edmonds from said Isaac Stephenson, prior to said primary, sums ranging from $5 per day to $1,000, in bulk, as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to said primary by said electors for said Isaac Stephenson as such candidate, in violation of said section."

Is that statement true?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Wherein is it not true?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is a pretty long statement. One of the things that appeals to me as not being true is that neither of those sums is in violation of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we will waive that last statement, "in violation of said section." Did he give you those sums, or any of them, to pay to other electors of the State?

Mr. EDMONDS. To other electors of the State?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I should say that he understood that in his payment of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the statement of facts, aside from the final clause, "in violation of said section," is substantially correct, is it?

Mr. EDMONDS. There are a good many items in there enumerated, but I should say it is substantially correct.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You have had charge of large expenditures of money, have you, in a business way?

Mr. EDMONDS. Quite large; yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You have employed many agents whose duty it was to expend money?

Mr. EDMONDS. In some instances; yes, sir. Usually, however, in the management of a business, the work is done from the office, and the management of such business as I conducted was done by me, in the expenditure of money.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Is it in accordance with your business training and experience and habits to hand over to your agent a large sum of money, $500 or $1,000, and have him expend it without keeping an account of what he expends it for or without having him render an account to you of the expenditures?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think so.

Senator SUTHERLAND. That is not in accordance with business methods, at any rate?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Was there any reason why you could not request these various political agents to keep an account of their expenditures?

Mr. EDMONDS. The only reason I could give is that I have never heard of it being done. Custom, I should say, governed that.

No memoranda as to money paid.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Who should know, under the system that obtained in the headquarters?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Sacket should know.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make any memoranda when you gave instructions for the payment of money to these various people, or any of them, as to the services they were to perform in consideration of receiving this money?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir; no written statement; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you did not?

Mr. EDMONDS. No written statement; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make any memoranda at any time in regard to the purposes for which the money you ordered paid was to be used?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not recall any.

The CHAIRMAN. Endeavor to recall it now, Mr. Edmonds.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir; I will.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you recall any instance in which you made a memorandum as to the purpose for which the money was paid, either by you or under your instructions, during this campaign?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not recall any instance; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no books of account in which such items will appear?

Mr. EDMONDS. Absolutely not.

The CHAIRMAN. You made no record either in a book or otherwise as to the purpose for which you paid or directed that money to be paid during the campaign?

Mr. EDMONDS. To the very best of my recollection, none.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not feel it was necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you acquainted with the provisions of the statutes of the State of Wisconsin with reference to the filing of an expense account by those who were candidates for nomination or election?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I think so; reasonably well.

The CHAIRMAN. Are we to understand that, with that knowledge, you did not make any attempt to lay the foundation for compliance with that law in the expenditure or payment of the large sums of money that you disbursed during the campaign?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not, because it was done by another person in the office.

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Sacket.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose it transpired that it was not done by Mr. Sacket, then did Mr. Sacket disobey any instructions which you had given?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir; Mr. Sacket had his instructions from others before I came and took charge.

The CHAIRMAN. You were the manager of the campaign, were you not? That was the term used as to yourself?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is the term that has been given me; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the designation at that time, was it not?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you regard yourself in that respect?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think I regarded myself as manager of the campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. And so regarding yourself, you made no attempt to lay the foundation for making a statement that would comply with the law in the event it became necessary to file an expense account?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir. Owing to the conditions that existed when I went there, I felt that that was being done and so continued during my service.

One hundred dollars sent to a newspaper man at Wausau.

The CHAIRMAN. I will so mark it. The next item is $100 to J. L. Sturtevandt. That is said to be for "advertising." What advertising was that?

Mr. EDMONDS. He is running a daily and weekly newspaper, I believe, at Wausau.

The CHAIRMAN. Who made that contract?

Mr. EDMONDS. I believe I sent him the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you a bill and receipt for it?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any acknowledgment of it?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What advertising was that for?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know why the word "advertising" is in there except that that is Mr. Sacket's method of designating certain of these matters to keep them in a certain account.

The CHAIRMAN. But you know about the payment of the money?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I paid the money.

The CHAIRMAN. You inquired what it was for when you authorized it, did you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. I had known Mr. Sturtevandt for some little time, and, believing that he could be of assistance to us in Wausau—I knew that he was a friend of Senator Stephenson—I sent him a hundred dollars to use as he saw fit in promoting the interests of the Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. That was what might be termed a general contribution to the newspaper, was it; for its friendship?

Mr. EDMONDS. Perhaps it might be called that.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no specific advertisement—no space charged for—was there?

Mr. EDMONDS. In this particular instance, I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. No bill was rendered for specific services as "advertising"?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not recall, in this instance. I sent him the money, asking him to use it in the interest of Senator Stephenson.

The CHAIRMAN. You sent him the money for the purpose of retaining a friendly attitude toward Senator Stephenson, did you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not need to do that, because he was very friendly; his paper was for him and had been all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it was a gratuity. You already had the services, and in acknowledgment of friendship you sent him a hundred dollars; does that express it?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I hardly think that expresses it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what was the hundred dollars for?

Mr. EDMONDS. I thought that with the hundred dollars he would be more active in his support of Senator Stephenson.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it was for additional friendship to that already existing, was it?

Mr. EDMONDS. Perhaps that statement would be true.

The CHAIRMAN. It was to cement the existing friendship?

Mr. EDMONDS. Most assuredly; it was to help Senator Stephenson.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it in order that he might not probably be influenced to change his attitude of friendship?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; that was not at all necessary with him.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You sent just that class of contributions to a number of papers, I suppose, did you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think there were a number of instances; yes, sir.

Wise managers did not know, and did not attempt to find out, whether this money was spent honestly or not.

The CHAIRMAN. And that you have made no effort to ascertain whether or not the expenditures of this money were wrongful?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In any case?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have not.

The extent and manner of distribution.

The CHAIRMAN. You had 70 men, I understand, in your organization industriously engaged in distributing money among the common people throughout the campaign?

Mr. EDMONDS. I should say there were probably that many.

Manager Sackett's description of "organization methods" (p. 175).

The CHAIRMAN. I notice that all of these items for organizing—and the greater part of them are for organizing—are after the time when you had filed the petitions with the signatures on them.

Mr. SACKET. My idea of organizing, as I used it in this statement, might include circulating of petitions, or any other work to perfect that organization which we hoped to use for the election of Senator Stephenson.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it include the distribution and payment of money to men who were to work at the polls?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it include the payment of money to men who were to induce other men to vote for Senator Stephenson, without any limitation being placed upon the manner of inducement?

Mr. SACKET. It would include money expended that way; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It might include money expended in purchasing votes, might it?

Mr. SACKET. It might.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it?

Mr. SACKET. Not to my knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you say it did not?

Mr. SACKET. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Method by which Sacket spent money.

(167) Mr. SACKET. I do not know.
The CHAIRMAN. What services did he perform?
Mr. SACKET. I do not know.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was he one of the men you made an arrangement with?
Mr. SACKET. He was not.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you pay that on the order of Mr. Edmonds?
Mr. SACKET. I did.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you pay money on the order of any person other than Mr. Edmonds?
Mr. SACKET. Not to my recollection.
The CHAIRMAN. When Mr. Edmonds gave you an order, such as is indicated by that payment, did he give it to you in writing?
Mr. SACKET. Not necessarily.
The CHAIRMAN. How did he give it to you?
Mr. SACKET. He told me that he wanted a check for $300 for Mr. R. E. Orton.
The CHAIRMAN. Was it a verbal communication?
Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Then you would get the check?
Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And would you make a memorandum?
Mr. SACKET. I would.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you inquire of Edmonds what the money was to be used for?
Mr. SACKET. Not in all cases.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you in this case?
Mr. SACKET. I do not remember.
The CHAIRMAN. You have no recollection about it?
Mr. SACKET. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You do not know whether it was to be used for purchasing votes or for what purposes?
Mr. SACKET. I had no knowledge of my own whatever.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you not feel it incumbent upon you to know for what the money that you paid out was to be used?
Mr. SACKET. The money that I paid out on Mr. Edmonds's order; no.
The CHAIRMAN. You think you would be relieved of responsibility if the money was to be paid out for an unlawful purpose merely because Mr. Edmonds told you to pay it?
Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You think you would be relieved?
Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You would not undertake to assert that if an associate were to ask you to violate the law you would be justified in doing it?
Mr. SACKET. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Then how do you account for your answer that if you believed if Mr. Edmonds told you to pay this money out for an unlawful purpose that Mr. Edmonds and not you would be responsible?
Mr. SACKET. I felt that when Mr. Edmonds asked for money I was under obligations to give it to him. I was Mr. Stephenson's manager.

Destruction of memoranda.

Manager Sacket, in testifying as to the payment of an item of $400, stated that he was unable to remember anything about it. He then testified as follows (p. 164):
The CHAIRMAN. That emphasizes the misfortune of the destruction of your memoranda, does it not? Now, you say, in the absence of that memorandum, you can not remember anything about the $400. It may have been used to purchase votes in violation of law, may it not?
Mr. SACKET. I have no knowledge one way or the other.
The CHAIRMAN. So that a payment of this money passing through your hands as the representative of the candidate may have been used, so far as you can state, for an illegal purpose?
Mr. SACKET. I do not know.

Perrin's expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is C. R. Fridley?
Mr. PERRIN. He is an attorney at Superior.
The CHAIRMAN. Is he an old resident?
Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he an old man or a young man?
Mr. PERRIN. He is a man of 42 or 43 years of age.
The CHAIRMAN. Did he support Senator Stephenson for nomination at the primaries and before the primaries?
Mr. PERRIN. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. Was he in public life in any capacity?
Mr. PERRIN. No.
The CHAIRMAN. He was what you call a political worker, was he?
Mr. PERRIN. No. He was a practicing lawyer.
The CHAIRMAN. He was actively engaged in the practice of law?
Mr. PERRIN. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You never asked him for any accounting as to the expense he had incurred?
Mr. PERRIN. I did not.
The CHAIRMAN. What is Mr. Fridley's business, you say?
Mr. PERRIN. He is an attorney.
The CHAIRMAN. The next item is $10 to H. L. Dresser. Who is H. L. Dresser?
Mr. PERRIN. Mr Dresser had nothing to do with the campaign, and does not live in the State. I was in Duluth and somebody made application to me for money, and had to go to him and borrow it, and gave him my check to reimburse him. It was money expended in the campaign.
The CHAIRMAN. He lived in Duluth?
Mr. PERRIN. He lived in Duluth when this application was made to me.
The CHAIRMAN. You drew this money for your own expenditure, or to be paid out by you?
Mr. PERRIN. I drew that money to be paid to some one in the Stephenson campaign.
The CHAIRMAN. Can you say to whom you paid it?
Mr. PERRIN. I can not.
The CHAIRMAN. We go to the next item of $50 cash. Can you account for any part of it?
Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection of it.
The CHAIRMAN. The last item I inquired about, of $10 to Dresser, was on the 18th of August.
Mr. PERRIN. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And another item the same day, the 18th, is $50 cash. You say you can not account for that?
Mr. PERRIN. No.
The CHAIRMAN. At that time you had received the $3,000. You received it on the 15th. So you had all of this $5,000 then available?
Mr. PERRIN. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And on the 19th you drew a check to W. W. Savage for $25, and he indorsed it. What was that for?
Mr. PERRIN. I am not sure about that. I sent him out two or three times, I do not remember when, to get information to enable us to carry on this work.
The CHAIRMAN. He was your clerk?
Mr. PERRIN. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. On the 21st you paid out $200 cash. Can you account for any part of that?
Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection of it.
The CHAIRMAN. On the same day you paid out $100 cash. Can you account for any part of that?
Mr. PERRIN. I have no distinct recollection.
The CHAIRMAN. Again on the same day, $40 cash. Can you account for that or any part of it?
Mr. PERRIN. I do not recollect that.
The CHAIRMAN. Was it money expended in the city of Superior?
Mr. PERRIN. This money was expended in four counties—Douglas, Bayfield, Sawyer, and Washburn.
The CHAIRMAN. Are they the northern counties in the State?
Mr. PERRIN. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The most northern?
Mr. PERRIN. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. Tell us the conversation—what he said to you and what you said to him that resulted in the handing over of that check.
Mr. PERRIN. I can not remember the details.
The CHAIRMAN. Give us the substance.
Mr. PERRIN. The substance of it was that I went to him and asked him if he would put in some time in the Stephenson campaign. He said he would do what he could.

I asked him how much money he thought he would need at that time, and he said that he ought to have $250.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell him that you were disbursing Stephenson money at that time? You told him you had received this thousand dollars, did you?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And he told you he could be of some use to Senator Stephenson, did he?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How did he tell you he could be of use to Senator Stephenson?

Mr. PERRIN. I guess I knew as much about that as he did. I do not know that he expressed himself in specific terms as to what he could do or would do.

The CHAIRMAN. What did he do for Senator Stephenson's campaign?

Mr. PERRIN. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you knew what he could do?

Mr. PERRIN. I knew what he could do; certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that to be taken as a criterion of what he did do?

Mr. PERRIN. It was by me.

The CHAIRMAN. What did he do?

Mr. PERRIN. Taking that as a criterion, he could, and I believe he did, get men interested for Senator Stephenson that neither Senator Stephenson, Mr. Edmonds, nor I could otherwise get.

The CHAIRMAN. Get men that you could not get?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How would he get them interested? What would he do?

Mr. PERRIN. I think he would mostly talk.

The CHAIRMAN. What would he say to them?

Mr. PERRIN. I am sure I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. What would be the nature of the conversation?

Mr. PERRIN. I would not undertake to say.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you know it is not just exactly the conversation you or Mr. Edmonds would have had with these people?

Mr. PERRIN. Because I know that I could not talk to some of those people the way Mr. Shields could.

The CHAIRMAN. If you do not know what he said to them, how do you know that?

Mr. PERRIN. There are things, you know, that we know without being able to explain or express after long years of acquaintance with a man that no man living can sit on the witness stand and detail.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think you are worth the $3,000 that Mr. Stephenson gave you?

Mr. PERRIN. Oh, I know I am worth that.

The CHAIRMAN. It takes a pretty good political talker to get that amount of money.

Mr. PERRIN. I did not have to talk any to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. How much of this money indicated by the cash items or the checks remained in your hands?

Mr. PERRIN. Not a cent.

The CHAIRMAN. And yet you can not account for a cent of it that you paid out?

Mr. PERRIN. I can not in detail; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Not a single item?

Mr. PERRIN. Not one.

The CHAIRMAN. That was rather a spectacular campaign in some respects, was it not, with money flowing out freely in those amounts?

Mr. PERRIN. To speak in the vernacular, I guess we got them "going some."

Senator SUTHERLAND. In handing over sums of money to people that you employed in Senator Stephenson's interest, did you give any of them any instruction whatever as to what they should do?

Mr. PERRIN. If I thought it was necessary when I gave the man money to tell him what to do, I have no doubt I did.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Did you?

Mr. PERRIN. I do not remember.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You do not recall having given anybody any instructions?

Mr. PERRIN. No; I do not recall it. I know there were some instances where I said to some man, or some men, that we would look to him or them to provide workers at the polls, for instance, or teams to get voters out. But that was all in the most general way.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You gave them no specific instructions that you recall as to what they should do?

Mr. PERRIN. I do not recall now; no. I do not recall now that I did.

The CHAIRMAN. On August 5, $200 cash. For what was that cash expended, and by whom?

Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. August 6, $25 cash. What do you say as to that?

Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. August 6, $200. What have you to say as to that item?

Mr. PERRIN. I do not remember it.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say you do not remember, you mean——

Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. That you have no information to give in regard to it, based upon your recollection?

Mr. PERRIN. None whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. On August 7, $100 cash. Have you any recollection as to the purpose for which that was expended?

Mr. PERRIN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And on August 7, again, $75; and on August 7, again, $50; that is $225 on August 7. Have you any knowledge as to what that was used for?

Mr. PERRIN. Those items are all "cash"?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; they are all cash.

Mr. PERRIN. No; I have no recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. On the 8th we have cash items of $50, $50, $50, $50, and $50—$250; do you know the purpose for which that money, or any part of it, was expended?

Mr. PERRIN. Those are cash?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; cash items.

Mr. PERRIN. No; I have no recollection.

Senator POMERENE. You have said in answer to Senator Sutherland—I want to quote you correctly, and if I do not you will correct me—that you probably paid money to 100 different persons, though you were not definite as to your statement.

Mr. PERRIN. No; I can not be.

Senator POMERENE. I understand that. You also said to him again in your examination that you knew personally very many of the men that you employed.

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Do you mean to tell the committee that you do not now remember any of the men to whom you paid this money, outside of the few names that you gave to Senator Heyburn?

Mr. PERRIN. That is just exactly what I mean to say.

Senator POMERENE. Not one of them?

Mr. PERRIN. Not one of them.

Mr. Perrin's methods of distributing $5,000.

(689) Mr. PERRIN. I planned that we would take the first $1,000 and get hold of as many of the men who were accustomed to doing political work in that territory as we could get hold of with that money, laying the foundation for further and more extensive electioneering if the money was forthcoming. * * * At that time, I think, I knew I would get another $1,000.

"The CHAIRMAN. With this class of expenditure the motive does cut some figure. You were representing a candidate for office, under the laws of a State, and you were not spending your money, but his. Did it not occur to you that he would be responsible for the manner of your expenditure, and that incidentally to that you would have some responsibility?"

Mr. PERRIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. It did not?

Mr. PERRIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not feel that you were under any responsibility to any person or any law for the manner of the expenditure of this money?

Mr. PERRIN. I do not think I said that.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked you. It is a question I am asking you.

Mr. PERRIN. Just read the question, please.

The reporter read as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. You did not feel that you were under any responsibility to any person or any law for the manner of the expenditure of this money?"

Mr. PERRIN. I felt that I was responsible to Senator Stephenson for the expenditure of the money that he put in my hands.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean the manner of the expenditure?

Mr. PERRIN. No; I do not think so, entirely. I think I was selected to exercise an independent judgment upon the manner in which his candidacy should be furthered in that particular.

The CHAIRMAN. And leave the responsibility upon Senator Stephenson?

Mr. PERRIN. May I inquire—responsibility for what?

The CHAIRMAN. The manner in which you expended it; were you going to let him take chances on that?

Mr. PERRIN. I do not think the Senator was taking any chances on that.

The CHAIRMAN. To return to Mr. Shields: You have not been able to account for any item of expenditure by Mr. Shields; so that we shall have to rely upon Mr. Shields, shall we, for that information?

Mr. PERRIN. I presume he can give you some idea as to what he did with that money. I should like to say, if I may, that of these cash items I think Mr. Fridley had more than appears to have been given him upon checks drawn to his order.

This statute has never received in practical operation, by anybody that I know of in the State of Wisconsin, the construction which has been suggested here. It is the common, ordinary thing throughout northern Wisconsin to take a man to the theater or take him to lunch, not necessarily to corrupt his mind, but to enlighten him. You do these things to get a man's mind in a receptive mood. You can not go after him, Senator, you know, with an ax and beat an idea into him. It has got to be worked out along practical lines. It seems foolish for me to sit here and talk to you gentlemen about this thing, because you know so much more about it than I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Our examination here is not so much for our entertainment as to make a record.

Mr. PERRIN. I beg your pardon. I apologize.

The CHAIRMAN. You need make no apology. This is to be taken as a test of your meaning of "electioneering" then, is it?

Mr. PERRIN. I think that is a fair test of the meaning of ninety-nine men out of a hundred who conduct politics.

The CHAIRMAN. Of "electioneering"?

Mr. PERRIN. "Electioneering."

The CHAIRMAN. You think that comes within the definition of "electioneering"?

Mr. PERRIN. I certainly do.

The CHAIRMAN. And when you speak of having expended money in electioneering, either by you or by those whom you employed, you include that kind of proceeding under the head "electioneering"?

Mr. PERRIN. It may be included.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You think it is as legitimate to reach a man through his appetite as it is through his intellect?

Knowingly paid money to Shauers.

The CHAIRMAN. You said, or I understood you to say, that there was only one case in which you knowingly paid money to a man who was a candidate for the legislature; what case was that?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Shauers, of Oconto County.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was he elected?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What was his name?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Shauers.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose did you pay him money?

Mr. EDMONDS. He was a railroad man, and for the purpose of organizing he went in different parts of the State to see railroad men.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he in employment then or out of employment?

Mr. EDMONDS. Out of employment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then he went from his home to different parts of the State, outside of the legislative district where he was a candidate?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. It was distinctly understood that he was to spend no time, no money, in that district.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, but did he?

Mr. EDMONDS. He did not, to my knowledge.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, in his own district?

Mr. EDMONDS. In his own district.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So that nothing that was expended by him had any relation to the campaign pending in his district?

Mr. EDMONDS. Absolutely not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Either directly or indirectly?

The CHAIRMAN. How much did you pay Shauers?

Mr. EDMONDS. I don't recall. I should think it might range from $50 to $100 or $125. I don't think more than that. I paid him, I think, two or three different times $25.

Thomas Reynolds.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive any more than $180 from Senator Stephenson, or from anyone in his behalf?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I received $100 from Senator Stephenson's manager.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the $100 that you have referred to? Did you receive $280 altogether from Senator Stephenson or his manager?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I did not consider it from Senator Stephenson, although Senator Stephenson told me afterwards that he told them to send it to me—I supposed for my services; I do not know for what.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive $280 altogether from Senator Stephenson?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You received $80 from Senator Stephenson personally, did you not?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you received $100 from Senator Stephenson personally?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No, sir; not personally.

The CHAIRMAN. From whom did you receive it?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I received it through the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive the second $100 through the mail?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The second $100; yes, sir; that is the only $100 I received through the mail, the second $100—no; the first $100. The first $100.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive another $100 after that?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I received $100 by check from his manager.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive $100 by check from Senator Stephenson?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive more than one sum of $100 from the manager?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is all I received from the manager—$100; a $100 check.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us how you received the $280.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I received $80 from Senator Stephenson and $100 afterwards from him.

The CHAIRMAN. From Senator Stephenson?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Personally?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not personally; no.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you receive it?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Through the mail.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. To whom did you pay the largest sum of money?

Mr. RIORDAN. In all?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RIORDAN. During the campaign?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; out of this fund.

Mr. RIORDAN. For any purpose?

The Chairman. Yes.

Mr. RIORDAN. $250 to E. A. Everett, of Eagle River.

The CHAIRMAN. For what did you pay him that sum?

Mr. RIORDAN. For traveling through the counties of Vilas, Iron, and Oneida and ascertaining, as far as he was able, the sentiment of the people as he went along; that is, those who were for and against each of the several candidates.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he report to you a memorandum of people, showing the result of that work?

Mr. RIORDAN. He made two such trips through the county. After the first one he came back and made a report to me, and the second time he came back and made a similar report.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us who he was.

Mr. RIORDAN. E. A. Everett is the proprietor of the Everett resort.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. RIORDAN. That consists of a large hotel dining room and about 40 cottages on the Eagle chain of lakes, at Eagle River.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a summer resort?

Mr. RIORDAN. It is a summer resort. Prior to that time he was a member of the Wisconsin Assembly.

The CHAIRMAN. But at the time you made this arrangement with him he was not a public officer?

Mr. RIORDAN. He was a candidate for public office.

The CHAIRMAN. What office?

Mr. RIORDAN. The office of member of the assembly.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time you paid him this money?
Mr. RIORDAN. I did not pay him the money, I see by my testimony, until the 31st of August.
Senator POMERENE. Is that George E. Everett?
Mr. RIORDAN. E. A. Everett.
The CHAIRMAN. The testimony would indicate that you paid it to him before the primary election.
Mr. RIORDAN. I think a day or two before the primary election.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He was a candidate for the assembly?
Mr. RIORDAN. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. Was he elected?
Mr. RIORDAN. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. When you paid it to him, did you know that he was a candidate for the assembly?
Mr. RIORDAN. I think I did, certainly. I surely talked with him about it.
The CHAIRMAN. Was he announcing for whom he would vote in the legislature if he were elected?
Mr. RIORDAN. Yes; he was to vote for the candidate who received the primary nomination.
The CHAIRMAN. Without regard to who it was?
Mr. RIORDAN. Yes; and I would like to add there that the man who was running against him made the same promise.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What was his name?
Mr. RIORDAN. D. B. Stevens.
The CHAIRMAN. They promised to abide the result of the primary?
Mr. RIORDAN. Yes. The campaign was made with that understanding.
The CHAIRMAN. For whom did they assert their influence during the primary, the time preceding the election?
Mr. RIORDAN. I think for themselves, individually.
The CHAIRMAN. Were they announcing their support of any particular candidate, or doing anything in the interest of any particular candidate?
Mr. RIORDAN. No; I do not think they were.

Bancroft's methods.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):
"The result of our conference was that I, being pretty well acquainted with the county, and knowing who the political workers were in the county, consented to disburse this amount of money for Mr. Stephenson."
Is that correct?
Mr. BANCROFT. That is correct.
The CHAIRMAN. Give us the names of the people and the amounts you gave them.
Mr. BANCROFT. George Mehaffy I paid $100.
The CHAIRMAN. What was he to do for that $100?
Mr. BANCROFT. I gave him no instructions whatever.
Senator POMERENE. What is his address?
Mr. BANCROFT. Richland Center.
The CHAIRMAN. What did he do with the money?
Mr. BANCROFT. I could not tell you.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you ask him to render you an account of the manner of its expenditure?
Mr. BANCROFT. I did not.
The CHAIRMAN. Did he ever tell you how he expended the money?
Mr. BANCROFT. He did not.
The CHAIRMAN. Then you never knew?
Mr. BANCROFT. I do not know.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever know?
Mr. BANCROFT. I never knew.

Money paid to Mulder, candidate for the legislature.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then you said, "and he got some of this money"; so I got the impression that you referred to McConnell.
Senator POMERENE. You understood that I was referring to Mulder?
Mr. GORDON. Yes.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is all right, then.
Senator POMERENE. Yes; that is all right, so there will be no misunderstanding. Was it as much as $50?
Mr. GORDON. I can not tell you how much it was.

Senator POMERENE. You can certainly give us some idea as to whether it was a matter of $5 or $10 or $50 or $100.

Mr. GORDON. I can not tell you definitely how much it was.

Senator POMERENE. I know; but I am not asking you for that. I am asking you for your best judgment about it.

Mr. GORDON. It was probably, I should guess, from $25 to $50.

Senator POMERENE. What did you say to him with reference to his campaign and what use was to be made of this money?

Mr. GORDON. He was one of the original Stephenson men in the county, and I asked him to do what he could in the interest of Mr. Stephenson.

Senator POMERENE. What else was said?

Mr. GORDON. That is all I can recollect. I do not recollect all that was said. That is what I naturally would say.

Senator POMERENE. Since your attention has been directed to this matter, do you not recall that Mulder was a candidate for the general assembly?

Mr. GORDON. I say he was a candidate, but I can not recollect whether he was when I gave him the money or whether he subsequently became a candidate.

Senator POMERENE. I misunderstood you, then.

Mr. GORDON. He was a candidate; yes.

Senator POMERENE. We understand each other now—that he was in fact a candidate?

Mr. GORDON. He was a candidate; yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. But you meant to say that you do not remember whether at the time you gave him the money he was then an announced candidate or not?

Mr. GORDON. That is the idea.

Wheeler's methods of distribution.

William G. Wheeler distributed $600 and aided in the "organization." Mr. C. B. Salmons was one of his lieutenants. Mr. Salmons reported the success of his operations in the following letter to his chief (p. 897):

BELOIT, WIS., September 1.

MY DEAR WHEELER: I inclose bills in blank which are correct. All the men and rigs were in the exclusive use of Stephenson. We did not mix any other candidates. We also had about as many more that were Stephenson and one or two other candidates. At this writing, 4 p. m., I predict 1,700 to 1,800 votes, and that Stephenson will get 65 per cent.

Very truly,

C. B. SALMON.

We should pay these men in the morning.

(Our italics.)

Mr. Dart's methods in distributing money.

Dart was one of the deputy game wardens, and received $400 for "organization purposes."

The chairman read to the witness an extract from his testimony given before the legislative committee as follows:

"Q. What did you do with it?—A. Spent it.

"Q. How?—A. Every old way.

"Q. What is that?—A. Every way.

"Q. Tell us some way that you spent it.—A. Oh, I spent quite a lot of it in saloons.

"The CHAIRMAN. Is that true?

"Mr. DART. Well, I should not go past any of them if there was anybody there I wanted to see.

* * * * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN (reading from previous testimony):

"'Q. Did you make any payments to individuals?—A. Oh, yes; I gave them quite a little bunch of money.

"'Q. Who were the persons to whom you gave "quite a little bunch of money"?—A. Oh, I don't know; I could not mention half or a quarter of them.'"

He, however, on pages 977 to 982, gives an interesting account of the expenditures that he remembers.

The testimony of Mr. Wellensgard, on pages 852, 855, and 856; that of Mr. French, at page 876; and that of George Beyer, at page 881, furnish fair illustrations of the methods employed by local workers.

Liquor expenditures.

Senator POMERENE. Or, if he got a drink of whisky at the bar and drank it there, that would not be prohibited; but if he got a half a pint and put it in his pocket and took it away for a swig after a while, that would be illegal?

Mr. SACKET. I think I should have to revert to the custom again and say that the half pint was lawful.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Is it the custom in Wisconsin to buy the voters bottles of whisky and give to them?

Mr. SACKET. And kegs of beer; yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. And kegs of beer?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me get that question.

Senator POMERENE. Being from Maine, you do not know anything about that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is why I was quite anxious to get the actual practical situation. I trust we are adding to the sum of human knowledge and at the same time increasing my own information. Of course, I fully realize my infirmity.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Now, Mr. Sacket, do you seriously mean that that is the custom in Wisconsin——

Mr. SACKET. The custom, as I understand it; yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. To purchase bottles of whisky and kegs of beer for voters?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

"'Q. You kept no track of it. How could you present a bill to Mr. Wayland? Was that just an estimate of what you spent?—A. No. I think there was $135 cash I had in my pocket, without the automobile, which was $15. I think it was $150 I had that day when I left the office."

Is that correct?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

"'Q. And you spent all that in one day?—A. Yes, sir."

* * * * * * *

(827) Mr. O'CONNOR. No, sir; it was a supper, I guess, that cost about $1.60 for the two of us.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You spent $1.60 for food, as I understand you?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. That would leave $305.40 for whisky and cigars and automobiles?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Do you think you spent a little too much for food?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I did not think anything about it.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You do not recall spending any of the money for anything else?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is all it was spent for.

Senator SUTHERLAND. That is, you spent $305 40 for an automobile and for whisky and cigars?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. And that was your notion of furthering the interests of Senator Stephenson in this campaign, was it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the way they make a campaign up in that territory.

Senator SUTHERLAND. That is the way you made it, at all events?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is customary up there.

Money paid to "enthuse" voters.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Edmonds, did you pay the $50 to Mr. Dettmam on August 8?

Mr. EDMONDS. My recollection is not clear on that, but I think I sent it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. You think you sent it to him; for what purpose?

Mr. EDMONDS. For assistance among the German Lutherans in his locality.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of assistance?

Mr. EDMONDS. So that he would get out and help to get out the vote—interest his friends—for Senator Stephenson.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no vote to be gotten out on August 8 for any purpose—nearly a month before the election.

Mr. EDMONDS. When I say getting out the vote, I do not refer to the actual carrying or taking of the persons to the polls, but to interest them so that they would get out.

The CHAIRMAN. Enthuse them?
Mr. EDMONDS. That is the idea—enthuse them. Thank you for the suggestion.
The CHAIRMAN. "O. L. Gust, $300, August 8." Did you pay that money?
Mr. EDMONDS. I can not recall that payment at all.
* * * * * * *
The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by lining them up for Senator Stephenson?
Mr. EDMONDS. Getting them interested in his election.
The CHAIRMAN. Discussing his election with them?
Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Paying any money to them for any purpose?
Mr. EDMONDS. That was up to the man's judgment as to whether that was necessary or advisable in the conduct of the campaign for Senator Stephenson's election.
The CHAIRMAN. Was that money given to him to expend among the railroad men or cigars or treats of any kind if he saw fit to so expend it?
Mr. EDMONDS. So far as I know he might have expended it in that way.
The CHAIRMAN. There was no restriction placed upon it?
Mr. EDMONDS. I think not; not in that manner.

We regret that we can not feel warranted in finding for the sitting Member, but we believe the methods employed at the primary were corrupt; that they were against public policy; that they were demoralizing in character; that they directly contributed to destroy the purity and freedom of the election; that they violated the fundamental principles at the basis of our system of Government; and that they are not to be tolerated by the Senate of the United States as a means of procuring a seat in that body.

We desire to submit the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Isaac Stephenson was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin."

W. L. JONES.
MOSES E. CLAPP.
WM. S. KENYON.
JNO. W. KERN.
LUKE LEA.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 48, pp. 2182–2187.)

FRIDAY, MARCH 22, 1912.

Mr. Jones offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn], that the Senate agree to the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in reference to the charges preferred by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin against Isaac Stephenson, a Senator from that State, and expressed the desire to have pending the resolution.

The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That Isaac Stephenson was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin." (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, p. 3777.)

The motion of Mr. Heyburn that the report of the committee declaring that the election of Isaac Stephenson was not procured by corrupt methods or practices was debated in the Senate: February 19, 1912 (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, pp. 2189–2195); February 20, 1912 (ibid., pp. 2233–2239); February 21, 1912 (ibid., pp. 2281–2283, 2284–2292); February 29, 1912 (ibid., pp. 2608–2609); March 1, 1912 (ibid., pp. 2656–2669); March 2, 1912 (ibid., pp. 2703–2718); March 4, 1912 (ibid., 2762–2774); March 25, 1912 (ibid., pp. 3803–3811); March 26, 1912 (ibid., pp. 3817–3827, 3829, 3830, 3831); March 27, 1912 (ibid., pp. 3865–3895).

MARCH 26, 1912.

On the question of agreeing to the amendment of Mr. Jones to the motion of Mr. Heyburn, viz, strike out the same and insert in lieu thereof the following words:

"Resolved, That Isaac Stephenson was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin."

It was determined in the negative by the following vote:

So the amendment of Mr. Jones to the motion of Mr. Heyburn was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Heyburn, at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.,

The Senate took a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, p. 3831.)

HENRY A. DU PONT,

Of Delaware.

The credentials of Henry A. du Pont, certifying to his election as a Senator from the State of Delaware for the term commencing March 4, 1911, were submitted to the Senate on January 26, 1911, and on April 4 1911, the said Henry A. du Pont was sworn in.

On February 26, 1912, Mr. Reed submitted a resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate and report whether corrupt methods and practices were employed by the said Henry A. du Pont in connection with certain elections in that State in 1904 and 1910. This resolution was based upon testimony taken by the Committee on the Judiciary in connection with the question of the confirmation of a person appointed to a Federal office in that State. On the following day Mr. du Pont made denial of the truth of the charges made and invited any action which the Senate deemed proper to take in the premises. On Wednesday, following a speech by Mr. Reed, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. No report was ever made by the committee up to the close of the Sixty-second Congress.

The case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings as found in the Congressiona Record.

[Sixty-first Congress, third session.]

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1911.

Mr. Richardson presented the credentials of Henry A. du Pont, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Delaware for the term commencing March 4, 1911, which were read and placed on file. (Cong. Rec., vol. 46, p. 1463.)

[Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1911.

Swearing in of Senators—

In list: Mr. Henry A. du Pont. (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 2.)

[Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1912.

Mr. Reed submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Whereas the President of the United States, on the 22d day of January, 1912, appointed Cornelius P. Swain United States marshal for the State of Delaware, and sent said appointment to the Senate of the United States for confirmation, and said appointment was in due course referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate for proper action in the premises; and

Whereas certain prominent citizens of the State of Delaware caused it to be made known to said committee that they desired to protest against the confirmation of the appointment of the said Swain, upon the ground that he was an unfit person to hold the office of United States marshal for the said State of Delaware; and

Whereas the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate of the United States designated two of its members, viz, Senators Sutherland and Overman, to act as a subcommittee, authorized to investigate the grounds and reasons for said protest; and

Whereas on the 2d and 9th days of February, 1912, there appeared before said subcommittee Hon. Willard Saulsbury, of Wilmington, Del., representing certain objectors to the confirmation of the appointment of the said Cornelius P. Swain, and there also appeared the said Cornelius P. Swain in person and by his counsel, Daniel O. Hastings, Esq.; and

Whereas said objectors, before said subcommittee, in substance and effect charged:

1. That the said Cornelius P. Swain was unfit to occupy any place connected with or near the courts of the United States for the district of Delaware, because the said Cornelius P. Swain bore the common and general reputation of a persistent violator of the criminal provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware intended to secure purity of elections.

2. That the said Cornelius P. Swain had notoriously been a vote buyer in the second representative district of Sussex County (New Fork Hundred) for many years;
3. That the said Cornelius P. Swain had procured and carried large sums of money into said precinct for the purpose of corrupting the voters of said district, and in the year 1908 was the assistant cashier of the corruption fund, and in substance charged that all of the above facts were notorious; and

Whereas the testimony of certain witnesses produced before said subcommittee and certain affidavits there read in evidence tended to prove:

(a) That at the election held in the State of Delaware in the year 1904 members of the legislature were being selected who would thereafter have the right to elect a United States Senator, and who did, in fact, elect the said Henry Algernon du Pont Senator from the State of Delaware;

(b) That shortly prior to said election a large sum of money, to wit, a sum in excess of $25,000, and claimed to be in excess of $58,000, was contributed by the said Henry Algernon du Pont;

(c) That said sum of money was distributed among various corrupt agents working in the interest of the said Henry Algernon du Pont;

(d) That said distribution took place in the office of the said Henry Algernon du Pont, and with his knowledge;

(e) That $3,000 of the money so contributed was in the office of the said Henry Algernon du Pont delivered to be used for the purpose of corrupting the voters of the second representative district of Sussex County, Del., and was in fact so used under the direction of the said Cornelius P. Swain, and it was admitted by the attorney representing said Swain that said $3,000 was so received by him; and

Whereas the evidence tended further to show that not only at the election held in the year 1904, but in the elections held in the years 1906, 1908, and 1910 similar corrupt practices were employed, and said evidence tended further to show that said corrupt practices did affect the election of the members of the legislature who in the year 1911 reelected the said Henry Algernon du Pont to a seat in this body; and

Whereas said subcommittee construed its duties to be confined to an investigation of the corrupt practices with which the said Cornelius P. Swain could be shown to be directly connected, and did not therefore investigate generally into the conditions surrounding said election, so that there has, in fact, been no investigation of the connection of the said Henry Algernon du Pont with said alleged corrupt practices, except in so far as the same was made to appear as an incident of the investigation of the said Swain; and

Whereas the said Cornelius P. Swain was appointed to said office at the request of the said Henry Algernon du Pont, notwithstanding the evidence tends to show his corrupt practices and general reputation as an election corruptionist: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate and to report to the Senate, whether, in fact, corrupt methods and practices were employed by the said Henry Algernon du Pont to secure the election of members of the legislature who thereafter elected him to a seat in this body; whether said corrupt practices related to the general election of 1904, or the general election of 1910, or to his election by the members of the legislature selected at said elections; and whether the said Henry Algernon du Pont is a proper person to retain his seat, or ought to retain his seat, in this body as a Senator from the State of Delaware.

Said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit during the sessions or the recess of the Senate; to hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation aforesaid; to employ stenographers; to send for persons and papers; and to administer oaths. The expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or chairman of the subcommittee.

Said committee is requested to proceed with said investigation with all reasonable speed and to report its findings, together with the evidence, at the earliest possible date. (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, p. 2443.)

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1912.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Certain resolutions were offered yesterday in the Senate by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] formulating charges against me. I will at this time confine myself to making the most emphatic denial of the truth of the charges made and invite any action which the Senate may deem proper to take in the premises. (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, p. 2492.)

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Brandegee in the chair) laid before the Senate the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. Reed, directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the election of Senator du Pont, etc.

On motion by Mr. Reed,

Ordered, That the resolution lie on the table. (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, p. 2497.)

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1912.

On motion by Mr. Reed,

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by him on the 26th instant, directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the election of Senator du Pont, etc.;

Mr. Reed addressed the Senate and, after debate,

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, pp. 2550–2555.)

[Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

CLARENCE W. WATSON AND WILLIAM E. CHILTON,

Of West Virginia.

On February 2, 1911, Clarence W. Watson took his seat in the Senate following the submission of his credentials certifying to his election by the Legislature of West Virginia, as a Senator from that State, for the term ending March 3, 1913. On February 6, 1911, the credentials of William E. Chilton, certifying to his election by the same legislature, as a Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term beginning March 4, 1911, were presented. On the first day of the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, April 4, 1911, he took his seat in the Senate.

On the last day of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress, August 26, 1912, a petition, signed by five citizens of West Virginia, was presented to the Senate alleging that bribery and corruption were practiced in the election of said Messrs. Watson and Chilton as Senators of the United States, and praying for an investigation of such charges by the Senate. This petition was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. On February 5, 1913, Senator Chilton made a statement in behalf of Senator Watson and himself in the Senate and submitted a communication in the nature of a reply to the petition above mentioned. This was also referred to the committee.

At the third session of the Sixty-second Congress, on the 11th day of February, 1913, the committee reported that no charge of bribery, or attempted bribery, on the part of any member of the legislature, to vote for the said Messrs. Watson and Chilton, appeared in the papers with the committee, and that the only charge of money being used appeared in a purported statement of one of the delegates, who said he received $1,000, prior to a Democratic caucus for the nomination of Senators, to vote for Messrs. Watson and Chilton, and that the statement was without foundation and had been fully retracted by a subsequent statement by the said delegate himself. The committee was unanimously of the opinion that the prayer of the petition should not be granted, and accompanied their report with a resolution that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from further consideration of the case. The committe report was adopted by the Senate.

The history of the case here presented consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate as published in the Congressional Record and the report of the committee.

[Sixty-first Congress, third session.]

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1911.

Mr. Scott presented the credentials of Clarence Wayland Watson, chosen by the legislature of the State of West Virginia a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Stephen Benton Elkins in the term ending March 3, 1913, which were read and ordered to be filed.

The oath prescribed by law having been administered, he took his seat in the Senate. (Cong. Rec., vol. 46, p. 1797.)

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1911.

Mr. Scott presented the credentials of William Edwin Chilton, chosen by the Legislature of the State of West Virginia a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1911, which were read and ordered to be filed. (Cong. Rec., vol. 46, p. 1969.)

[Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1911.

The oath of office having been administered to Mr. Chilton, he took his seat. (Cong. Rec., vol. 47, p. 2.)

[Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

MONDAY, AUGUST 26, 1912.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate a petition of the governor of West Virginia and others, alleging that bribery and corruption were practiced in the election of Senators Watson and Chilton as Senators of the United States from the State of West Virginia, and praying for an investigation of such charges by the Senate.

Ordered, That the petition be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The reading of the petition was commenced and, after debate, was expunged from the Record. (Cong. Rec., vol. 48, pp. 11862–11865.)

[Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1913.

Mr. Chilton made a statement in the Senate, followed by a communication, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

For the information of your honorable body we desire to reply to a certain memorial now before your committee, signed by William E. Glasscock, William Seymour Edwards, H. C. Ogden, David B. Smith, and Frederick A. MacDonald, and in order to be as brief and as clear as possible we will answer according to the order in which the said memorial sets out the several matters.

The first allegation is the statement made by the Hon. Nelson C. Hubbard, a member of the West Virginia House of Delegates, to the joint session of the legislature before a ballot for United States Senator was taken, in which he gave his reason for refusing to vote for the nominees of the Democratic caucus.

An attentive reading of what Mr. Hubbard said, as stated in the memorial, will show that he does not predicate his charge of corruption upon any fact or upon the testimony of any witness, but made it purely upon his belief, for which he offers no sufficient reason. The memorial, however, deliberately suppresses that part of Mr. Hubbard's statement in which he admitted that he had no evidence of bribery, and for the information of your committee we call attention to that part of Mr. Hubbard's statement, the omission of which the memorial indicates by stars. The omitted part is as follows:

"I do not pretend to say that I have any more information which would justify anyone at the present time as a juror under the evidence to convict any man of bribery and I do not say that I know any court that would."

When read in connection with what the memorial quotes from Mr. Hubbard's speech, it is thus made plain that he was simply willing to declare his belief in corrupt practices, though compelled in the same connection to admit that he had no evidence.

The second allegation of the memorial is the statement of Senator George W. Bland, which, outside of some vague and general insinuations that charges of bribery had been made throughout the State, was based upon a statement made by Mr. L. J. Shock, a member of the house of delegates. That statement was that one Hamrick had given Shock $1,000 and promised him an additional $1,500 to vote for Mr. Watson and Mr. Chilton, and two reputable citizens of West Virginia were called in to see Shock count down the $1,000. We do not question that Shock exhibited the $1,000 to Hon. John J. Davis and Hon. W. G. Bennett, but that he had been furnished with that money for the very purpose of exhibiting it to these honorable gentlemen we think the committee will not doubt when they have read this statement. It will be noted first that the so-called statement of Shock read by Senator Bland was not signed, and it is a further fact that though he was present at the joint session, as shown by its records, when Senator Bland read his statement, he did not utter a word on that subject.

Subsequently and within a few days after Bland had read Shock's statement Shock was asked to produce the $1,000 which it was charged he had received, and he explained his inability to do so by saying that two men had taken the money away from him. He further stated that he had never seen either of these two men before they took the money from him and had never seen them since.

It is not pretended that Shock raised any outcry against the men who took the money from him or even related the circumstance to anyone until he was asked to produce the money.

Shock's explanation of why he was unable to produce the money which he was asked to do as a basis of an investigation which we had requested at the hands of the legislature was so ridiculously absurd that every sensible man in the legislature at once understood that Shock had been supplied with the $1,000 for the very purpose of creating a scandal, and that those who supplied him with it were not willing to trust him with the custody of it long enough to carry out the scheme.

It is not necessary for us, however, to argue that question or to ask the committee to accept our view of the episode, because Shock himself has admitted that his story of the attempt to bribe him was a pure invention in the following letter which he voluntarily sent to Senator Watson, the original of which we file herewith.

BURNSVILLE, W. VA., January 8, 1913.

Hon. C. W. WATSON, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The time has come when you should know the truth about the so-called Shock statement. I never have signed any statement that was read before the legislature, and I never have been under oath. I have let the talking go on because I hated to be put in a wrong light. The truth is that I set up the whole business; nobody tried to buy my vote and would not swear that they did. I wanted to nominate McGraw and I thought if I got this thousand dollars and made this play it would hurt you and Chilton. The trick failed to work and now you have the truth. I do not know you and am sending this to you because I want justice to be done. So far as I know your election and Chilton's was honest and fair, and it is wrong to have this report going around.

Very truly, yours,

L. J. SHOCK.

The third allegation is that a resolution to investigate the vague and indefinite charges of bribery was proposed in the Legislature of West Virginia and defeated.

While it is true that the joint session of the West Virginia Legislature refused, on a point of order, as under the Federal Statutes it was compelled to do, to postpone the election of a Senator, it is further true that the house of delegates, which was controlled by a Democratic majority of exactly 40, promptly and by a unanimous vote passed a resolution, offered by Hon. C. M. Seibert, who supported both of us in the Democratic caucus, ordering an investigation and sent it to the senate, which finally disposed of that resolution by tabling it, because in the meantime the absurd story of Mr. Shock about the money having been taken away from him by two unknown men had been made so public that it was known to all senators and representatives, and the charges of corruption which had been mainly based on it were then treated as an absurdity. This explanation which we make to the Senate is the same as was made to Senator Chilton by Hon. D. E. French, a copy of which is attached and original of which we file. Mr. French was then a leading member of the State senate, and was unanimously nominated by the Democrats at the present session of the senate as their candidate for president of the senate. The allegation that we prevented the adoption of that resolution by the senate will be completely negatived when your committee reflects that the State senate was composed of 15 Democrats and 15 Republicans, which made it an easy matter for the investigation to have been ordered by a vote of the Republican senators, with the vote of even Senator Bland, and as there were several other Democratic senators active, aggressive, and even bitter opponents of the two nominees the investigation would have been ordered, except that every reasonable man in the senate was then thoroughly convinced that the charges were unfounded.

The committee will, of course, remember that the Legislature of West Virginia not only completed the regular session at which we were elected, but that it was subsequently convened in extraordinary session, which lasted 45 days; and during all that time, though we were in our seats at Washington, not even a suggestion that we were not entitled to our seats was made.

The fourth and last allegation in the memorial is that our election was brought about by a combination of the railroads and the Standard Oil Co. The committee will, of course, perceive by glancing at the memorial that this charge has no other or better foundation than the irresponsible comments of some newspapers, and we could well dismiss them as entitled only to the consideration which every Senator's experience warrants him in giving to them. The charge, however, is so contrary to the facts that we crave the indulgence of the committee while we show how thoroughly it is the reverse of true. In the first place the opponent of Senator Watson was then and is now the general counsel in West Virginia of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, which was then and is now owned and controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad, while Mr. McGraw, the opponent of Senator Chilton, is the owner of the West Virginia Midland Railroad, which connects with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and the attorney of Mr. McGraw's railroad, a member of the State senate at that time, is the same gentleman who prepared the statement of one L. J. Shock.

More than this, Mr. Hubbard, from whose speech the memorial makes a garbled quotation, was then and is now an attorney for one of the Pennsylvania Railroad lines in West Virginia.

The falsity of the charge that we were supported and elected by the Standard Oil Co. will appear to the Senate when they are told that this same Senator Bland, from whose statement at the joint session the memorial quotes so elaborately, was then and is now the attorney of the Hope Natural Gas Co., a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co.

This statement makes it plain that we were opposed rather than supported by those special interests.

There is one statement made in these newspaper clippings to which we feel called upon to reply particularly. The memorial recites an editorial from the Monroe County Watchman, in which the editor of that paper quotes a letter from one of his correspondents, who is represented as saying, "We have positive information that $150,000 was expressed here last week for the purpose of corrupting the delegates. This information comes from such sources as render it absolutely reliable and proof is obtainable to a moral and legal certainty."

In reply to this assertion we state upon our honor as men and as Senators that neither $150,000 nor any other sum was expressed to us or to any of our friends for the purpose of corrupting the delegates or for any other purpose.

It can not be deemed inappropriate for us to say that the sinister purpose of this memorial is apparent from the fact that it was presented to the Senate on the last day of its last session when there could be no possible expectation of any action on it before the general election in November. Neither will it be out of place for us to say that after these charges, vague and indefinite as they are, have been circulated industriously throughout West Virginia for two years, Senator Watson has been renominated by the unanimous vote of the Democratic caucus to succeed himself, thus expressing to the Senate and to the world the judgment of the people who have the best opportunity and are in the best position to know the truth or falsity of them.

Reading this memorial in connection with our answer, we feel confident that your committee will promptly report to the Senate that no ground for an investigation has been shown. If any reasonable cause to challenge our election were before you, we would immediately demand an investigation as a matter of justice to the Senate, to the State of West Virginia, and to ourselves, but we do not believe that the time of the Senate ought to be wasted, the name of our State brought into question, and our attention diverted from our duties by a proceeding instigated by political revenge and supported by accusations which we have shown to be utterly unfounded.

C. W. WATSON.
W. E. CHILTON.

BLUEFIELD, W. VA., June 17, 1911.

Hon. WM. E. CHILTON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Yours of the 15th instant in regard to the statements made by Delegate Shock, of Braxton County, last winter, at Charleston, in regard to the election of United States Senators, received.

The facts in regard to this matter, as I now recollect them, are as follows:

Shock, in his statement, which was read at the joint session of the legislature in which yourself and Senator Watson were elected, said that just prior to the Democratic caucus at which you and Senator Watson were nominated as the Democratic candidates for United States Senators he had been paid $1,000 by a man—my recollection is Hambrick, from Clay—as a part consideration, that he, Shock, would vote in the Democratic caucus for yourself and Watson, and that Shock took the money to Judge Bennett, who counted it. Afterwards Shock went into the said caucus, and without saying anything in the said caucus about the payment of the money to him, voted on every ballot against yourself and Senator Watson, and did not make any public statement concerning said matter until the joint session of the legislature was held, at which United States Senators were elected, at which time the statement above referred to, which purported to have been made by Shock, was read. It was also publicly stated and generally discussed among the members of the legislature and others that after the said caucus Shock stated to various members of the legislature and other persons that two men whom he did not know, neither of them being the man who gave him the money, came to him and demanded the said $1,000, and that thereupon he, Shock, delivered the money to the said strangers, neither of whom he has ever seen since; that he did not know either of the said men and that he did not take their names. That Mr. Hambrick, the person whom Shock claims gave him the money, upon hearing of Shock's statement, came to Charleston and confronted Shock, and that Shock then stated that Hambrick was not the man who gave him the money and that he did not know who the man was. That he had understood that it was Hambrick, and for that reason had named him as the man who had given him the money. It was also commonly reported that Shock had stated that he proposed to trap and expose any efforts at corruption in the selection of United States Senators.

In view of this state of affairs, I felt at the time, and still feel, and think most of the other senators thought likewise, that an investigation was unnecessary and uncalled for, and that for the Senate to undertake to investigate such flimsy charges would not have reflected credit upon the Senate and would only have lent color to charges which in themselves contained nothing substantial or tangible upon which an investigation could properly be based. In fact, this entire matter, to my mind, bore the earmarks of a fabricated scheme in which Shock was simply made a tool of, perhaps innocently, by others, who in this way sought to raise a cry of corruption in the Democratic Party and thus to reflect discredit upon the party and the United States Senators which it elected.

I recollect distinctly the statement made by Senator Watson before the joint session of the legislature which elected him to the United States Senate, that if anyone could produce reasonable proof of corruption on his part in connection with his election to the United States Senate he would resign the office, and that you on the same occasion publicly stated that you courted the fullest investigation that any person or body of men could make of these charges. So far as I know, neither yourself nor Senator Watson ever expressed a wish or said anything to prevent or hinder an investigation of these matters.

It is my recollection that you went into the Democratic caucus with some thirty-odd votes affirmatively for you, and I know there were others who held you as their second choice. The fact that Col. McGraw, who was your opponent in the Democratic caucus, came from an adjoining county to Senator Watson, and that he was not a candidate against Watson for the short term, and the further fact that it was not probable that both United States Senators would be selected from the same section of the State is certainly a sufficient explanation of the fact that many of your friends voted for Watson and his friends voted for you.

With best wishes, I beg to remain,

Yours, very sincerely,

D. E. FRENCH.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. The statement will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. (Cong. Rec., vol. 49, pp. 2635–2637.)

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Dillingham (chairman), Gamble, Clapp, Sutherland, Bradley, Jones, Oliver, Kenyon, Paynter, Johnston of Alabama, Fletcher, Kern, Lea, and Pomerene.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 11, 1913.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Dillingham, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report (No. 1206):

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the petition of William E. Glasscock, William Seymour Edwards, Herschel C. Ogden, David B. Smith, and F. A. MacDonald, citizens of West Virginia, making certain charges and allegations of fraud and corruption connected with the nomination and election of Clarence W. Watson and William E. Chilton as Senators of the United States from the State of West Virginia, report—

That a careful examination of the said petition and of all the papers submitted by the Senate to the committee discloses—

First. That the Legislature of West Virginia, which convened on the 11th day of January, A. D. 1911, chose Messrs. Clarence W. Watson and William E. Chilton as Senators of the United States from the State of West Virginia, and that they appeared, took their oath of office, and are now sitting as Senators in this body. The petitioners do not state or allege that in such election any individual member of the legislature was bribed to vote for either of the persons named, or that, in voting for them, or either of them, any member thereof was actuated by any corrupt or improper motive.

Second. It does not appear upon any of the papers before this committee that in such election any member of the Legislature of West Virginia was improperly approached by any person interested in the election of either of the said Senators, or that any improper offer or inducement of any kind or nature was made to any such member to cast his vote for said Senators, or either of them.

Third. The only direct charge that money was improperly used, or attempted to be used, by anyone is contained in a purported statement of L. J. Shock, a member of the West Virginia Legislature that, on the 18th day of January, 1911, prior to the caucus of the Democratic members of the legislature which was held to nominate party candidates for United States Senators, he was paid $1,000, and promised a further sum, to vote for Messrs. Watson and Chilton for United States Senators. This statement was read by Hon. George W. Bland, a State senator, before the Joint Assembly of the Legislature of West Virginia on the 25th day of January, 1911. But it affirmatively appears, from the papers submitted to this committee, that the charge made by Mr. Shock was without foundation, and has been fully retracted in a statement made by him to Senator Watson, of which the following is a copy:

BURNSVILLE, W. VA., January 8, 1913.

Hon. C. W. WATSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The time has come when you should know the truth about the so-called Shock statement. I never have signed any statement that was read before the legislature and I never have been under oath. I have let the talking go on because I hated to be put in a wrong light. The truth is that I set up the whole business. Nobody tried to buy my vote, and would not swear that they did. I wanted to nominate McGraw, and I thought if I got this thousand dollars and made this play, it would hurt you and Chilton. The trick failed to work, and now you have the truth. I do not know you, and am sending this to you because I want justice to be done. So far as I know, your election and Chilton's was honest and fair, and it is wrong to have this report going around.

Very truly, yours,

L. J. SHOCK.

Fourth. All other matters contained in the petition aforesaid are rumors without apparent foundation—statements of individual opinion, newspaper stories, and speculations as to general conditions existing in and about the legislature and throughout the State of West Virginia just previous to and at the time of such election. These do not in any instance refer to the action of any particular member of the Legislature of West Virginia. They do not charge any act of bribery or attempted bribery. They neither name any member of that body as having received, nor as having been asked to receive, money for his vote, nor do they indicate any person who made any attempt to bribe or improperly influence any member of the legislature. They are of that general character too frequently indulged in both by individuals and by the public press on the occasion of elections in connection with which great public interest is aroused, and, while calculated to arouse suspicion and create prejudice, they do not, in the opinion of the committee, present a proper basis for action on the part of the Senate.

The committee are unanimously of the opinion that the prayer of the petition should not be granted, and submit the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from further consideration of the subject."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. The Senator from Vermont asks for the present consideration of the resolution which has just been read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, my attention was diverted. I wish to be certain what this is.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

Mr. STONE. No; I desire to be certain just what it relates to.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. It relates to the question of the validity of the election of the Senators from West Virginia, Senator Watson and Senator Chilton. The resolution has been read to the Senate. It is now before the Senate for action. [Putting the question.] The resolution is unanimously agreed to. The report, the Chair understands, is a part of the action of the Senate. The report is adopted and the resolution is agreed to. (Cong. Rec., vol. 49, p. 3001.)

SENATE ELECTION CASES.

III.

EXPULSION OF SENATORS.

[Fifth Congress—First session.]

WILLIAM BLOUNT,

Senator from Tennessee from December 6, 1796, to July 8, 1799.

Mr. Blount was expelled from the Senate on July 8, 1797, as "having been guilty of a high misdemeanor." An account of his impeachment, which was a proceeding distinct from the expulsion case here given, is found in the Annals of Congress, 5th Cong., 1st and 2d sess., vol. 1, 1797–'98, within pages 39 to 45, and Annals of Congress, 2d and 3d sess., vol. 2, 1798–'99, pages 2245 to 2416. The decision in the impeachment trial was that "the court ought not to hold jurisdiction of the said impeachment, and that the said impeachment is dismissed," the grounds on which the decision rested not being given.

The account of the expulsion case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from the Annals of Congress, 5th Cong., 1st and 2d sess., vol. 1, 1797–'98, within pages 33 to 45.

MONDAY, July 3, 1797.

The following message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

The whole of the intelligence which has for some time past been received from abroad, the correspondence between this Government and the ministers of the belligerent powers residing here, and the advices from the officers of the United States, civil and military, upon the frontiers, all conspire to show, in a very strong light, the critical situation of our country. That Congress might be enabled to form a more perfect judgment of it, and of the measures necessary to be taken, I have directed the proper officers to prepare such collections of extracts from the public correspondence as might afford the clearest information. The reports made to me, from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War, with a collection of documents from each of them, are now communicated to both Houses of Congress. I have desired that the message, reports, and documents may be considered as confidential, merely that the members of both Houses of Congress may be apprised of their contents before they should be made public. As soon as the two Houses shall have heard them, I shall submit to their discretion the publication of the whole or any such parts of them as they shall judge necessary or expedient for the public good.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, July 3, 1797.

The message and papers were read.

On motion, the copy of a letter communicated with the message was again read, in the hearing of Mr. Blount, who was absent when it was read the first time; and who, on being requested to declare whether he was the author of this letter or not, observed that he wrote a letter to Cary, but was unable to say whether the copy was a correct one or not without recurrence to his papers; and desired that he might have until to-morrow to reply.

TUESDAY, July 4, 1797.

Mr. Cocke laid before the Senate a letter addressed to him, signed William Blount, purporting that it was necessary for him, the said William Blount, to have further time for recurrence to his papers and other evidence to remove suspicion.

Resolved, That so much of the message from the President of the United States, of the 3d instant, and the papers accompanying the same, as relates to a letter purporting to have been written by William Blount, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, be referred to a select committee, to consider and report what, in their opinion, it is proper for the Senate to do thereon; and that the said committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records relating to the subject committed to them, and that Messrs. Ross, Stockton, Henry, Sedgwick, and Read be the committee.

Ordered, That the Senate be, for the present, under an injunction of secrecy on the papers referred to in the above-mentioned message.

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1797.

Mr. Ross, from the committee on part of the message of the President of the United States, of the 3d instant, made report; and the report was read.

Ordered, That the Vice-President notify William Blount, Senator from the State of Tennessee, by letter, to attend the Senate.

The Vice-President accordingly addressed to him the following letter, by the Doorkeeper:

SENATE CHAMBER, July 5, 1797.

SIR: You are hereby required to attend the Senate, in your place, without delay. By order of the Senate.

TH. JEFFERSON,
President of the Senate.

WILLIAM BLOUNT, Esq.,

It was agreed that the consideration of this motion be postponed until to-morrowf

Ordered, That the injunction of secrecy respecting the message of the President o. the United States of the 3d instant, and the papers accompanying the same, be taken off.

The Vice-President acquainted the Senate that the Doorkeeper had returned his letter addressed agreeably to their order to William Blount, as on inquiry he could not be found.

THURSDAY, July 6, 1797.

Mr. Ross, from the committee to whom was referred that part of the President's message of the 3d instant which relates to a letter purporting to have been written by William Blount, esq., together with the papers accompanying the same, made a further report; which was read. Upon which,

Mr. Blount read in his place a declaration, purporting that he should attend in his seat, from time to time, to answer to any allegations that might be brought against him.

Ordered, That the consideration of the report of the committee be postponed until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

On motion by Mr. Blount that he be heard by counsel on the subject-matter of this report,

A motion was made to postpone the consideration of this motion until to morrow, and it passed in the negative.

Resolved, That Mr. Blount be heard by counsel, not exceeding two, to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Ordered, That the Secretary furnish Mr. Blount with attested copies of such papers as he may point out, respecting the subject this day reported on by the committee.

FRIDAY, July 7, 1797.

Resolved, That the instructions to the committee to whom was referred that part of the President's message of the 3d instant which relates to a letter purporting to have been written by William Blount, esq., together with the papers accompanying the same, be amended by adding, after the word "records," the following words: "and particularly the papers of William Blount, esq."

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the report of the above-mentioned committee, made yesterday.

On motion that such printers as may request it be accommodated with stands on the floor of the Senate, to enable them to take notes of their proceedings on the present occasion, it passed in the negative.

Mr. Blount notified the Senate that Jared Ingersoll and Alexander J. Dallas are the counsel he has employed, agreeably to the vote of the Senate passed yesterday.

The President requested Mr. Blount to declare whether or not he was the author of a letter a copy of which was communicated with the message of the President of the United States of the 3d instant.

Mr. Blount declined to answer.

On motion, in consequence of the request of the counsel above mentioned that they have until Monday next to prepare themselves to show cause why the report of the committee should not be adopted, after debate it was agreed that the question before the Senate be postponed for the purpose of receiving a special message from the House of Representatives.

SATURDAY, July 8, 1797.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee to whom was referred that part of the President's message which relates to a letter purporting to have been written by William Blount, esq., together with the papers accompanying the same.

On motion, Mr Justice Smith was desired to attend and administer the oath to such witnesses as might be adduced.

On motion, Mr. Martin and Mr. Cocke, of the Senate, being sworn, severally testified on inspection of the letter said to be written by Mr. Blount, that it was his handwriting, they being acquainted therewith, and having seen him write.

The President then said:

"William Blount, esq., you have now an opportunity, agreeably to the vote of Senate, in pursuance of your own request, by your counsel, to show cause why the report of the committee should not be adopted."

Mr. Blount was heard by his counsel, Mr. Ingersoll and Mr. Dallas; and,

After debate,

A motion was made to postpone the consideration of the report of the committee to the next session of Congress; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 7, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, Gunn, Martin, Tazewell, and Tatnall.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Bradford, Foster, Goodhue, Henry, Hillhouse, Howard, Hunter, Latimer, Laurance, Livermore, Marshall, Read, Ross, Rutherfurd, Sedgwick, Tichenor, Tracy, and Vining.

On the question to agree to the report of the committee, as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Ross, Stockton, Henry, Sedgwick, and Read.]

The committee to whom was referred that part of the President's message which relates to a letter purporting to have been written by William Blount, esq., one of the Senators from the State of Tennessee, together with the papers accompanying the same, having had the same under their consideration, beg leave to make a further report:

That Mr. Blount, having declined an acknowledgment or denial of the letter imputed to him, and having failed to appear to give any satisfactory explanation respecting it, your committee sent for the original letter, which accompanies this report, and it is in the following words:

COLONEL KING'S IRON WORKS,
April 21, 1797.

DEAR CAREY: I wished to have seen you before I returned to Philadelphia, but I am obliged to return to the session of Congress, which commences on the 15th of May.

Among other things that I wished to have seen you about was the business Capt. Chesholm mentioned to the British minister last winter at Philadelphia.

I believe, but am not quite sure, that the plan then talked of will be attempted this fall; and if it is attempted it will be in a much larger way than then talked of, and if the Indians act their part I have no doubt but it will succeed. A man of consequence has gone to England about the business, and if he makes arrangements as he expects I shall myself have a hand in the business, and probably shall be at the head of the business on the part of the British. You are, however, to understand that it is not yet quite certain that the plan will be attempted, yet you will do well to keep things in a proper train of action in case it should be attempted, and to do so will require all your management—I say require all your management, because you must take care in whatever you say to Rogers or anybody else not to let the plan be discovered by Hawkins, Dinsmore, Byers, or any other person in the interest of the United States or Spain.

If I attempt this plan I shall expect to have you and all my Indian country and Indian friends with me; but you are now in good business, I hope, and you are not to risk the loss of it by saying anything that will hurt you until you again hear from me. Where Capt. Chesholm is I do not know; I left him in Philadelphia in March, and he frequently visited the minister and spoke upon the subject; but I believe he will go into the Creek Nation by way of South Carolina or Georgia. He gave out he was going to England, but I did not believe him. Among other things that you may safely do will be to keep up my consequence with Watts and the Creeks and Cherokees generally, and you must by no means say anything in favor of Hawkins, but, as often as you can with safety to yourself, you may teach the Creeks to believe he is no better than he should be. Any power or consequence he gets will be against our plan. Perhaps Rogers, who has no office to lose, is the best man to give out talks against Hawkins. Read the letter to Rogers, and if you think it best to send it to him put a wafer in it and forward it to him by a safe hand, or perhaps you had best send for him to come to you, and speak to him yourself respecting the state and prospect of things.

I have advised you in whatever you do to take care of yourself. I have now to tell you to take care of me, too, for a discovery of the plan would prevent the success and much injure all the parties concerned.

It may be that the commissioners may not run the line as the Indians expect or wish, and in that case it is probable the Indians may be taught to blame me for making the treaty. To such complaints against me, if such there are, it may be said by my friends, at proper times and places, that Doublehead confirmed the treaty with the President at Philadelphia, and receives as much as $5,000 a year, to be paid to the nation, over and above the first price; indeed, it may with truth be said that, though I made the treaty, that I made it by the instructions of the President, and, in fact, it may with truth be said that I was by the President instructed to purchase much more land than the Indians would agree to sell. This sort of talk will be throwing all the blame off me upon the late President, and as he is now out of office it will be of no consequence how much the Indians blame him. Among other things that may be said for me is that I was not at the running of the line, and that if I had been it would have been run more to their satisfaction. In short, you understand the subject, and must take care to give out the proper talks, to keep up my consequence with the Creeks and Cherokees. Can't Rogers contrive to get the Creeks to desire the President to take Hawkins out of the nation? For if he stays in the Creek Nation and gets the good will of the nation he can and will do great injury to our plan. When you have read this letter over three times, then burn it. I shall be at Knoxville in July or August, when I will send for Watts and give him the whisky I promised him.

I am, etc.,

WILLIAM BLOUNT.

Two Senators, now present in the Senate, have declared to the committee that they are well acquainted with the handwriting of Mr. Blount, and have no doubt that this letter was written by him. Your committee have examined many letters from Mr. Blount to the Secretary of War, a number of which are herewith submitted, as well as the letter addressed by Mr. Blount to Mr. Cook, his colleague in the Senate, and to this committee, respecting the business now under consideration, and find them all to be of the same handwriting with the letter in question. Mr. Blount has never denied this letter, but, on the other hand, when the copy transmitted to the Senate was read in his presence, on the 3d instant, he acknowledged in his place that he had written a letter to Carey, of which he had preserved a copy, but could not then decide whether the copy read was a true one. Your committee are therefore fully persuaded that the original letter now produced was written and sent to Carey by Mr. Blount. They also find that this man Carey, to whom it was addressed, is, to the knowledge of Mr. Blount, in the pay and employment of the United States as their interpreter to the Cherokee Nation of Indians, and an assistant in the public factory at Tellico Blockhouse. That Hawkins, who is so often mentioned in this letter as a person who must be brought into suspicion among the Creeks, and if possible driven from his station, is the superintendent of Indian affairs for the United States among the Southern Indians; Dinsmore is agent for the United States in the Cherokee Nation; and Byers one of the agents in the public factory at Tellico Blockhouse.

The plan hinted at in this extraordinary letter to be executed under the auspices of the British is so capable of different constructions and conjectures that your committee at present forbear giving any decided opinion respecting it, except that to Mr. Blount's own mind it appeared to be inconsistent with the interests of the United States and of Spain, and he was therefore anxious to conceal it from both. But when they consider his attempts to seduce Carey from his duty as a faithful interpreter, and to employ him as an engine to alienate the affections and confidence of the Indians from the public officers of the United States residing among them; the measures he has proposed to excite a temper which must produce the recall or expulsion of our superintendent from the Creek Nation; his insidious advice tending to the advancement of his own popularity and consequence, at the expense and hazard of the good opinion which the Indians entertain of this Government and of the treaties subsisting between us and them, your committee have no doubt that Mr. Blount's conduct has been inconsistent with his public duty, renders him unworthy of a further continuance of his present public trust in this body, and amounts to a high misdemeanor. They therefore unanimously recommend to the Senate an adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That William Blount, esq., one of the Senators of the United States, having been guilty of a high misdemeanor, entirely inconsistent with his public trust and duty as a Senator, be, and he hereby is, expelled from the Senate of the United States.

The report was adopted—yeas 25, nay 1; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bingham, Bloodworth, Bradford, Brown, Cocke, Foster, Goodhue, Gunn, Henry, Hillhouse, Howard, Hunter, Latimer, Laurance, Livermore, Martin, Marshall, Read, Ross, Rutherfurd, Sedgwick, Tatnall, Tichenor, Tracy, and Vining.

Mr. Tazewell voted in the negative.

So it was

Resolved, That William Blount, esq., one of the Senators of the United States, having been guilty of a high misdemeanor, entirely inconsistent with his public trust and duty as a Senator, be, and he hereby is, expelled from the Senate of the United States.

Ordered, That the Secretary transmit to the executive of the State of Tennessee an attested copy of the proceedings of the Senate on the report of the committee, of the 6th instant, for the expulsion of William Blount.

Ordered, That the Secretary lay before the President of the United States an attested copy of the proceedings of the Senate on his message of the 3d instant, transmitting a letter signed William Blount, directed to Mr. Cary.

[Tenth Congress—First session.]

JOHN SMITH,

Senator from Ohio from October 25, 1803, till he resigned, April 25, 1808.

November 27, 1807, the Senate resolved that a committee be appointed to inquire whether it was compatible with the privileges of the Senate that Mr. Smith, against whom bills of indictment were found at the United States circuit court of Virginia for treason and misdemeanor, should be permitted longer to have a seat therein; and that the committee inquire into all the facts regarding the conduct of Mr. Smith as an alleged associate of Aaron Burr, and report to the Senate. December 31, the committee reported that the conspiracy of Aaron Burr and his associates was of such a character, and that its existence was so established by evidence, that it was incompatible with the privileges of the Senate that any person engaged in it should be permitted to hold a seat in the Senate. The committee submit to the Senate the evidence collected, and leave it to the Senate to determine whether the facts are sufficient to substantiate the participation of Mr. Smith in the conspiracy. The committee reported that the bills of indictment found against Mr. Smith in the United States circuit court at Richmond were precisely similar to those found against Aaron Burr; that owing to the fact that certain evidence was not admitted in the trial of Mr. Burr, the jury had found that he was "not proved to be guilty, under that indictment, by any evidence submitted to them"; that on account of this decision the counsel for the United States abandoned the prosecution against Mr. Smith; that the committee was not disposed to question the correctness of this decision on a case of treason before a court of criminal jurisdiction, but that whether the transactions proved against Aaron Burr did or did not amount, in technical language, to an overt act of levying war, there was no doubt in the minds of the committee that but for the vigilance and energy of the Government in crushing his designs they would have resulted in war; that a grand jury had charged Mr. Smith with being an accomplice in these designs, and that the fact that under the circumstances the prosecution against Mr. Smith had been abandoned did not, in the opinion of the committee, remove the imputation which the accusations of the grand jury had brought upon him; that the committee would not permit themselves to comment upon the evidence submitted or the answers which Mr. Smith had given as sufficient for his justification, but that they felt compelled to submit for the consideration of the Senate a resolution that by his participation in the conspiracy of Aaron Burr he had been guilty of conduct incompatible with his station as a Senator, and that he be expelled therefor. April 9, 1808, after long debate on the question to agree to the resolution, 19 voted yea and 10 nay; so that, two-thirds of the Senators not concurring therein, he was not expelled.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journal, 10th Cong., 1st sess., with the report of the committee from Annals of Congress, 10th Cong., 1st sess., vol. I, pages 56–62.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

FRIDAY, November 27, 1807.

The Hon. John Smith, from the State of Ohio, attended.

On motion, the following resolution, having been amended, was agreed to:

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire whether it be compatible with the honor and privileges of this House that John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, against whom bills of indictment were found at the circuit court of Virginia, held at Richmond in August last, for treason and misdemeanor, should be permitted any longer to have a seat therein; and that the committee do inquire into all the facts regarding the conduct of Mr. Smith as an alleged associate of Aaron Burr, and report the same to the Senate."

Ordered, That Messrs. Adams, Maclay, Franklin, Smith of Maryland, Pope, Thruston, and Anderson be the committee.

During the discussion of the preceding resolution,

Mr. Tiffin, by permission, read in his place a letter from Mr. Smith, as follows:

WASHINGTON, November 27, 1807.

DEAR SIR: Just having heard that a motion is pending in the Senate to appoint a committee to inquire into certain charges exhibited against me at Richmond by the late grand jury, I beg you, sir, to assure the Senate, in my name, that nothing will afford me more pleasure than to have a public investigation of the said charges, and an opportunity to vindicate my innocence, and I beg you, from your seat, to make this statement.

I am, dear sir, respectfully, yours, &c.,

JOHN SMITH.

Hon. Mr. TIFFIN.

[An account of the debate is found on pages 39–42 of Annals of Congress referred to in the head-note.]

MONDAY, November 30, 1807.

Mr. Adams stated that he was instructed by the committee appointed on the 27th instant to inquire into the conduct of John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, to submit to the Senate the following resolution; which was read and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Secretary lay this resolution before the President of the United States.

Mr. Adams, from the same committee, also stated that he was instructed to submit to the Senate the following resolution; which was read and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the committee appointed on the 27th instant to inquire and report the facts respecting the conduct of John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, as an alleged associate of Aaron Burr, be authorized to extend their inquiries to any other facts which, in their opinion, would be incompatible with his duty as a Senator of the United States, and that they be authorized to send for persons, papers, and records."

WEDNESDAY, December 2, 1807.

The following written message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Coles, his secretary:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with the request made in the resolution of the Senate of November 30 I must inform them that when the prosecutions against Aaron Burr and his associates were instituted I delivered to the Attorney-General all the evidence on the subject, formal and informal, which I had received, to be used by those employed in the prosecutions. On the receipt of the resolution of the Senate, I referred it to the Attorney-General, with a request that he would enable me to comply with it by putting into my hands such of the papers as might give information relative to the conduct of John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, as an alleged associate of Aaron Burr, and having this moment received from him the affidavit of Elias Glover, with an assurance that it is the only paper in his possession which is within the term of the request of the Senate, I now transmit it for their use.

TH. JEFFERSON.

DECEMBER 2, 1807.

The message was read.

Ordered, That the message and paper therein mentioned be referred to the committee appointed on the 27th of November last to inquire into the conduct of Mr. Smith as an alleged associate of Aaron Burr.

FRIDAY, December 4, 1807.

Mr. Adams stated that he was instructed by the committee appointed to inquire into the conduct of John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, to submit the following resolution; which was read and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the committee appointed to inquire into the conduct of John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, be authorized to admit the attendance of Mr. Smith."

MONDAY, December 7, 1807.

Mr. Adams stated that he was instructed by the committee appointed to inquire into the conduct of John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, to submit the following resolution; which was read and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the committee appointed to inquire and report the facts relating to the conduct of John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, be authorized to cause to be printed, under their inspection, all such documents and papers touching the subject-matter of the inquiries on which they have been appointed as may appear necessary to the committee, previous to the presentation of the same to the Senate."

THURSDAY, December 31, 1807.

Mr. Adams stated that the committee appointed on the 27th of November last "to inquire whether it be compatible with the honor and privileges of this House that John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, against whom bills of indictment were found at the circuit court of Virginia, held at Richmond in August last, for treason and misdemeanor, should be permitted any longer to have a seat therein," were ready to report, and he made the following motion; which was read and agreed to:

Ordered, That John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, be notified by the Vice-President to attend in his place.

The Vice-President accordingly notified Mr. Smith in the words following:

"SIR: You are hereby required to attend the Senate in your place without delay.

"By order of the Senate.

"GEO. CLINTON,
"President of the Senate.

"JOHN SMITH, Esq.,
"Senator from the State of Ohio."

And Mr. Smith attended.

Whereupon,

Mr. Adams made report from the committee last mentioned; and the report was read.

On motion,

Ordered, That three hundred copies thereof be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. Adams also, from the same committee, made a further report, which was read.

Ordered, That it lie for consideration.

The queries addressed by the committee to Mr. Smith, and his answers to the same, were read; also the testimony of James Taylor, esq., and Mr. Smith's letter to the committee relating thereto.

A motion was made by Mr. Hillhouse that Mr. Smith's answers be printed for the use of the Senate; and objections arising thereon that the said answer contained exceptionable matter which ought not to be printed,

It was agreed, by consent of Mr. Smith, that he should take back his answers, and expunge such exceptionable matters, and that the answers should then be printed, under the inspection of the chairman of the committee.

[An account of the debate is found on pages 62, 63 of the Annals of Congress referred to in the head-note.]

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Adams, Maclay, Franklin, Smith of Maryland Pope, Thruston, and Anderson.]

Your committee are of opinion that the conspiracy of Aaron Burr and his associates against the peace, union, and liberties of these States is of such a character, and that its existence is established by such a mass of concurring and mutually corroborative testimony, that it is incompatible, not only with the honor and privileges of this House, but with the deepest interests of this nation, that any person engaged in it should be permitted to hold a seat in the Senate of the United States.

Whether the facts, of which the committee submit herewith such evidence as, under the order of the Senate, they have been able to collect, are sufficient to substantiate the participation of Mr. Smith in that conspiracy or not will remain for the Senate to decide.

The committee submit also to the consideration of the Senate the correspondence between Mr. Smith and them, through their chairman, in the course of their meetings. The committee have never conceived themselves invested with authority to try Mr. Smith. Their charge was to report an opinion relating to the honor and privileges of the Senate and the facts relating to the conduct of Mr. Smith. Their opinion, indeed, cannot be expressed in relation to the privilege of the Senate without relating, at the same time, to Mr. Smith's right of holding a seat in this body; but in that respect the authority of the committee extends only to proposal, and not to decision. But as he manifested a great solicitude to be heard before them, they obtained permission from the Senate to admit his attendance, communicated to him the evidence in their possession by which he was inculpated, furnished him in writing with the questions arising from it which appeared to them material, and received from him the information and explanations herewith submitted as part of the facts reported. But Mr. Smith has claimed as a right to be heard in his defense by counsel, to have compulsory process for witnesses, and to be confronted with his accusers, as if the committee had been a circuit court of the United States. But it is before the Senate itself that your committee conceived it just and proper that Mr. Smith's defense of himself should be heard. Nor have they conceived themselves bound in this inquiry by any other rules than those of natural justice and equity due to a brother Senator on the one part, and to their country on the other.

Mr. Smith represents himself on this inquiry as solitary, friendless, and unskilled, contending for rights which he intimates are denied him; and the defender of Senatorial privileges which he seems apprehensive will be refused him by Senators, liable, so long as they hold their offices, to have his case made their own. The committee are not unaware that in the vicissitudes of human events no member of this body can be sure that his conduct will never be made a subject of inquiry and decision before the assembly to which he belongs. They are aware that, in the course of proceeding which the Senate may now sanction, its members are marking out a precedent which may hereafter apply to themselves. They are sensible that the principles upon which they have acted ought to have the same operation upon their own claims to privilege as upon those of Mr. Smith; the same relation to the rights of their constituents which they have to those of the legislature which he represents. They have deemed it their duty to advance in the progress of their inquiry with peculiar care and deliberation. They have dealt out to Mr. Smith that measure which, under the supposition of similar circumstances, they would be content to find imparted to themselves; and they have no hesitation in declaring that under such imputations, colored by such evidence, they should hold it a sacred obligation to themselves, to their fellow-Senators, and to their country to meet them by direct, unconditional acknowledgment or denial, without seeking a refuge from the broad face of day in the labyrinth of technical forms.

In examining the question whether these forms of judicial proceedings or the rules of judicial evidence ought to be applied to the exercise of that censorial authority which the Senate of the United States possesses over the conduct of its members, let us assume as the test of their application either the dictates of unfettered reason, the letter and spirit of the Constitution, or precedents domestic or foreign, and your committee believe that the result will be the same; that the power of expelling a member must, in its nature, be discretionary, and in its exercise always more summary than the tardy process of judicial tribunals.

The power of expelling a member for misconduct results on the principles of common sense from the interest of the nation that the high trust of legislation should be invested in pure hands. When the trust is elective it is not to be presumed that the constituent body will commit the deposit to the keeping of worthless characters. But when a man whom his fellow-citizens have honored with their confidence on the pledge of his spotless reputation has degraded himself by the commission of infamous crimes which become suddenly and unexpectedly revealed to the world, defective indeed would be that institution which should be impotent to discard from its bosom the contagion of such a member, which should have no remedy of amputation to apply until the poison had reached the heart.

The question upon the trial of a criminal cause before the courts of common law is not between guilt and innocence, but between guilt and the possibility of innocence. If a doubt can possibly be raised, either by the ingenuity of the party or of his counsel, or by the operation of general rules in their unforeseen application to particular cases, that doubt must be decisive for acquittal, and the verdict of not guilty perhaps in nine cases out of ten means no more than that the guilt of the party has not been demonstrated in the precise, specific, and narrow forms prescribed by law. The humane spirit of these laws multiplies the barriers for the protection of innocence and freely admits that these barriers may be abused for the shelter of guilt. It avows a strong partiality favorable to the person upon trial, and acknowledges the preference that ten guilty should escape rather than that one innocent should suffer. The interest of the public that a particular crime should be punished is but as one to ten, compared with the interest of the party, that innocence should be spared. Acquittal only restores the party to the common rights of every other citizen; it restores him to no public trust; it invests him with no public confidence; it substitutes the sentence of mercy for the doom of justice, and to the eyes of impartial reason in the great majority of cases must be considered rather as a pardon than a justification.

But when a member of a legislative body lies under the imputation of aggravated offenses and the determination upon his cause can operate only to remove him from a station of extensive powers and important trust, this disproportion between the interest of the public and the interest of the individual disappears; if any disproportion exists it is of an opposite kind. It is not better that ten traitors should be members of this Senate than that one innocent man should suffer expulsion. In either case, no doubt, the evil would be great. But in the former it would strike at the vitals of the nation; in the latter it might, though deeply to be lamented. only be the calamity of an individual.

By the letter of the Constitution the power of expelling a member is given to each of the two Houses of Congress, without any limitation other than that which requires a concurrence of two-thirds of the votes to give it effect.

The spirit of the Constitution is perhaps in no respect more remarkable than in the solicitude which it has manifested to secure the purity of the Legislature by that of the elements of its composition. A qualification of age is made necessary for the members to insure the maturity of their judgment; a qualification of long citizenship to insure a community of interests and affections between them and their country; a qualification of residence to provide a sympathy between every member and the portion of the Union from which he is delegated; and to guard, as far as regulation can guard, against every bias of personal interest and every hazard of interfering duties, it has made every member of Congress ineligible to office which he contributed to create, and every officer of the Union incapable of holding a seat in Congress. Yet, in the midst of all this anxious providence of legislative virtue, it has not authorized the constituent body to recall in any case its representative. It has not subjected him to removal by impeachment; and when the darling of the people's choice has become their deadliest foe can it enter the imagination of a reasonable man that the sanctuary of their legislation must remain polluted with his presence until a court of common law with its pace of snail can ascertain whether his crime was committed on the right or on the left bank of a river; whether a puncture of difference can be found between the words of the charge and the words of the proof; whether the witnesses of his guilt should or should not be heard by his jury; and whether he was punishable because present at an overt act or intangible to public justice because he only contrived and prepared? Is it conceivable that a traitor to that country which has loaded him with favors, guilty to the common understanding of all mankind, should be suffered to return unquestioned to that post of honor and confidence where, in the zenith of his good fame, he had been placed by the esteem of his countrymen, and in defiance of their wishes, in mockery of their fears, surrounded by the public indignation, but inaccessible to its bolt, pursue the purposes of treason in the heart of the national councils? Must the assembled rulers of the land listen with calmness and indifference session after session to the voice of notorious infamy until the sluggard step of municipal justice can overtake his enormities? Must they tamely see the lives and fortunes of millions, the safety of present and future ages, depending upon his vote recorded with theirs, merely because the abused benignity of general maxims may have remitted to him the forfeiture of his life?

Such, in very supposable cases, would be the unavoidable consequences of a principle which should offer the crutches of judicial tribunals as an apology for crippling the Congressional power of expulsion. Far different, in the opinion of your committee, is the spirit of our Constitution. They believe that the very purpose for which this power was given was to preserve the Legislature from the first approaches of infection; that it was made discretionary because it could not exist under the procrastination of general rules; that its process must be summary, because it would be rendered nugatory by delay.

Passing from the constitutional view of the subject to that which is afforded by the authority of precedent, your committee find that since the establishment of our present National Legislature there has been but one example of expulsion from the Senate. In that case the member implicated was called upon in the first instance to answer whether he was the author of a letter the copy of which only was produced, and the writing of which was the cause of his expulsion. He was afterwards requested to declare whether he was the author of the letter itself, and declining in both cases to answer, the fact of his having written it was established by a comparison of his handwriting and by the belief of persons who had seen him write, upon inspection of the letter. In all these points the committee perceive the admission of a species of evidence which in courts of criminal jurisdiction would be excluded, and in the resolution of expulsion the Senate declared the person inculpated guilty of a high misdemeanor, although no presentment or indictment had been found against him and no prosecution of law was ever commenced upon the case.

This event occurred in July, 1797. About fifteen months before that time, upon an application from the legislature of Kentucky requesting an investigation by the Senate of a charge against one of the members from that State of perjury, which had been made in certain newspaper publications, but for which no prosecution had been commenced, the Senate did adopt by a majority of 16 votes to 8 the report of a committee purporting that the Senate had no jurisdiction to try the charge, and that the memorial of the Kentucky legislature should be dismissed. There were, indeed, very sufficient reasons of a different kind assigned in the same report for not pursuing the investigation in that particular case any further; and your committee believe that in the reasoning of that report some principles were assumed and some inferences drawn which were altogether unnecessary for the determination of that case which were adopted without a full consideration of all their consequences, and the inaccuracy of which was clearly proved by the departure from them in the instance which was so soon afterwards to take place. It was the first time that a question of expulsion had ever been agitated in Congress since the adoption of the Constitution, and the subject being thus entirely new, was considered perhaps too much with reference to the particular circumstances of the moment, and not enough upon the numerous contingencies to which the general question might apply. Your committee state this opinion with some confidence, because of the sixteen Senators who in March 1796, voted for the report dismissing the memorial of the Kentucky legislature eleven, on the subsequent occasion in July, 1797, voted also for that report which concluded with a resolution for the expulsion of Mr. Blount. The other five were no longer present in the Senate. Yet, if the principles advanced in the first report had been assumed as the ground of proceeding at the latter period the Senate would have been as impotent of jurisdiction upon the offense of Mr. Blount as they had supposed themselves upon the allegation against Mr. Marshall.

Those parts of the fifth and sixth articles amendatory to the Constitution upon which the report in the case of Mr. Marshall appears to rely for taking away the jurisdiction of the Senate your committee suppose can only be understood as referring to prosecutions at law; to suppose that they were intended as restrictions upon powers expressly granted by the Constitution to the Legislature or either of its branches would in a manner annihilate the power of impeachment as well as that of expulsion. It would lead to the absurd conclusion that the authority given for the purpose of removing iniquity from the seats of power should be denied its exercise in precisely those cases which most loudly call for its energies. It would present the singular spectacle of a legislature vested with powers of expelling its members, of impeaching, removing, and disqualifying public officers for trivial transgressions beneath the cognizance of the law, yet forbidden to exert them against capital or infamous crimes.

These two articles were in substance borrowed from similar regulations contained in that justly celebrated statute which for so many ages has been distinguished by the name of the Great Charter of England. Yet in that country, where they are recognized as the most solid foundations of the liberties of the nation, they have never been considered as interfering with the power of expelling a member, exercised at all times by the House of Commons; a power which there, however, rests only upon parliamentary usage, and has never been bestowed, as in the Constitution of the United States, by any act of supreme legislation. From a number of precedents which have been consulted it is found that the exercise of this authority there has always been discretionary and its process always far otherwise than compendious in the prosecutions before the judicial courts. So far, indeed, have they been from supposing a conviction at law necessary to precede a vote of expulsion that in one instance a resolution to demand a prosecution appears immediately after the adoption of the resolution to expel. In numerous cases the member submits to examination, adduces evidence in his favor, and has evidence produced against him, with or without formal authentication, and the discretion of the house is not even restricted by the necessary concurrence of more than a bare majority of the votes.

The provision in our Constitution which forbids the expulsion of a member by an ordinary majority and requires for this act of rigorous and painful duty the assent of two-thirds your committee consider as a wise and sufficient guard against the possible abuse of this legislative discretion. In times of heat and violent party spirit the rights of the minority might not always be duly respected if a majority could expel their members under no other control than that of their own discretion. The operation of this rule is of great efficacy, both over the proceedings of the whole body and over the conduct of every individual member. The times when the most violent struggles of contending parties occur—when the conflict of opposite passions is most prone to excess—are precisely the times when the numbers are most equally divided; when the majority amounts to the proportion of two-thirds the security in its own strength is of itself a guard against extraordinary stretches of power; when the minority dwindles to the proportion of one-third its consciousness of weakness dissuades from any attempts to encroach upon the rights of the majority, which might provoke retaliation. But if expulsion were admissible only as a sequel to the issue of a legal prosecution or upon the same principles and forms of testimony which are established in the criminal courts, your committee can see no possible reason why it should be rendered still more imbecile by the requisition of two-thirds to give it effect.

It is now the duty of your committee to apply the principles which they have here endeavored to settle and elucidate to the particular case upon which the Senate have directed them to report. The bills of indictment found against Mr. Smith at the late session of the circuit court of the United States at Richmond (copies of which are herewith submitted) are precisely similar to those found against Aaron Burr. From the volume of printed evidence communicated by the President of the United States to Congress, relating to the trial of Aaron Burr, it appears that a great part of the testimony which was essential to his conviction upon the indictment for treason was withheld from the jury upon an opinion of the court that Aaron Burr, not having been present at the overt act of treason alleged in the indictment, no testimony relative to his conduct or declarations elsewhere, and subsequent to the transactions on Blannerhasset's Island, could be admitted. And in consequence of this suppression of evidence the traverse jury found a verdict "that Aaron Burr was not proved to be guilty, under that indictment, by any evidence submitted to them." It was also an opinion of the court that none of the transactions of which evidence was given on the trial of Aaron Burr did amount to an overt act of levying war, and, of course, that they did not amount to treason. These decisions, forming the basis of the issue upon the trials of Burr, anticipated the event which must have awaited the trials of the bills against Mr. Smith, who, from the circumstances of his case, must have been entitled to the benefit of their application; they were the sole inducements upon which the counsel for the United States abandoned the prosecution against him.

Your committee are not disposed now to question the correctness of these decisions on a case of treason before a court of criminal jurisdiction. But whether the transactions proved against Aaron Burr did or did not amount, in technical language, to an overt act of levying war, your committee have not a scruple of doubt on their minds that but for the vigilance and energy of the Government and of faithful citizens under its directions in arresting their progress and in crushing his designs, they would, in a very short lapse of time, have terminated not only in a war, but in a war of the most horrible description, in a war at once foreign and domestic. As little hesitation have your committee in saying that if the daylight of evidence, combining one vast complicated intention with overt acts innumerable, be not excluded from the mind by the curtain of artificial rules the simplest understanding cannot but see what the subtlest understanding cannot disguise, crimes before which ordinary treason whitens into virtue; crimes of which war is the mildest feature. The debauchment of our Army, the plunder and devastation of our own and foreign territories, the dissolution of our national Union, and the root of interminable civil war were but the means of individual aggrandizement, the steps to projected usurpation. If the ingenuity of a demon were tasked to weave into one composition all the great moral and political evils which could be inflicted upon the people of these States it could produce nothing more than a texture of war, dismemberment, and despotism.

Of these designs a grand jury composed of characters as respectable as this nation can boast have upon the solemnity of their oaths charged John Smith with being an accomplice. The reasons upon which the trial of this charge has not been submitted to the verdict of a jury have been shown by your committee and are proved by the letter from the attorney of the United States for the district of Virginia, herewith reported. And your committee are of opinion that the dereliction of the prosecution on these grounds cannot in the slightest degree remove the imputation which the accusations of the grand jury have brought to the door of Mr. Smith.

Your committee will not permit themselves to comment upon the testimony which they submit herewith to the Senate; nor upon the answers which Mr. Smith has given as sufficient for his justification. Desirous as the committee have been that this justification might be complete, anxiously as they wished for an opportunity declaring their belief of his innocence, they can neither control nor dissemble the operation of the evidence upon their minds; and, however painful to their feelings, they find themselves compelled by a sense of duty paramount to every other consideration to submit to the Senate for their consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, by his participation in the conspiracy of Aaron Burr against the peace, union, and liberties of the people of the United States, has been guilty of conduct incompatible with his duty and station as a Senator of the United States, and that he be therefore, and hereby is, expelled from the Senate of the United States.

On motion by Mr. White, it was agreed that the further consideration of the report be postponed until to-morrow.

FRIDAY, April 8, 1808.

The following written message was received from the President of the United States by Mr. Coles, his secretary:

To the Senate of the United States:

Agreeably to the request of the Senate in their resolution of yesterday I have examined my papers and find no letter from Matthew Nimmo of the date of November 28, 1806, nor any other from him of any date but that of January 23, 1807, now transmitted with all the papers in my possession which accompanied it. Nor do I find any letter from John Smith, of Ohio, bearing date at any time in the month of January, 1807.

Having delivered to the Attorney-General all the papers respecting the conspiracy of Aaron Burr which came to my hands during or before his prosecution, I might suppose the letters above requested had been delivered to him. But I must add my belief that I never received such letters and the ground of it. I am in the habit of noting daily in the list kept for that purpose the letters I receive daily by the names of the writers and dates of time and place, and this has been done with such exactness that I do not recollect ever to have detected a single omission. I have carefully examined that list from the 1st of November, 1806, to the last of June, 1807, and I find no note within that period of the receipt of any letter from Matthew Nimmo but that now transmitted, nor of any one of the date of January, 1807, from John Smith, of Ohio. The letters noted as received from him within that period are dated at Washington, February 2, 2, 7, and 21, which I have examined, and find relating to subjects entirely foreign to the objects of the resolution of the 7th instant; and others dated at Cincinnati, March 27, April 6, 13, and 17, which not being now in my possession, I presume have related to Burr's conspiracy, and have been delivered to the Attorney-General. I recollect nothing of their particular contents. I must repeat, therefore, my firm belief that the letters of Nimmo of November 28, 1806, and of John Smith of January, 1807, never came to my hands, and that if such were written (and Nimmo's letter expressly mentions his of November 28) they have been intercepted, or otherwise miscarried.

TH. JEFFERSON.

APRIL 8, 1808.

Ordered, To lie for consideration.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the first report of the committee appointed to inquire into the conduct of John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, as an alleged associate of Aaron Burr.

And, after debate,

On motion by Mr. Giles, it was agreed that the further consideration thereof be postponed until to-morrow.

[An account of the debate, with the speech of Mr. Adams, is found on pages 236–265 of the Annals of Congress referred to in the head-note.]

And on the question to agree to the resolution, it was determined in the negative, two-thirds of the Senators present not concurring therein—yeas 19, nays 10.

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Condit, Crawford, Franklin, Gaillard, Gilman, Gregg, Kitchel, Maclay, Mathewson, Milledge, Moore, Robinson, Smith of Maryland, Smith of Tennessee, Sumter, Tiffin, and Turner.

Rice as agent of the Secretary of War in the sale of the Fort Crawford reservation, by settlers on said reservation, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers." This resolution was amended so that the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to make the investigation. That committee reported June 9, 1858, that "after an examination of all the testimony adduced, they do not find that it sustains any allegation which imputes criminality to, or arraigns the integrity of Mr. Rice, and finding nothing in the developments of the investigation which, in the opinion of the committee, tend to disqualify him for a seat in the Senate, they herewith submit the record in the case as a part of this report, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject." The report was unanimously agreed to.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from the Senate Journal, 1st sess. 35th Cong., which includes the report of the committee.

The debates on the case, which are very brief, are found on pages 2075–2079, 2123, 2163 of the Congressional Globe, part 3, 1st sess. 35th Cong. The record accompanying the report of the committee is found in Senate Reports, 1st sess. 35th Cong., vol. 2, No. 314.

"Whereas the settlers on Fort Crawford reservation, in the State of Iowa, allege that they have been defrauded by Mr. Henry M. Rice, as agent of Hon. John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, in the sale of their claims as settlers on said reservation, viz:

"1. That said Secretary of War instructed said Henry M. Rice to sell to the settlers on said reservations their claims at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; that said Rice required said settlers to pay for their claims at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents per acre, and receipted to them, on the payment of said one dollar and fifty cents per acre, for but one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and refused to receipt to them for the remaining twenty-five cents per acre received of them by him, as aforesaid.

"2. That sundry cases in which settlers applied to said Rice for leave to enter their said claims, he referred them to his clerk, who charged them fees, varying from ten to eighty dollars each, in addition to the said one dollar and fifty cents per acre, for leave to purchase their said claims; that these fees were charged and received by said Rice corruptly, and, said settlers believe, through the interposition of his clerk.

"3. That said Rice negligently failed to give said settlers reasonable notice of the time of said sale, and thereby subjected them to the necessity of borrowing money at enormous rates of interest with which to purchase their said claims.

"4. That said Rice defrauded one of said settlers of his rights to purchase his claim under the instruction of the Secretary of War, by surreptitiously securing from him a quit-claim to a part of the land embraced in said claim: Therefore,

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to investigate the allegation of fraud and extortion made against Henry M. Rice, as agent of the Secretary of War, in the sale of the Fort Crawford reservation, by settlers on said reservation, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. Rice submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of five members, be appointed to investigate the charges preferred by certain citizens of Iowa, settlers upon the Fort Crawford reserve, as to the conduct of Henry M. Rice, special agent, appointed by the Secretary of War, to superintend the sale of that reserve; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to report by bill or otherwise."

SATURDAY, May 15, 1858.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. Rice; and having been amended, the resolution was agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia be instructed to investigate the charges preferred by certain citizens of Iowa, settlers upon the Fort Crawford reserve, as to the conduct of Henry M. Rice, special agent, appointed by the Secretary of War, to superintend the sale of that reserve; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to report by bill or otherwise."

WEDNESDAY, June 9, 1858.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Davis (chairman), Fitzpatrick, Johnson of Arkansas, Iverson, Broderick, Wilson, and King.]

Mr. Davis, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 15th ultimo, to inquire into certain charges made by citizens of Iowa against the Hon. Henry M. Rice, a Senator from Minnesota, reported:

That, under the authority of the resolution, they procured from the War Department, and elsewhere, papers exhibiting the facts in the case, and had before them twenty-two witnesses, who testified under oath as to the allegations made against Mr. Rice; and, after an examination of all the testimony adduced, they do not find that it sustains any allegation which imputes criminality to, or arraigns the integrity of, Mr. Rice, and finding nothing in the developments of the investigation which, in the opinion of the committee, tend to disqualify him for a seat in the Senate, they herewith submit the record in the case as a part of this report and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

of Mississippi.

STEPHEN R. MALLORY AND DAVID L. YULEE, of Florida.

C. C. CLAY AND BENJAMIN FITZPATRICK, of Alabama.

ROBERT TOOMBS,

of Georgia.

A motion was offered as an amendment that these names "be stricken from the list of Senators." It was ordered that both motions lie on the table. March 13, 1861, a resolution was submitted that Messrs. Brown, Davis, Mallory, Clay, Toombs, and Benjamin having withdrawn from the Senate, "their seats in this body have thereby become vacant." (Certain other Senators had withdrawn during the previous session and their terms of office had expired March 3, 1861. See foot notes.) Mr. Benjamin submitted the following motion:

Ordered, That the Journal of the proceedings of the Senate be so corrected as to record the fact that the Senators from the States of Florida and Alabama, and the Hon. Jefferson Davis, Senator of the State of Mississippi, made announcement that the said States of Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi had seceded from the Union, had resumed the powers delegated by the said several States to the United States of America, and that they, the said Senators, considered themselves by reason of said action of said States as being no longer entitled to retain their seats as Senators, and accordingly thereupon withdrew from the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the said motion; and

On motion by Mr. Douglas to amend the same by striking out all after the word "ordered," and in lieu thereof inserting:

"That Jefferson Davis of Mississippi, Stephen R. Mallory and David L. Yulee of Florida, C. C. Clay and Benjamin Fitzpatrick of Alabama, having announced to the Senate their withdrawal from the same,

* The remarks of the Senators on their withdrawal are found on pages 484-487 of the Congressional Globe, part 1, 2d sess. 36th Cong.

"Ordered, That their names be stricken from the list of Senators, and the Secretary directed no longer to call the same."

Mr. Benjamin raised a question of order, to wit: Whether it was in order to move to lay upon the table a motion to correct the Journal of the Senate of the preceding day; and Extracts from remarks given below will show the facts and arguments presented in support of the two resolutions.

In the next session of Congress, Mr. Wigfall was expelled by resolution of July 11, 1861 (see page 741).

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journal, 2d sess. 36th Cong.; with extracts from remarks of Messrs. Foster and Clingman.

The debate in the case is found on pages 1447–1451 of the Congressional Globe, part 2, 2d sess. 36th Cong.

FRIDAY, March 8, 1861.

Mr. Foster submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Whereas L. T. Wigfall, now a Senator of the United States from the State of Texas, has declared in debate that he is a foreigner; that he owes no allegiance to this Government, but that he belongs to and owes allegiance to another and foreign state and government: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the said L. T. Wigfall be, and he hereby is, expelled from this body."

MONDAY, March 11, 1861.

On motion by Mr. Foster, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by him, the 8th instant, to expel the Hon. L. T. Wigfall from the Senate; and,

On motion by Mr. Clingman, to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "whereas," and in lieu thereof inserting:

"It is understood that the State of Texas has seceded from the Union, and is no longer one of the United States: Therefore

"Resolved, That she is not entitled to be represented in this body."

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. Clark that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 28, nays 16.

TUESDAY, March 12, 1861.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. Foster, the 8th instant, to expel the Hon. L. T. Wigfall from the Senate; and,

On motion by Mr. Simmons,

Ordered, That the resolution, with the amendment submitted by Mr. Clingman, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

[Extract made from remarks made in the Senate, March 11, 1861, by Mr. Foster, of Connecticut, in support of the resolution submitted by him, taken from pages 1447, 1448 of the Congressional Globe referred to in the head-note.]

"I have but very few words to say, Mr. President, either in regard to the resolution or the substitute. I do not propose, at least at present, to enter into any lengthened discussion either of the one or the other; and it is proper, perhaps, that I should state that I have offered the resolution without consultation with my political friends. It is entirely on my own independent responsibility that it is proposed to the body. I have thus offered it without consultation with my political friends; not becauseI do not need, as much as any one, advice and aid from them, nor because I am not, on proper occasions, a party man, but because I was desirous of presenting this question to the Senate altogether unconnected with party interests, and stripped, so far as possible, of all party considerations. I shall not, therefore, call upon any member of the Senate, on one side of the Chamber or the other, to support it; and I ask no member for his support of it; but beg every one to pass upon its naked merits. If it has merits, Senators of course will vote for it on their own view of those merits. If it has no merits, I trust I should be as far any member of the body from desiring to press it through on any party or political grounds. The privileges of a seat in this body are certainly of too high a character to be involved in any matter of party, and I should hope that in the consideration and in the decision of this question we shall rise above all such views, and discuss it and determine it upon far more elevated grounds.

"The Constitution provides for the qualification and the manner of the election of members of this body. It provides, in the third section of the first article, that each State shall be entitled to two Senators; and, in other parts of the instrument, provision is made in respect to the necessary age, to be not less than thirty years; that no person shall be eligible who has not been nine years a citizen of the United States; and, finally, it provides that Senators, like other officers, executive and judicial, of the United States, shall take an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution.

"These are substantially the requirements of the Constitution in regard to members of this body: and I take it it is implied that a Senator of the United States shall owe allegiance to the United States; that this shall be his country; that he shall either be a native-born or a naturalized citizen; and that, if not native-born, he shall have been at least nine years a citizen before he is eligible as a member; clearly manifesting the idea that a man shall become thoroughly American in thought and feeling before holding a seat in this body.

"It is not, however, on any technical grounds, as I suppose, as to citizenship, that the Senator from Texas is obnoxious to objection. I suppose he was a native-born citizen of the United States, and I suppose he was duly elected a member of this body; and I do not suppose that when he spoke of himself as a foreigner he meant that he was born out of the jurisdiction of the country, but that he had another meaning in his mind, which he probably would define more readily and perfectly than I could. Still, Mr. President, it seems to me that this body owes it to itself not to allow members to sit here who avow that they are foreigners, who avow that they owe no allegiance to this Government, who avow that they belong to a foreign government; and if that government happens to be in arms against this Government, attacking its troops, seizing its property, expelling from its territory officers and soldiers of the United States by force, tearing down and trampling in the dust the national flag, treating with scorn and contempt every emblem of our country's authority and power, there may be additional reasons why such avowals and declarations should not be passed idly by. What, beside entire contempt of the body, do such declarations indicate, uttered on the floor of the Senate?

"I felt it due to myself, as a member of this body, that we should inquire and decide whether it was consistent with our duty as members of the Senate of the United States to allow one so circumstanced, and avowing such feelings and opinions, longer to hold a seat here. I scarcely need say that I have no personal feeling on the subject. I can say with entire truth that so far as my personal relations with the Senator from Texas are concerned they have been entirely kind and friendly. I stated that this was not a party question, so it certainly is not a personal question, and I certainly shall endeavor to prevent its becoming one. If other members of the body think that it is right and proper for a man avowing these opinions to continue to sit here, I shall have done my duty, and shall feel relieved from a responsibility which I felt pressing upon me previously to offering the resolution. I could not, as it seemed to me, discharge my duty without offering it, and presenting the question distinctly to the decision of the Senate.

"The Senator from North Carolina has suggested a substitute for the resolution; and the question, I suppose, is first on the substitute. The substitute assumes the right of a State to secede from the Union, and it assumes that the State of Texas has seceded, and therefore, as a logical inference, that she is no longer entitled to representation in this body. I must be so unfortunate, if it be unfortunate, as to differ from the Senator from North Carolina in regard to the whole theory of our Constitution and Government. I do not believe that any State of this Union has any right, any power, under the Constitution, to secede, to take itself out of the Union of these States, which go to make up the United States of America. I differ widely and radically from all who entertain any such view of our Constitution and Government as that, and it appears to me to be a claim altogether monstrous. That this Government is one of power and authority; that no State in this Confederacy has any right, under the Constitution, to go out and cease to be a member of this Federal Union, is a proposition which is to me as clear as anything can be which is not absolutely self-evident. I am not, however, about to enter into an argument on the question. I am persuaded that if I were to endeavor to convince gentlemen who entertain the opposite view, and many do, whose opinions perhaps ought to be more weighty than mine, I should not be able to succeed in convincing them of their error. We entertain so precisely opposite and antagonistic views of law and Government and our Constitution, that any argument of mine or any reasoning of mine would be wholly lost upon them, as I am free to say theirs would be on me. We might just as well reason with each other in a foreign language, which the one understood and the other did not, and we should succeed just as well in convincing each other of our error on the one side and of the correctness of the opposite opinion."

[Extract from remarks made in the Senate, March 11, 1861, by Mr. Clingman, of North Carolina, against the adoption of the resolution submitted by Mr. Foster, taken from pages 1448, 1449 of the Congressional Globe referred to in the head-note.]

"Mr. President, I think the Senator from Connecticut has made a very good argument against his own resolution. If his argument be true, I think it is concluoive that his resolution ought not to be adopted; but there is a misunderstanding, perhaps, between us in relation to the facts. If we are to credit the newspapers, the State of Texas has called a convention, and that convention has passed an ordinance of secession, and submitted it to the people, and it has been ratified, it is stated, by a very large vote. That is the opinion entertained by the Senator from Texas, and it is my opinion about the facts, and probably the opinion of most gentlemen here. If that be true, and that be a valid act, and the State of Texas be no longer one of the United States, clearly my resolution is proper enough, and not the resolution of the Senator. When we decide for any cause of law or fact that a person upon this floor, claiming to be a Senator, is not entitled to a seat here, he is never expelled. How was it when, a few years ago, the Senate decided that a Senator from Iowa, who claimed a seat, was not entitled? Did anybody propose to expel him? Repeatedly the Senate and House of Representatives have decided that those who came here and attempted to act as members of the body were not entitled to seats; but nobody ever thought of expelling them on that ground.

"I need not, I am sure, dilate on this point of view; for I take it for granted the Senator agrees with me that if the State of Texas has in fact ceased to be one of the United States we should simply say so, and declare that she is not longer entitled to be represented. But the Senator argues that this act is invalid. Take it to be true; suppose Texas has no right, no power, to secede, and in fact has not seceded: then the Senator before me [Mr. Wigfall] is entitled to be here as a member of the body, unless you argue that his erroneous opinion upon that fact disqualifies him. Now, let us look at it for a moment. The Senator from Texas thinks that his State has seceded, and that he is no longer a Senator. That is his opinion as a matter of constitutional law. The Senator from Connecticut, on the other side, says that he is mistaken in that point. Well, sir, was it ever pretended that you would expel a Senator for a mistake upon a legal question? I ask Senators all around, was it ever maintained, that because a Senator differed with a majority upon a constitutional question, however important, that was a reason for expelling him from the body? I do not think so. The Senate may overrule him; they may take such action as to show him that in their judgment he is mistaken, and then he may feel bound to conform to their action, and may do so.

"The Senator from Connecticut says that secession is a monstrous idea. I admit that you might expel a Senator, perhaps, for having some monstrous idea, which showed that he was not capable of acting as one of the body. If, for example, a Senator were to entertain the opinion that the moon was made of green cheese, or some other absurdity, we might come to the conclusion that he had not intellect enough to act upon this floor as a Senator, and that therefore he ought to be driven off it; but will anybody pretend that this opinion of my friend from Texas stands in that category? Have not twenty Senators, perhaps, during the past session, declared on this floor that they entertained that very idea? The whole State of Virginia, I believe, "the mother of States and of statesmen," as she is called, almost without division of opinion, has always maintained that position. Without knowing what either of the Senators from Virginia would say, I take it for granted they both agree with the Senator from Texas.

"If it is an error, therefore, on his part, to believe that a State has a right to secede, and you can expel him for that reason, why not expel the Virginia Senators; why not expel the others who have expressed that opinion; and especially, why not expel those gentlemen who have declared it and gone away? Why is it that their names are called from time to time as Senators in this body? They have avowed the same opinion in quite as strong language as my friend from Texas, and they have acted upon it and gone away, and left us sometimes without a quorum, shown an utter defiance and disregard of the opinions which the Senator from Connecticut avows. Why not extend it to them?

"But the Senator alludes to the fact that the State of Texas has taken possession of some of the public property, and perhaps expelled the armies of the United States. Is that a sufficient reason for expelling her representatives here? If that be a good reason, it applies with more force to the other States. I ask that Senator how it is that he allows the name of Jefferson Davis to be called here, and makes no motion to expel him? He claims to be the head of a foreign government. Not only has his State seceded; not only has he advised taking possession of the forts; but he is the commander-in-chief of the army and the president of another republic, and yet he is a "marvelously proper" Senator; there is no motion made to expel him. I should like to know upon what principle it is."

[Thirty-seventh Congress—First session.]

JAMES M. MASON AND ROBERT M. T. HUNTER, of Virginia.

THOMAS L. CLINGMAN AND THOMAS BRAGG, of North Carolina.

JAMES CHESTNUT, JR.,

of South Carolina.

A. O. P. NICHOLSON, of Tennessee.

WILLIAM K. SEBASTIAN AND CHARLES B. MITCHEL, of Arkansas.

JOHN HEMPHILL AND LOUIS T. WIGFALL, of Texas.

July 10, 1861, a resolution was submitted that Messrs. Mason, Hunter, Clingman, Bragg, Chestnut, Nicholson, Sebastian,* Mitchel, Hemphill, and Wigfall be "expelled from the Senate." The preamble stated that it was "apparent that these Senators were engaged in the conspiracy for the destruction of the Union, or, with full knowledge of the conspiracy, had failed to advise the Government of its progress, or aid in its suppression." The following day the resolution was agreed to.

WEDNESDAY, July 10, 1861.

Mr. Clark submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Whereas a conspiracy has been formed against the peace, union, and liberties of the people and Government of the United States, and in furtherance of such conspiracy a portion of the people of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Texas have attempted to withdraw those States from the Union, and are now in arms against the Government; and

"Whereas James M. Mason and Robert M. T. Hunter, Senators from Virginia; Thomas L. Clingman and Thomas Bragg, Senators from North Carolina; James Chestnut, jr., a Senator from South Carolina; A. O. P. Nicholson, a Senator from Tennessee; William K. Sebastian* and Charles B. Mitchel, Senators from Arkansas; and John Hemphill and Louis T. Wigfall, Senators from Texas, have failed to appear in their seats in the Senate, and to aid the Government in this important crisis, and it is apparent to the Senate that said Senators are engaged in said conspiracy for the destruction of the Union and Government, or with full knowledge of such conspiracy have failed to advise the Government of its progress or aid in its suppression: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the said Mason, Hunter, Clingman, Bragg, Chestnut, Nicholson, Sebastian, Mitchel, Hemphill, and Wigfall be, and they hereby are, each and all of them, expelled from the Senate of the United States."

THURSDAY, July 11, 1861.

On motion by Mr. Clark, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution yesterday submitted by him to expel certain Senators from the Senate of the United States.

On motion by Mr. Latham to amend the resolution by inserting before the word

*This preamble and resolution was revoked and annulled, so far as Mr. Sebastian was concerned, by resolution of the Senate, March 3, 1877. See report No. 513, 1st sess. 44th Cong. The same resolution provided for settling the unpaid accounts of Mr. Sebastian.

"said," in the second line, the words "names of," and by striking out the words "expelled from the Senate of the United States," and inserting "stricken from the roll, and their seats declared vacant," so that the resolution will read:

"Therefore, resolved, That the names of said Mason, Hunter, Clingman, Bragg, Chestnut, Nicholson, Sebastian, Mitchel, Hemphill, and Wigfall be, and they hereby are, each and all of them, stricken from the roll, and their seats declared vacant,"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 11, nays 32.

On motion by Mr. Latham, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bayard, Breckinridge, Bright, Johnson of Tennessee, Johnson of Missouri, Latham, Nesmith, Polk, Powell, Rice, and Saulsbury.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Browning, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howe, King, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Pomeroy, Sherman, Simmons, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilmot, and Wilson.

So the amendment proposed by Mr. Latham was not agreed to.

On the question to agree to the resolution, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 32, nays 10.

On motion by Mr. Clark, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Browning, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howe, King, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Pomeroy, Sherman, Simmons, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilmot, and Wilson.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bayard, Breckinridge, Bright, Johnson of Tennessee, Johnson of Missouri, Latham, Nesmith, Polk, Powell, and Rice.

So the resolution was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative; and it was

"Therefore, resolved, That the said Mason, Hunter, Clingman, Bragg, Chestnut, Nicholson, Sebastian, Mitchel, Hemphill, and Wigfall be, and they hereby are, each and all of them, expelled from the Senate of the United States."

[Thirty-seventh Congress—Second session.]

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE,

Senator from Kentucky from March 4, 1861, till December 4, 1861, when he was expelled.

December 4, 1861, a resolution was submitted that John C. Breckinridge be expelled from the Senate. It was amended by a preamble stating that he "had joined the enemies of his country," and was agreed to.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate in relation thereto from the Journal of the Senate, 2d sess. 37th Cong.

WEDNESDAY, December 4, 1861.

Mr. Chandler submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That John C. Breckinridge be, and he hereby is, expelled from the Senate."

The Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the resolution; and the same having been amended, on the motion of Mr. Trumbull, to read as follows:

"Whereas John C. Breckinridge, a member of this body from the State of Kentucky, has joined the enemies of his country, and is now in arms against the Government he had sworn to support: Therefore,

"Resolved, That said John C. Breckinridge, the traitor, be, and he hereby is, expelled from the Senate."

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 37, nays none.

On motion by Mr. Trumbull, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Anthony, Browning, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Kennedy, King, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Latham, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Rice, Sherman, Simmons, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Thompson, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilmot, and Wilson.

So the resolution as amended was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

THURSDAY, December 5, 1861.

Mr. Rice stated that he was not in the Chamber yesterday when the vote was taken upon the resolution expelling John C. Breckinridge from the Senate, and asked unanimous consent to be allowed to have his vote recorded in the affirmative upon that question.

Whereupon,

It was unanimously agreed that the name of Mr. Rice be entered upon the list of yeas and nays among those who voted in the affirmative upon the passage of the said resolution.

[Thirty-seventh Congress—Second session.]

TRUSTEN POLK,

Senator from Missouri from March 4, 1857, till January 10, 1862.

December 18, 1861, the following resolution was submitted, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary: "Resolved, That Trusten Polk, of Missouri, now a traitor to the United States, be expelled and he hereby is expelled from the Senate." January 9, 1862, the committee reported that it appeared to their satisfaction that Trusten Polk had, in a letter transmitting pecuniary means to aid in the publication of a secession newspaper in Missouri, declared among other disloyal and treasonable expressions that "dissolution is now a fact," and that he hoped Missouri would not "hesitate a moment to go with her Southern sisters:" that this letter had been extensively published, and could hardly have failed to come to the notice of Senator Polk; yet that neither he nor any one in his behalf had appeared before the committee to deny the authenticity of the letter, or attempted in any way to explain it; that he had not only failed to appear in his seat during the session, but on the contrary, as the committee are fully satisfied, had left his home in Saint Louis, and had gone clandestinely within the lines of the enemy then in rebellion against the United States. They reported back the resolution with the unanimous recommendation that it pass. January 10 it passed by a vote of 36 yeas to no nays. A few remarks in regard to Mr. Polk's letter, and reference of the resolution, constitute the debate on the case.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to the case from Senate Journals, 2d sess. 37th Cong., with the report of the committee from Senate Reports, 2d sess., 37th Cong., No. 4.

The debate is found on page 126 of the Congressional Globe, part 1, 2d sess. 37th Cong.

WEDNESDAY, December 18, 1861.

Mr. Sumner submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"Resolved, That Trusten Polk, of Missouri, now a traitor to the United States, be expelled, and he hereby is expelled, from the Senate."

THURSSDAY, January 9, 1862.

Mr. Ten Eyck, from the Committee on the Jndiciary, to whom was referred a resolution for the expulsion of Trusten Polk, a Senator from the State of Missouri, reported the resolution without amendment, and with a recommendation that the resolution do pass.

Mr. Ten Eyck submitted a report (No. 4) on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Trumbull (chairman), Foster, Ten Eyck, Cowan, Harris, Bayard, and Powell.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JANUARY 9, 1862.—Submitted, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Ten Eyck made the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate for the expulsion of Trusten Polk, a Senator from the State of Missouri, report:

That it appears to the satisfaction of the committee that Trusten Polk recently and since the commencement of the present rebellion, in a letter transmitting pecuniary means to aid in the publication of a secession newspaper in Southwestern Missouri, among other disloyal and treasonable expressions used the following: "Dissolution is now a fact; not only a fact accomplished, but thrice repeated. Everything here looks like inevitable and final dissolution. Will Missouri hesitate a moment to go with her Southern sisters? I hope not. Please let me hear from you. I would be glad to keep posted as to the condition of things in Southwest Missouri. I like Governor Jackson's position. It looks like adherence to the 'Jackson resolutions.'"

That a copy of this letter was published in full in the Congressional Globe of the 19th of December last, the day after the resolution of expulsion in this case was introduced in the Senate, and has also, both before and since that time, been published and referred to in several other newspapers in Missouri and elsewhere, and widely circulated throughout the country, which publication could hardly have failed to come to the notice of Senator Polk; and yet neither he nor any other person in his behalf has appeared before the committee to deny the authenticity of the letter referred to, or attempted in any other way to deny or explain it so far as the committee are aware; a course of conduct deemed to be wholly incompatible with the idea of his innocence, since an innocent man in his position, according to the first impulses of a true and loyal heart, would not have suffered a moment to elapse without flying to his place to deny, if false, so grave and foul a charge.

That besides this he has not only failed to appear in his seat during the whole time of the continuance of the present session, now a period of six weeks, to perform his duty to his State and to the Union on an occasion of the greatest possible urgency, when the votes as well as counsel of every true and loyal Senator were eminently needed in providing for the public welfare and in putting down a fierce rebellion threatening the very existence of the Union, but, on the contrary, as the committee are fully satisfied on information derived from reliable official and other sources in Missouri, has left his home in Saint Louis and gone clandestinely within the lines of the enemy now in open, armed rebellion against the United States, whose Constitution he, as Senator, has solemnly sworn to support.

The committee, under this state of facts, are of opinion that justice to the Senate, to rid its roll of his name as well as the Chamber of his presence; justice to the State of Missouri, whose high commission he has dishonored, and justice to the Union which he has sought to betray, all require that he should no longer continue a member of this body.

They therefore respectfully report the resolution for the expulsion of Trusten Polk, a Senator from Missouri, back to the Senate, with the unanimous recommendation that the same do pass.

FRIDAY, January 10, 1862.

On motion by Mr. Ten Eyck, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. Sumner the 18th of December, expelling from the Senate Trusten Polk, a Senator from the State of Missouri; and

On the question to agree to the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That Trusten Polk, of Missouri, now a traitor to the United States, be expelled, and he hereby is expelled, from the Senate,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 36, nays none.

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Anthony, Bright, Browning, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Johnson, King, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Latham, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Simmons, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Thompson, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson.

So the resolution was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

Mr. Trumbull submitted the following motion; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Vice-President be requested to transmit to the governor of the State of Missouri copies of the resolutions expelling Waldo P. Johnson and Trusten Polk from the Senate, attested by the Secretary of the Senate.

[Thirty-seventh Congress—Second session.]

WALDO P. JOHNSON,

Senator from Missouri from March 4, 1861, till January 10, 1862.

December 10, 1861, a resolution was submitted that Mr. Johnson be expelled from the Senate for his sympathy with and participation in the rebellion, conduct incompatible with his duty and station as a Senator. December 12 the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire into the facts. January 9, 1862, the committee reported that previous to his election Mr. Johnson was known, in Missouri, as entertaining secession proclivities; that since his election he was reported to have made a speech evincing a spirit hostile to the Government; that he had not appeared in his seat in the Senate since the session began; that this failure to appear in his place, and his silence under the imputations upon his loyalty, which, from their publicity, could not have escaped his notice if within a loyal portion of the Union, of themselves furnish strong presumptive grounds against his fidelity to the Government. They reported back the resolution with the recommendation that it pass. January 10 it passed by a vote of 35 yeas to no nays. A few remarks, mainly on the question of reference of the resolution, constitute the only debate on the case.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journal, 2d sess. 37th Cong., with the report of the committee from Senate Reports, 2d sess., 37th Cong. No. 5.

The debate is found on pages 70, 71 of the Congressional Globe, part 1, 2d sess. 37th Cong.

TUESDAY, December 10, 1861.

Mr. Foot submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That Waldo P. Johnson, a Senator from the State of Missouri, by his sympathy with and participation in the rebellion against the Government of the United States has been guilty of conduct incompatible with his duty and station as a Senator; and that he be therefor, and hereby is, expelled from the Senate of the United States."

THURSDAY, December 12, 1861.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, submitted by Mr. Foot the 9th instant, to expel Waldo P. Johnson, a Senator from the State of Missouri, from the Senate; and

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire into the facts of the case, it was determined in the affirmative.

THURSDAY, January 9, 1862.

Mr. Trumbull, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution to expel Waldo P. Johnson, a Senator from the State of Missouri, reported the resolution without amendment, and with a recommendation that the resolution do pass.

Mr. Trumbull submitted a report (No. 5) on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Trumbull (chairman), Foster, Ten Eyck, Cowan, Harris, Bayard, and Powell.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JANUARY 9, 1862.—Submitted, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Trumbull made the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution for the expulsion from the Senate of Waldo P. Johnson, a Senator from the State of Missouri, submit the following report:

Previous to his election to the Senate Mr. Johnson was known in Missouri as entertaining secession proclivities, and to sympathize and co-operate with the prominent citizens of that State who are now in open rebellion against the Government. He was elected to the Senate by a legislature which has since sought to array the State against the Union. Since his election he is reported to have made a speech evincing a spirit hostile to the Government, which speech was extensively published in the State of Missouri without public contradiction from him. He has not appeared in his seat in the Senate since the session began; and though the resolution for his expulsion was proposed in the Senate on the 10th day of December, and referred to this committee on the 12th day of December, 1861, and has been extensively published in Missouri and other parts of the Union, the said Johnson has wholly failed to furnish any reason for his absence, or explanation of the charges of disloyalty urged against him.

The failure of said Johnson for so long a period to appear in his place to discharge the high duties incumbent upon him for the preservation of the Republic in this time of rebellion against its authority, and his silence under the imputations upon his loyalty, which, from their publicity, could not have escaped his notice if within a loyal portion of the Union, of themselves furnish strong presumptive grounds against his fidelity to the Government.

His whereabouts at this time the committee have been unable, with actual certainty, to ascertain. They are satisfied that, had he been so disposed, there was nothing to prevent his attendnnce on the Senate at its commencement; and when last heard from he was reported to have gone voluntarily within the lines of rebels in arms against the Government.

Under these circumstances, the committee are of the opinion that he ought to be expelled from the body, and they accordingly report the resolution back to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

FRIDAY, January 10, 1862.

On motion by Mr. Trumbull, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. Foot the 10th of December, expelling from the Senate Waldo P. Johnson, a Senator from the State of Missouri; and

On the question to agree to the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That Waldo P. Johnson, a Senator from the State of Missouri, by his sympathy with, and participation in, the rebellion against the Government of the United States, has been guilty of conduct incompatible with his duty and station as a Senator, and that he be therefor, and hereby is, expelled from the Senate of the United States,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 35, nays none.

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Bright, Browning, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Johnson, King. Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Simmons, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Thomson, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson.

So the resolution was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Trumbull submitted the following motion; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Vice-President be requested to transmit to the governor of the State of Missouri copies of the resolution expelling Waldo P. Johnson and Trusten Polk from the Senate, attested by the Secretary of the Senate.

[Thirty-seventh Congress—Second session.]

JESSE D. BRIGHT,

Senator from Indiana from March 4, 1845, to February 5, 1862.

December 16, 1861, a resolution was submitted that Mr. Bright be expelled from the Senate. The preamble stated that Mr. Bright had written a certain letter (given below) which was believed to be evidence of disloyalty to the United States, and calculated to give aid and comfort to the public enemies. The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. January 13, 1862, the committee reported that in their opinion the facts charged against Mr. Bright were not sufficient to warrant his expulsion and recommended that the resolution do not pass. February 5, 1862, after a long debate the Senate agreed to the resolution by a vote of 32 yeas to 14 nays, and, more than two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative, Mr. Bright was expelled.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals, 2d sess. 37th Cong., with the report of the committee taken from the Congressional Globe.

The debates in the case are found in the Congressional Globe, part 1, 2d sess. 37th Cong., and the Appendix contained in part 4 of the same.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

So the resolution was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative; and it was

BENJAMIN STARK.

May 7, 1862, a resolution was submitted that Benjamin Stark, who had been found disloyal by a committee of the Senate, be expelled. A motion to consider the resolution was determined in the negative, June 6, by vote of 16 yeas to 21 nays. (J. of S., 2d sess. 37th Cong., p. 616.) As the case contains other points relating to the admission of Mr. Stark, it has been thought best to insert it in Part II. Vide supra, p. 188.

[Thirty-seventh Congress—Second session.]

LAZARUS W. POWELL,

Senator from Kentucky from March 4, 1859, till March 3, 1865.

February 20, 1862, a resolution was submitted that Mr. Powell be expelled from the Senate. It was accompanied by a preamble setting forth certain conduct of Mr. Powell, which, it stated, showed that "his purposes, if not his acts, were treasonable." The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. March 12, 1862, the committee reported back the resolution with the recommendation that it do not pass. No report showing the grounds on which the committee proceeded was made. From remarks by the chairman of the committee, given below, it appears that nothing was shown to satisfy the committee that Mr. Powell had done anything to favor the cause of the rebellion; that his opinions differed from the opinions of the speaker, but that no man was to be expelled because he disagreed with others in opinion. March 14 the resolution was not agreed to by a vote of 28 nays to 11 yeas.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals, 2d sess. 37th Cong., and remarks by Mr. Trumbull from Congressional Globe, part 2, 2d sess. 37th Cong., page 1234.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

THURSDAY, February 20, 1862.

Mr. Wilkinson submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

"Whereas Lazarus W. Powell, a Senator from the State of Kentucky, after eleven States had published their ordinances of secession by which to sever themselves from the Government of the United States, had formed a confederation and provisional government, and made war upon the United States, did, on the 20th day of June last, at the city of Henderson, in the State of Kentucky, attend a large Southern State's rights convention, over which he was called to and did preside; and, on taking his seat as president thereof, made a speech, in which he stated the object of said convention, and then appointed a committee, which reported to said convention a long series of resolutions that were unanimously adopted by it. Among those resolutions are the following:

"'2. That the war being now waged by the Federal Administration against the Southern States is in violation of the Constitution and laws, and has already been attended with such stupendous usurpations as to amaze the world and endanger every safeguard of constitutional liberty.

* * * * * * *

"'That the recall of the invading armies and the recognition of the separate independence of the Confederate States is the true policy to restore peace and preserve the relations of fraternal love and amity between the States.

* * * * * * *

"'6. That we heartily approve the refusal of Governor Magoffin to furnish Kentucky troops to subjugate the South; and we cordially indorse his recent proclamation defining the position of Kentucky, in accordance with the sentiment of her people, and forbidding the invasion of Kentucky by Federal or confederate troops.

"'7. That, although Kentucky has determined that her proper position at present is that of strict neutrality between the belligerent sections, yet, if either of them invade her soil against her will, she ought to resent and repel it by necessary force.'

"The pith of Governor Magoffin's proclamation, which that convention so cordially approved, is embodied in this paragraph: 'I hereby notify and warn all other States, separate or united, especially the United and Confederate States, that I solemnly forbid any movement upon Kentucky soil, or occupation of any part or place therein, for any purpose whatever, until authorized by invitation or permission of the legislative and executive authorities. I especially forbid all citizens of Kentucky, whether in the State guard or otherwise, from making any hostile demonstration against any of the aforesaid sovereignties; to be obedient to the orders of lawful authorities; to remain quietly and peaceably at home when off of military duty, and refrain from all words and acts likely to provoke a collision, and so otherwise to conduct themselves that the deplorable calamity of invasion may be averted; but, in the mean time, to make prompt and efficient preparation to assume the paramount and supreme law of self-defense, and strictly of self-defense alone.'

"The closing speech of this convention was made by Senator Powell, and the resolutions passed by it and a summary statement of its proceedings were signed by him as its president.

"On the 10th of September last, whilst the legislature of Kentucky was in session in the town of Frankfort, and after her territory had been invaded at two distant points by the confederate armies, and whilst Humphrey Marshall was employed in organizing and drilling an armed body of rebels in the contiguous county of Owen, a large Southern State's rights convention assembled and held its sessions in Frankfort, for the apparent purpose of overawing the legislature, controlling its deliberations, and deterring it from passing measures to support the Union and the Government of the United States, Lazarus W. Powell was a delegate to that convention from the county of Henderson, and was appointed on its committee of resolutions. Among other resolutions, that committee reported these:

"'Resolved, That every material interest of Kentucky, as well as the highest dictates of patriotism, demand that peace should be maintained within her borders, and this convention solemnly pledges the honor of its members to do all in their power to promote this end.

"'2. That it is the deliberate sense of this convention, and it is believed of an overwhelming majority of the people of Kentucky, that the best and perhaps the only mode of effecting this great object is by adhering strictly, rigidly, and impartially to her chosen and oft-declared position of neutrality during the existence of the deplorable war now raging between the sections; taking sides neither with the Government nor with the seceding States, and declaring her soil must be preserved inviolate from the armed occupation of either.

* * * * * * *

"'9. That we consider it incompatible with the neutrality avowed by Kentucky to vote money for the prosecution of the civil war, or to tax the people of the State, or augment its debt for a purpose so unwise and for a cause so hopeless as the military subjugation of the Confederate States.'

"This was a convention of most intense secessionists, and was attended by John C. Breckinridge and many of the leaders of that party from generally over the State. William Preston and R. W. Wooley, esquires, made speeches to it fraught with the rankest treason, and denouncing the fiercest war against the United States. Its resolutions were unanimously adopted, and its business closed with the following one, offered by Senator Powell:

"'Resolved, That Col. William Preston, George W. Johnson, esq., General Lucius Desha, Capt. Richard Hawes, and Thomas P. Porter, esq., be, and they are hereby, appointed a committee of organization, in order to carry out the purposes of this convention; and full powers are conferred upon them for that object.'

"Those men were thus commissioned in the cause of conspiracy, treason, and rebellion. By the warrant given them, on the motion of Senator Powell, they went forth and organized or advised and assisted in the organization of armed bands of traitors, and soon thereafter led them into the confederate camps, where they are yet struggling to consummate the disruption of the Union and the overthrow of the Constitution and laws of the United States. From the beginning of this great rebellion to the present time Senator Powell has neither done nor said anything in Congress or out of Congress to strengthen or sustain the United States in this mighty struggle for national life. Whilst the true and loyal men of his own State were engaged in an arduous and protracted struggle to bring her to perform her duty to the nation and its government, he not only withheld from them all assistance and sympathy, but gave to the rebels the moral force of his disloyal position and opinions, and all the aid and comfort which he could render them short of the commission of technical treason. His purposes, if not his acts, have been treasonable. Being an ex-governor of the State of Kentucky, and one of her Senators in Congress, his example and counsel have doubtless been potential with her people and of mischievous tendency in other States. Under the false and delusive cry of neutrality and peace, and the absurd purpose to protect the soil of the State against invasion from the military force of the United States, he has doubtless assisted to seduce hundreds and hundreds from loyalty and duty into rebellion and treason. He has not supported the Constitution of the United States, but he has sounded the charge to his recruits, and they have made the overt attack upon it. Wherefore—

"Be it resolved, That the said Lazarus W. Powell be, and he is hereby, expelled from the Senate."

* * * * * * *

Mr. Wilkinson presented papers in relation to the resolution submitted by him this day for the expulsion of the Hon. Lazarus W Powell from the Senate; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FRIDAY, March 7, 1862.

[Remarks on the resolution are found on pages 1112, 1113 of the Congressional Globe, part 2, 2d sess. 37th Cong.]

WEDNESDAY, March 12, 1862.

Mr. Trumbull, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Wilkinson on the 20th of February for the expulsion of the Hon. Lazarus W. Powell from the Senate, reported it without amendment, and with a recommendation that the resolution do not pass.

THUESDAY, March 13, 1862.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution for the expulsion of the Hon. Lazarus W. Powell from the Senate; and

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Powell,

Ordered, That the further consideration of the resolution be postponed to to-morrow at 1 o'clock.

[The debate is found on pages 1208–1216 of the Congressional Globe, part 2, 2d sess 37th Cong.]

FRIDAY, March 14, 1862.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution to expel the Hon. Lazarus W Powell from the Senate; and

After debate,

On the question to agree to the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That the said Lazarus W. Powell be, and he is hereby, expelled from the Senate,"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 11, nays 28.

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Davis, Dixon, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Pomeroy, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilkinson.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Anthony, Browning, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Kennedy, King, Lane of Kansas, Latham, McDougall, Nesmith, Pearce, Rice, Saulsbury, Stark, Thomson, Trumbull, Willey, Wilson of Massachusetts, Wilson of Missouri, and Wright.

So the resolution was not agreed to.

[The debate is found on pages 1230–1234 of the Congressional Globe, part 2, 2d sess. 37th Cong.]

[Remarks of Mr. Trumbull, of Illinois, March 14, 1862.]

"I consider it due to the committee, whose organ I was in reporting adversely to the passage of this resolution, simply to state, not by way of argument, or of provoking reply, the ground upon which the committee reported adversely to the passage of this resolution. It was not because the committee approved of the doctrine of neutrality in Kentucky. In my judgment that was a most mischievous position, and one wholly untenable, either in April, or June, or September; but it is known that the people of Kentucky very generally assumed that ground, and the Government of the United States, if they did not recognize the neutrality of Kentucky, we may at least say paid some respect to it. The resolutions that were adopted, in which they declared that the United States had no right to pass its troops over the soil of Kentucky, were, in my judgment, preposterous. It was downright opposition to the constituted authorities of the Government; wholly unjustifiable. I have no excuse for it. I think it is without excuse. But, sir, such was the position of the great body of the people of that State; and many persons now believe that it was owing to this position of neutrality which was then assumed that Kentucky has at last arrayed herself on the side of the Union. I do not think so; but good Union men doubtless did take that position.

'Well, sir, the time came when, notwithstanding Kentucky had assumed this false attitude, it was necessary that her people should take sides either with the Government or against those arrayed for its protection. Some men who got upon this neutrality platform left it sooner than others; some in June, if you please; some earlier; some stood on it till September; but when the time came that Kentuckians had to meet this thing face to face, go with the Government or against it, fight for one or the other, then, sir, the traitors arrayed themselves, and undertook to get up a provisional government in the State of Kentucky. Breckinridge and the traitors alluded to by the Senator on my right [Mr. Davis] went into the organization; they joined the rebels; the Senator from Kentucky, whose case is under consideration, came here—came to the Government of the United States to discharge his duties here. He does not agree with me in sentiment; his opinions are not my opinions; I do not agree with the views that he has so often announced here; but he is entitled to his own opinions; and no man is to be expelled from this body because he disagrees with others in opinion. Since Kentucky assumed this position and took sides with the Union nothing has been shown to satisfy the committee, at least, that the Senator from Kentucky has had any communication or done anything to favor the cause of the rebellion. I think neutrality did favor it; but, sir, that is now over."

[Thirty-seventh Congress—Second session.]

JAMES F. SIMMONS,

Senator from Rhode Island from March 4, 1841, till March 3, 1847, and from March 4, 1857, till he resigned in August, 1862.

July 2, 1862, near the end of Mr. Simmons's second term in the Senate, a resolution was submitted that he be expelled from the Senate. The preamble stated that it appeared from a report of the Secretary of War that Mr. Simmons had exercised his official influence over certain of the heads of the Departments in procuring an order authorizing a certain person to manufacture rifles in behalf of the Government for the Army and Navy, and that Mr. Simmons had agreed to receive as a compensation for such services the sum of $50,000, and that he had already received two promissory notes amounting to $10,000. July 8 the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary by a vote of 31 yeas to 7 nays. July 14 the committee reported that the facts were substantially as above given, and that they were of opinion that "such a practice is entirely indefensible, and that it was highly improper for a Senator of the United States to have acted thus, even when the Government sustained no loss thereby;" that it was manifest that Congress disapproved of such conduct from the fact that they had promptly passed a law making it a penal offense thereafter; but that to visit a severe penalty upon an act which at the time of its commission was not punishable or forbidden by public law would be retroactive in its effect, and render the step liable to that objection to which all post facto laws are justly subject. The committee unanimously reported back the resolution, accompanied by the statement of facts, that the Senate might take such action as they might think fit. No action was taken. [Congress adjourned within three days after the report was made, and Mr. Simmons had resigned his seat in the Senate before the next session.]

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals, 2d sess. 37th Cong., with the report of the committee from Senate Reports, 2d sess. 37th Cong., No. 39.

The case was not debated.

WEDNESDAY, July 2, 1862.

Mr. Wright submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Whereas, by a report made to the Senate of the United States by the Secretary of War, the Hon. E. M. Stanton, bearing date June 21, 1862, it appears that the Senator from the State of Rhode Island, James F. Simmons, gave and exercised his official influence over certain of the heads of the Departments of our Government in procuring for one C. D. Schubarth an order, dated October 11, 1861, authorizing the said Schubarth, in behalf of the Government, to manufacture, for the use of the Army and Navy, 50,000 breech-loading rifles; and, further, that the said Senator did agree to receive, as a compensation for services rendered in such procurement, the sum of $50,000, and did subsequently accept two several promissory notes from certain parties in New York, 'one payable in August, and one in September next, both amounting to $10,000,' in payment for procuring said order: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the said James F. Simmons be, and is hereby, expelled from the seat he holds in this Senate."

TUESDAY, July 8, 1862.

On motion by Mr. Wright, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by him on the 2d instant for the expulsion of the Hon. James F. Simmons, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, from the Senate; and,

On motion by Mr. Ten Eyck that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 31, nays 7.

On motion by Mr. Wright, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Anthony, Browning, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kennedy, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Rice, Sherman, Stark, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, Willey, Wilmot, Wilson of Massachusetts, and Wilson of Missouri.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Foster, Henderson, King, Nesmith, Powell, Trumbull, and Wright.

So the motion was agreed to, and it was Ordered, That the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MONDAY, July 14, 1862.

Mr. Ten Eyck, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution to expel the Hon. James F. Simmons, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, from the Senate, submitted a report (No. 69); which was ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Trumbull (chairman), Foster, Ten Eyck, Cowan, Harris, Bayard, and Powell.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JULY 14, 1862.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Ten Eyck submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution for the expulsion of James F. Simmons, a Senator of the United States from the State of Rhode Island, have had the same under consideration, and, after full deliberation, make the following report:

That in October, 1861, Senator Simmons being in Washington on his own private business, was called upon by a Mr. Schubarth with a letter of introduction from Messrs. A. D. & J. Y. Smith, a wealthy business firm in Providence, Rhode Island, requesting him to aid Mr. Schubarth in procuring an order from the Government for the manufacture of a breech-loading rifle for the use of the Army and Navy, of which he was the inventor, and stating that if the order was procured they (the Messrs. Smith) were to be concerned in its execution.

Mr. Schubarth was introduced by Senator Simmons to the Secretary of War, General Ripley, of the Ordnance, and Captain Harwood, of the Navy Department. His rifle was tried at the navy-yard, and a favorable report made, but the Government declined ordering his breech-loading rifle, and, preferring the Springfield rifled muskets, gave an order on the 11th of October last for 20,000, at the rate of $20 for each arm, with the appendages.

When called upon by Mr. Schubarth with the letter of the Messrs. Smith, as above stated, Mr. Simmons determined to aid him in procuring the order for the manufacture of the rifle invented by him, by going with him to the Departments, recommending his arm, and soliciting a contract in the same manner as he had done before in other cases, and has since done in behalf of constituents of his without any offer of compensation having been made to him for his aid, and without expecting or dreaming of receiving any. That after he had thus undertaken to assist Mr. Schubarth, either before or after he had introduced him at the Departments, (Mr. Simmons thinks it was after and some time during the stay of Mr. Schubarth in Washington, while going to or returning from the Departments,) Schubarth said he had a letter from the Messrs. Smith authorizing him to pay a commission for obtaining an order, which he offered to Mr. Simmons to be read, but which he declined reading, saying, playfully, "that the Messrs. Smith were rich enough to pay, and that if he got commissions for all he did for his constituents he should be as rich as some of them were;" but it appears that no suggestion was made to Mr. Simmons to pay him a commission or compensate him in any way for any aid he might render until after he had determined to assist the parties in getting the contract; and that nothing further ever passed between Mr. Simmons and the Messrs. Smith on the subject of commissions.

That afterwards, in November, 1861, Mr. Simmons being in Washington, on his way to Hatteras Inlet, for the purpose of consulting the Government about procuring a vessel load of cotton, Mr. Schubarth informed him that he could do nothing with the order he had obtained unless it was made for the same number and as long a time allowed for delivery as other parties had, and requested him to aid in getting such alteration, which he did; and on the 26th of November last an additional order was made for the manufacture of 30,000 more.

In January last, Mr. Schubarth informed Mr. Simmons that the Messrs. Smith declined pursuing the business. And seeing him afterwards in February, in New York, Schubarth told him he had made arrangements with other parties for means to carry out the contract, and that they wanted to have an understanding with him about his commissions. Mr. Simmons states that he saw these parties, and took from them an agreement, in writing, to pay at certain stipulated times (in about a year from May last) the amount agreed upon. The agreement was without qualification or condition, and had no connection with what the Government might subsequently do, only binding themselves to a due execution of the order on their part. Under and in pursuance of this agreement they subsequently gave him one note, payable in August, and one in September next, both amounting to $10.000, which he expected would be paid, as he had no doubt of their responsibility.

Mr. Simmons further states that he never expected Schubarth to pay him a cent for the assistance he rendered him; that he was in moderate circumstances; that the Smiths were rich and that he expected them to pay; and that he should have aided just as soon, and acted as earnestly in endeavoring to procure the orders, without compensation, as he had repeatedly done in other cases for his constituents. Mr. Schubath states, on the contrary, that he considers himself bound to give Senator Simmons 5 per cent. commission on both orders, and he says he made the offer of commissions to Senator Simmons because he had understood that a commission was paid for obtaining contracts, and he thinks it was one of the Messrs. Smith who told him so. It may not be amiss to state that Mr. Simmons, who has appeared before the committee and with great frankness and fairness detailed all the circumstances of the transaction, and answered all questions put to him promptly and without hesitation, also stated that he is now, and was at the time, unconscious of having done anything wrong in acting as he did, and that he was not aware that it was unlawful, there being no law prohibiting it; that he considered he was not only benefiting his constituents, but was also doing the Government a service by procuring for it responsible contractors for the prompt supply of arms, which was then so greatly needed, he having about that time learned in high quarters that although 500,000 men had recently been called to the field, the Government had then only 200,000 stand of arms to put in their hands.

It further appears that Senator Simmons still holds the notes given him for these commissions as agreed upon, and expects to receive payment on them when they fall due.

It also appeared to the committee that both before and after the contract for these arms was made, many other contracts were made for similar arms, between July 1, 1861, and January 1, 1862, and the lowest price paid by the Department for arms of this description was $20, the price agreed to be paid to Mr. Schubarth; that $20 was the lowest bid that was made at the Department for the manufacture of such arms during the periods aforesaid, and that the Government lost nothing in consequence of the offers of Mr. Schubarth to pay Mr. Simmons a commission for his assistance in this particular, after he had voluntarily undertaken to assist in procuring the contract without reward.

The committee on these facts are of opinion that although Senator Simmons may have thought, as he declares, that his act was neither unlawful or wrong (a declaration which his age, respectability, and long, useful, and honorable life, it would seem, should favor, whilst it is true that these very considerations should make a willful departure from the line of correct conduct more glaring and censurable), still, that such a practice is entirely indefensible, and that it was highly improper for a Senator of the United States to have acted thus, even where the Government sustained no loss thereby; but especially at a time when the very existence of the Government and the Union was endangered by a fierce and huge rebellion, to suppress which the patriotism of the country was everywhere engaged—a rebellion which, first by robbery and afterward by occasioning unlimited requisitions for the purchase of supplies and arms, had subjected the public treasury to untold and frightful drains.

That Congress disapproves of such conduct is manifest from the fact that they have promptly passed a law making it a penal offense hereafter; this will prevent all such acts in future; but to visit a severe and striking penalty upon an act which at the time of its commission was not punishable or forbidden by any public law would be retroactive in its effect, and render the step liable to that objection to which all post facto laws are justly subject.

The committee would further state in this connection that it was the common practice until a recent period for members of Congress to prosecute claims against the Government for fees and rewards, and that for many years our most distinguished public men were in the habit of prosecuting claims under such circumstances without censure or criticism; but this was made a misdemeanor by an act of Congress in 1853, and since that period the practice has been discontinued.

The committee unanimously report back the resolution, accompanied by the statement of facts herein contained (about which there appears to be no dispute), in order that the Senate may take such action in the matter as they in their wisdom and discretion may think fit.

[Forty-second Congress—Third session.]

JAMES W. PATTERSON,

Senator from New Hampshire from March 4, 1867, till March 3, 1873.

February 4, 1873, a message was received from the House of Representatives that the House had resolved that there be transmitted to the Senate a copy of evidence reported to the House by a select investigating committee, the preamble to the resolution reciting that the evidence contained matter affecting members of the Senate. The communication was referred to a select committee. February 27, the committee reported, exonerating the other Senators mentioned in the report, and reporting the following resolution in regard to Mr. Patterson: "Resolved, That James W. Patterson be, and he is hereby, expelled from his seat as a member of the Senate." Mr. Patterson's term expired March 3, no action having been taken by the Senate on the resolution. March 26, the Senate resolved that "Observations on the report," &c., submitted by Mr. Patterson, be received, filed, and printed with the report, the preamble reciting that it was manifestly impossible for the Senate to consider the resolution at the session then just passed, and that it was very questionable if it was competent for the Senate to consider the same after Mr. Patterson had ceased to be a member of the body.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from the Senate Journal, 42d Cong., 3d sess. The report of the committee is found in Senate Reports, 42d Cong., 3d sess., No. 519.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

Attest:

EDW. McPHERSON, Clerk.

Whereupon,

On motion by Mr. Patterson, and by unanimous consent,

SATURDAY, February 22, 1873.

Mr. Morrill, of Maine, submitted the following resolution; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That there be paid, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, for expenses of the special committee of the Senate to whom was referred the communication of the House in relation to members of the Senate, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The Senate proceeded to consider the said resolution as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

"Whereas at the last session of the Senate a resolution was reported from the select committee on evidence affecting certain members of the Senate, 'that James W. Patterson be, and he is hereby, expelled from his seat as a member of the Senate'; and

"Whereas it was manifestly impossible to consider this resolution at that session without serious detriment to the public business; and

"Whereas it is very questionable if it be competent for the Senate to consider the same after Mr. Patterson has ceased to be a member of the body: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the failure of the Senate to take the resolution into consideration is not to be interpreted as evidence of the approval or disapproval of the same.

"Resolved, further, That Mr. Patterson have leave to make a statement, which shall be entered upon the Journal of the Senate and published in the Congressional Record."
